VOLUME XLII, PART II.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

A bill (S. 4421) to correct the military record of A. J. Arnold; and

A bill (S. 4422) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Archibald McAlister, jr., captain and quartermaster in the Army (with an accompanying paper).

He also introduced a bill (S. 4423) for the relief of Mary A. Coulson, executrix of Sewell Coulson, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 4424) granting an increase of pension to Timothy Bresnahan, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 4425) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Clark, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PILES introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4426) for the relief of Thomas C. Clark; and

A bill (S. 4427) for the relief of Hastings Steamboat Company.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced a bill (S. 4428) granting an increase of pension to Leonard Davis, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4429) for the relief of the estate of Lee Arnold, deceased; and

A bill (S. 4430) for the relief of the estate of Robert McCoy, deceased.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4431) for the relief of James Finnegan and the heirs of Thomas Nesdall, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment relative to machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments for use in the Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the purchase, manufacture, and test of machine and automatic guns, including their carriages, sights, implements, and equipments, for use in the Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 for the employment of "line riders" along the south and east boundary of the North Cheyenne Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I offer a Senate resolution, and ask that it be printed and lie on the table. I do not ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator if this is the resolution or an amendment of the resolution which has been under consideration for a few days?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is a resolution on the same subject.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it meant to take the place of the resolution the Senate had up yesterday?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is a somewhat different resolution. It is on the same subject, I repeat.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to have the resolution read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection if the Senate wants to hear it all read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How long is the resolution?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is quite lengthy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana ask that the resolution be read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it is a very long resolution I will not insist on it. I am somewhat interested in this matter. Can the Senator indicate in what particular he has again changed his resolution?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator that it is quite interesting, but it would take an hour probably to read it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not going to ask that a resolution which is the second amendment of a resolution within three days, and which it would take an hour to read, shall be read, of course.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to ask if we are expected to pass a resolution which would consume an hour in reading without having it read to the Senate?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Texas does not ask to have it passed. He asks that it may go on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon.

Mr. CULBERSON. No such request as that has been made. I requested that the resolution be printed and lie on the table subject to call.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My only remark, I will state for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, was that I asked the Senator from Texas whether this is a further modification of a resolution which was already once modified yesterday, and being informed that it was, I asked that it be read. But then it developed that the resolution has so grown in its modification that it would require an hour to read it, and, of course, I withdrew the request that an hour of the Senate's time should be taken up in hearing the third form of the Senator's resolution within three days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the resolution submitted by him be printed without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate resolution 81.

Whereas on October 24, 1907, the following bill of complaint was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia:

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY, PLAINTIFF,

v.

JOHN MITCHELL ET ALS., DEFENDANTS.

COPY OF BILL IN EQUITY FILED IN OPEN COURT AT PHILIPPI, OCTOBER 24, 1907.

IN EQUITY.

Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, and citizen of said State, having its principal office at Wheeling, in said State and district, plaintiff,

v.

John Mitchell, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a citizen of the State of Indiana, individually and as president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; T. L. Lewis, of Bridgeport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pa., and a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, individually and as secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as secretary-treasurer of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, defendants.

To the honorable the judges of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia:

Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, and citizen of said State, having its principal office at Wheeling, in said State and district, brings this its bill of complaint against John Mitchell, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a citizen of the State of Indiana, individually and as president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; and T. L. Lewis, of Bridgeport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; and W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pa., and a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, individually and as secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America; and William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; and D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; and George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; and A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as president of subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as vice-president of subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually and as secretary-treasurer of subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, defendants.

And therefore your orator complains and says:

First. Your orator, Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, having its principal office at Wheeling, in Ohio County, in said State; that it is the owner of about 5,000 acres of coal situated contiguous to its coal mine, which is at Benwood; that its coal mine is equipped with the necessary plant for mining coal and has shipping facilities on the main line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and its various shipments by rail originate on that road and at its mine; that your orator has been for some time past and is now engaged in mining coal and shipping the same to the open markets of the United States; that the product of its mine is large, amounting to about 1,400 tons per day, and that it has customers residing in all parts of the United States, and that a large portion of its trade is during the summer and fall months, when coal is carried to the Northwest by steamers upon the lakes while navigation is not interrupted by ice, while another portion of its trade has been for years and now is supplying coal for fuel for engines of the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, delivered by a coaling device to the engines at its tipple and likewise from large storage bins which have been erected and are in use by your orator and by said railroad company, wherefrom to coal their engines, said storage bins being located at the end of a considerable steel structure, trestle, or viaduct located near the roundhouse of said railroad company at Benwood, in the construction of which steel trestle and coal bins your orator has expended and now has invested a large sum of money; that on mining coal the coal as mined is brought to the surface and mouth of the mine and then for interstate commerce is delivered to the common carrier and by it carried to its destination within the United States, but without the State of West Virginia; that your orator has made large contracts for the future delivery of coal to points within and without the State of West Virginia, but within the United States, especially for lake trade; that your orator alone furnishes daily to said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company between 500 and 600 tons engine coal; that the profits and earnings of your orator depend largely upon its mining and producing coal during the summer and fall seasons of the year, and especially is this true of this year as to its said contracts not yet filled, but which it has the ability and, unless unlawfully interfered with by the defendants, expects to fill; that prior to April 1, 1906, your orator operated its said mine by employing a large number of men who were affiliated with said United Mine Workers of America, but on April 1, 1906, a strike having been ordered by said association, the employees of your orator who were working for it at that time continued to work until April 16, 1906, and on that day, under renewed demands of said United Mine Workers of America, went out on a strike and ceased to work for your orator, and said strike so declared is still in force so far as your orator and its mine is concerned; that at the time your orator's said employees went out on said strike they had no grievance, had made no complaint to your orator, and your orator had not failed to comply with its then contracts with its said employees with reference to their work; that said strike was ordered by the said association and your orator's said employees went out on said strike as aforesaid in pursuance thereof for the reason that certain coal operators in other sections of the country had refused to accede to certain demands of said association, and the ordering out of your orator's said employees and their going out on a strike as aforesaid were means amongst others used by said association at that time for the purpose of compelling said coal operators to sign a certain scale of wages which had been prepared and was being insisted upon by said association as the price of its permission being given to its members to remain at work for said coal operators; that at that time your orator, being advised of the controversy between said association and said coal operators, proposed to its said employees that they continue at work for your orator pending the signing of the scale by said coal operators, and that on the signing of the scale your orator would pay its said employees any additional sum that would have been earned by them during the time intervening between April 1, 1906, and the signing of the scale, provided that the scale when signed should provide for an advance in wages on work done on and after said April 1, 1906; that while your orator's said employees were ready and willing to accept your orator's proposition, nevertheless the said employees being members of the United Mine Workers of America were by that association ordered to strike, and after having continued in your orator's employ until April 16, 1906, went out on a strike as aforesaid under the renewed orders of said United Mine Workers of America that they should strike, which going out on strike on April 16, 1906, was without justification and without excuse and greatly to your orator's injury, embarrassment in business, and financial loss, owing to its inability to carry out its contracts which it then had for the sale and delivery of coal and for supplying coal to the engines of said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company at its tipple and bins aforesaid; that your orator's said mine was shut down and was not operated after April 16, 1906, until June 12, 1906, but upon resumption of operation on June 12, 1906, your orator started to run its mine on a nonunion basis, and each and every man who accepted employment at the mine was told at the time of entering your orator's service that there was no union at the mine, that the company would not allow any, and that no union man could remain in the employ of the company while recognizing and giving paramount allegiance to the union and obeying its orders, and if any employee of the company joined the union he could not work any longer for the company; that under those circumstances and with full knowledge of the said conditions of employment many men applied to your orator for work, and being employed entered the employment of your orator under an express contract not to join the United Mine Workers of America and worked in its mine and have continued so to work until the present time with satisfaction to themselves and to your orator, although from time to time since your orator has been operating its said mine on a nonunion basis efforts have been repeatedly made by officers and agents representing the United Mine Workers of America and its subordinate associations or branches to induce your orator to agree to reunionize its mine and to sign the scale of the United Mine Workers of America; that your orator has repeatedly refused to have anything to do with the United Mine Workers of America, or any of its subordinate associations or branches, or with any of its officers, agents, employees, or servants, and has made known to them and to each of them your orator's determination to run its mine nonunion and its purpose not to permit any interference by said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, its officers, agents, employees, and servants, with its operation of its mine or with its business, whereupon said United Mine Workers of America, its subordinate associations or branches, by its officers, agents, employees, and servants, have sought and are now seeking by inducements, threats, and intimidation, but so far without physical violence, to cause the employees of your orator to leave its service and to cause others who have engaged to enter your orator's service to break their engagements of service and not work for your orator, and to prevent others from working for your orator, all with the professed, avowed, and actual purpose, which your orator says is an unlawful purpose, of compelling your orator to recognize the union, to force your orator to employ none but persons who are members of the United Mine Workers of America, to compel your orator to pay such scale of wages as said United Mine Workers of America arbitrarily fix and demand, and to submit your orator's business and its property to the jurisdiction and control of said union, becoming by the union's rules obliged to employ or to discharge whom the said union, its subordinate associations or branches, and its officers, agents, employees, and servants shall direct or require.

Your orator says that the said United Mine Workers of America, including its said subordinate associations or branches, is a secret voluntary organization having certain expressed objects, some lawful and others unlawful, and that it is in the endeavor to carry out its unlawful purposes that the matters and things herein complained of by your orator have arisen.

Your orator says that the said United Mine Workers of America, although not incorporated as aforesaid, was organized on or about January 25, 1890; that from the proceedings of its last annual convention, which was held in Indianapolis, Ind., from January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, it appears that it had a membership of 230,667 in 1906; that its income for the fiscal year ending November 30, 1906, was $1,081,408.32, its expenditures for the same period were $1,232,994.01, and that its balance on hand December 1, 1906, was $337,960.71, and that it is claimed for it that it is the largest labor organization in America.

Indicative of the character and purpose of said United Mine Workers of America and its said subordinate associations or branches, your orator refers to and says that the following are some of the provisions of their respective constitutions:

Excerpts from the constitution of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America.

ARTICLE I.

NAME, OBJECTS, AND JURISDICTION.

SECTION 1. This organization shall be known as the United Mine Workers of America.

SEC. 2. The objects of this union are to unite mine employees that produce or handle coal or coke in or around the mines and ameliorate their condition by methods of conciliation, arbitration, or strikes.

SEC. 3. This organization shall be composed of international, district, subdistrict, and local unions.

SEC. 4. The international union shall have jurisdiction over all districts, subdistricts, and local unions, which shall be governed by this constitution.

ARTICLE II.

OFFICERS AND THEIR DUTIES.

SECTION 1. The officers of the union shall be one president, one vice-president, and one secretary-treasurer and an executive board, to be composed of one member from each district under the jurisdiction of United Mine Workers, each district to elect its member of the international executive board, the president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer to be members of the board by reason of their position.

SEC. 2. The president shall preside at all general conventions of the union. * * *; from time to time appoint such organizers and workers in the international office or in the field as may be required; * * *; decide all questions of dispute concerning the meaning of the constitution; exercise general supervision over its workings, both in the field and in the international offices, as his judgment dictates or the exigencies of the case require * * * and he shall quarterly name the password for the use of the local unions.

SEC. 3. The vice-president shall act as general organizer, and shall be under the direction of the president, and shall succeed that officer in case of death, resignation, or removal from office.

SEC. 5. The executive board shall constitute an international board of conciliation and arbitration; shall execute the orders of the international convention, and between conventions shall have full power to direct the workings of the organization, also to levy and collect assessments when necessary. * * *

SEC. 6. The international executive board shall have power to order a general strike or suspension by a two-thirds vote at any time during the year that they may deem necessary, and each member shall have one vote and one deciding vote for every two thousand members in good standing, or a majority fraction thereof; provided that all district presidents, vice-presidents, and secretaries be called into joint conference for consideration before any joint strike or suspension order be issued.

SEC. 7. The international executive board shall be convened upon the order of the president or by the secretary-treasurer at the request of eleven members of the board.

SEC. 8. The term of all elective officers shall be from April 1st to March 31st of each year.

ARTICLE III.

QUALIFICATIONS AND SALARY OF OFFICERS.

SECTION 1. Any member in good standing in the organization shall be eligible to hold office in the international union, provided he is not a salaried officer of a subdistrict or district at the same time, and provided he has never been found guilty of misappropriating any funds of the organization intrusted to his care, who has been a member of a local union for one year prior to his election.

SEC. 2. The president's salary shall be $3,000.00 per annum and all legitimate expenses; vice-president, $2,500.00 per annum and all legitimate expenses; secretary-treasurer, $2,500.00 and all legitimate expenses. * * *

ARTICLE IV.

REVENUES.

SECTION 1. Every local union shall pay direct to the international secretary-treasurer a per capita tax of twenty-five cents per month per member, and such additional assessments as may be levied. * * *

SEC. 2. The local secretary-treasurer shall fill out and forward to the international and district secretary-treasurer before the 25th of each month, a report of all members in good standing in the local union on the 1st day of that month, together with all taxes and assessments due to the international and district offices from the same.

SEC. 6. No local union shall be exonerated from the payment of per capita tax or assessments unless their members have been idle for one month or more.

SEC. 7. Where a mine is abandoned indefinitely and all the members of the local union at that mine have gone to work elsewhere, the local secretary shall notify the district secretary of the fact and the district secretary shall make application for exoneration for the local union each month to the international secretary-treasurer, until work is resumed at the mines and the local union is again placed in working condition.

SEC. 9. The local monthly dues to be paid by each member shall not be less than 50 cents per month, together with such assessments as may be levied by the different branches of the United Mine Workers of America.

SEC. 10. The initiation fee shall be $10 for practical miners, and for nonpractical men it shall be left to the discretion of the district where applications for membership are made.

ARTICLE V.

CONVENTIONS AND REPRESENTATIONS.

SEC. 2. * * * And the term "miner or mine worker" includes anyone working in or around the mines and a member of a local union.

ARTICLE VII.

CARDS.

SEC. 4. Any member desiring to leave the mine where his local is located and work elsewhere shall immediately make application to the secretary of the local for a transfer card, and, if he has paid all dues and assessments, the president and recording secretary shall issue a transfer card to him, which shall be attested by the financial secretary, providing the local union is in good standing with the international, district, and subdistrict unions, which shall be accepted in any district, and in case such person can not produce a transfer card he shall pay the regular initiation fee. All transfer cards shall be deposited as the laws of the district where work is secured may direct.

SEC. 8. When a transfer card is issued to any member, it must be deposited by him with some local union or with the international secretary-treasurer within three months after the last day of the month in which it was issued to him, else the card will become void, and he can only become a member again by initiation as a new member.

ARTICLE IX.

ORGANIZERS.

SECTION 1. Commissions as organizer shall be signed by the president and attested by the secretary-treasurer.

ARTICLE X.

STRIKES.

SECTION 1. When trouble of a local character arises between members of a local union and their employers, the officers of said local shall endeavor to effect an amicable adjustment, and failing in this they shall immediately notify the officers of the district to which the affected locals are attached, and said district officers shall immediately investigate the case of complaint; and failing to effect a peaceable settlement on a basis that would be fair and just to aggrieved members, finding that a strike would best serve the interests of the locality affected, they may order the inauguration of a strike, but no local strike shall be legalized or supported by a district unless its inauguration was approved by the officers of the district or by the international executive board, upon an appeal taken by the aggrieved members from the decision of the district officers; any local union striking in violation of the above provisions shall not be sustained or recognized by the international officers.

SEC. 3. When any member of the United Mine Workers is suspended or discharged, it shall be the duty of the mine committee to immediately investigate the case, and, if the member discharged is not guilty of an offense justifying the same, the grievance shall immediately be reported to the subdistrict and district president in writing, under the seal of the local, and if, upon investigation, the report of the local committee is found correct, the subdistrict and district president shall immediately insist upon the reinstatement of the suspended or discharged member.

SEC. 4. The international officers shall at any time they deem it to the best interests of mine workers in a district that is idle, for just and sufficient reasons, order a suspension in any other district or districts that would in any way impede the settlement of the district affected, provided that such action would conserve to the best interests of the United Mine Workers of America.

ARTICLE XII.

DISTRICTS.

SECTION 1. Districts shall be formed with such number and territory as may be assigned them by the international officers and shall be subject to the jurisdiction, laws, rules, and usages of the international union.

SEC. 2. Districts may adopt such laws for their government as they may deem necessary, provided they do not conflict with the international union.

ARTICLE XIII.

SUBDISTRICTS.

SECTION 1. Subdistricts may be formed with such number and territory as may be assigned to them by the districts to which they are attached, and shall be subject to the jurisdiction, laws, rules, and usages of the international and district unions.

SEC. 2. Subdistricts may adopt such laws for their government as they may deem necessary, provided they do not conflict with international and district constitutions or agreements entered into.

SEC. 3. All local unions within the territory of subdistricts already organized in any district shall contribute and become a part of the same and comply with its laws before they are entitled to password or representation in either international or district organizations.

ARTICLE XIV.

LOCALS.

SECTION 1. Local unions shall be composed of miners, mine laborers, and other workmen, skilled and unskilled, working in and about the mines, except mine manager, top boss, and persons engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and shall be given such numbers as the international secretary-treasurer shall assign them.

SEC. 2. All locals shall be under the jurisdiction of the international, district, and subdistrict unions, and may make such laws for their government as they deem neccssary, provided they do not conflict with the international, district, and subdistrict constitutions or agreements entered into. Any local union or members thereof violating this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5.

SEC. 4. All local officers and committees shall be elected the last meeting of June in each year by a majority vote of the members present, and shall serve one year or until their successors are elected and qualified.

Your orator says that its mine is located in territory which, under the organization of the United Mine Workers of America, is included within the jurisdiction of Subdistrict 5 of District 6.

Excerpts from constitution of district No. 6, United Mine Workers of America:

ARTICLE I.

NAME AND OBJECTS.

SECTION 1. This organization shall be known as District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers of America.

SEC. 2. One of the objects of this organization is to unite all employees in and around the coal mines of Ohio and the Panhandle district of West Virginia.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. District No. 6 shall be divided into six subdistricts. * * *

ARTICLE III.

OFFICERS AND THEIR DUTIES.

SECTION 1. The officers of this organization shall consist of one president, one vice-president, one secretary-treasurer, and an executive board of nine members, three of whom shall be the president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer. The president and secretary-treasurer shall act as chairman and secretary of the executive board.

SEC. 2. The president shall preside at all conventions of the district organization. * * * He shall act as general organizer for the district. * * *

SEC. 3. The vice-president shall act as general organizer of District No. 6 and shall be under the direction of the president, and shall succeed that officer in case of death or removal, and when directed by the president in writing to settle any grievance or dispute his decision shall be final.

SEC. 7. The members of the executive board being presidents of subdistricts have the right to organize locals in their respective districts.

SEC. 8. That the term of office of president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and members of the executive board shall be from April 1 to March 31 of each year.

ARTICLE VI.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS.

SECTION 1. The salary of president shall be $100 per month, payable semimonthly, * * * with legitimate expenses. * * *

SEC. 2. The vice-president shall be paid $90 per month, on the same condition as the president.

SEC. 3. The secretary-treasurer shall be paid for his services the sum of $100 per month and all office expenditures. * * *

ARTICLE VIII.

GRIEVANCES AND DISPUTES.

SECTION 1. In case of trouble arising in any local with the employer it shall be the duty of the local officers to try to effect a settlement; failing in this, the grievance shall be presented to the subdistrict president in writing, who shall investigate the grievance or dispute and settle, if possible. Should he fail, he shall consult the district president, who shall settle the dispute either by suspending work or such other methods as they may deem best. In case of a direct violation of agreements, the subdistrict president or local union affected are authorized to order a suspension of work.

SEC. 2. When it becomes necessary for a district president to close a mine, or when a mine or mines from some other legitimate cause has been forced to close down, said officers may, if they deem it wise, close every other mine in the district, or may distribute those idle men into any other mine or mines in the district in which said mine or mines so closed may be situated.

ARTICLE IX.

SECTION 1. The initiation fee in District 6 shall be $10, and all persons applying for and securing work in the mines who are not practical mine workers shall pay $10 initiation fee. Any person applying for work at any organized mine shall present a United Mine Workers' card. In case said person can not present such union card he shall pay the regular initiation fee.

SEC. 4. When a member allows himself to be three months in arrears he shall be considered no longer a member of the United Mine Workers of America, and in order to become a member again he must pay uniform initiation fee. * * *

SEC. 8. Each local union must be provided with a seal of the United Mine Workers of America, and no card or communication will be recognized unless the seal of the local be attached.

SEC. 15. Any member of our organization working in or around the mine working on idle days or extra time, in violation of our constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense.

SEC. 16. The local monthly dues to be paid by each member shall not be less than 50 cents per month, together with such assessment as may be levied by the different branches of the United Mine Workers of America.

SEC. 17. That a fine of $10 [be imposed] in each individual case where it can be proven that a member of the union leaves his district for West Virginia or any other unfair mines, and remains there one month or more without having deposited his transfer card and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer card; and the fine to be collected by the local union where he works.

Excerpts from constitution of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America:

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. This organization shall be known as Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

SEC. 2. The object of this organization is to unite the mine employees of Belmont, Jefferson, Tuscarawas, Harrison, and Carroll counties in Ohio, and that part of Stark County south of Canton other than the Massillon seam, and Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, and Marshall counties of West Virginia, to ameliorate their conditions by methods of conciliation, arbitration, or strike.

SEC. 3. All men are eligible and must be members of the United Mine Workers of America who work in and around the mines.

SEC. 4. This organization shall have jurisdiction over all local unions of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The officers of this organization shall consist of a president, a vice-president, a secretary-treasurer, and three members of an executive board, who shall constitute a board of six members. * * *

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. In case of trouble arising in any local with the employer, it shall be the duty of the local officers to try to effect a settlement; failing in this, the grievance shall be presented to the subdistrict president in writing, who shall investigate the grievance or dispute and settle, if possible. Should he fail, he shall consult the district president, who shall settle the dispute either by suspending work or by such other methods as they may deem best. In case of a direct violation of agreements, the subdistrict president or local union affected are authorized to order a suspension of work.

ARTICLE V.

REVENUE AND REPRESENTATION.

SECTION 1. The revenue of this organization shall be derived from local unions under its jurisdiction. They shall pay to the secretary-treasurer the sum of 5 cents per member per month; the same shall be checked off by check weighman, the per capita tax to be forwarded to the secretary-treasurer not later than the 15th of each month for the month preceding.

SEC. 3. The convention shall have power to increase or reduce the per capita tax if they deem it necessary.

ARTICLE VI.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS.

SECTION 1. The salary of president shall be $80 per month and all necessary expenses in the performance of his duties.

SEC. 2. The salary of the vice-president shall be $70 per month, and all necessary expenses in the performance of his duties.

SEC. 3. The salary of the secretary-treasurer shall be $75 per month and all necessary expenses in the performance of his duties.

SEC. 6. The above prices are based on a 90 cent mining rate, and that these prices be increased or decreased the same per cent as the miners.

ARTICLE VII.

NOMINATION AND ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

SEC. 7. All check weighmen employed by members of the United Mine Workers shall be members of the United Mine Workers six months prior to their election, except newly organized locals, and voted for and elected by those who pay to maintain them. Notice of election for check weighman shall be posted in some conspicuous place at the mines where check weighman is to be employed at least three days before the time set for such an election. It shall be the duty of such check weighman to keep a record of all men employed in and around the mine. Under no consideration shall a check weighman be considered an officer of the local union. The term for which a check weighman shall serve shall be left to the discretion of those who employ him. The above will not prevent any local officer from acting as check weighman.

SEC. 8. The term of all officers of Subdistrict 5 of District 6 shall be from April 1 to March 31 of each year.

ARTICLE IX.

SECTION 1. That our initiation fee must conform with the national constitution.

SEC. 2. That a fine of $10 in each case [be imposed] where it can be proven that a member of our union leaves his district for West Virginia or any other unfair mine and remains one month or more without depositing a transfer card and returns without giving a satisfactory account of why he has not deposited his transfer card, and a fine to be collected by the local union where he is working.

SEC. 3. Any member of our organization working in or around the mine, working on idle days or extra time, in violation of our constitution or agreements, shall be fined $2.50 for each offense.

Further indicating some of the purposes of said United Mine Workers of America, your orator refers to and says that the following are some of the provisions contained in the manual of District No. 6 of the United Mine Workers of America and of the manual of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America:

OPENING.

The hour of the meeting having arrived, the president shall take the chair and give one rap with the gavel, upon which all officers and members shall be seated.

If no regular doorkeeper has been appointed, the president shall appoint one of the brothers to see that none but members of the union are admitted.

The oath administered to each member on his admission and initiation is:

"I do solemnly promise, of my own free will, to abide by the laws of this union; to bear true allegiance to and keep inviolate the principles of the United Mine Workers of America; never to discriminate against a fellow-worker on account of creed, color, or nationality; to defend freedom of thought, whether expressed by tongue or pen, to defend on all occasions and to the extent of my ability the members of our organization.

"That I will not reveal to any employer or boss the name of anyone a member of our union. That I will assist all members of our organization to obtain the highest wages possible for their work; that I will not accept a brother's job who is idle for advancing the interests of the union or seeking better remuneration for his labor; and, as the mine workers of the entire country are competitors in the labor world, I promise to cease work at any time I am called upon by the organization to do so. And I further promise to help and assist all brothers in adversity, and to have all mine workers join our union, that we may all be able to enjoy the fruits of our labor; that I will never knowingly wrong a brother or see him wronged if I can prevent it. To all of this I pledge my honor to observe and keep as long as life remains, or until I am absolved by the United Mine Workers of America."

Your orator further says that the paid-up membership of said District 6, United Mine Workers of America, was, in 1906, 36,372, and on March 1, 1907, Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and 108 locals in good standing and paid-up membership of 12,500.

Your orator says that the defendant John Mitchell is president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant T. L. Lewis is vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant W. B. Wilson is secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant William Green is president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant D. H. Sullivan is vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant George W. Savage is secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant A. R. Watkins is president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; that the defendant John Zelenka is vice-president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine workers of America; that the defendant Lee Rankin is secretary-treasurer of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and that the defendant Thomas Hughes is an organizer of the United Mine Workers of America; and that each and all of the said defendants John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin, and Thomas Hughes, have agreed confederated, combined, and formed themselves into a conspiracy, under the name of the United Mine Workers of America, to unlawfully persuade, entice, and procure your orator's miners or mine workers, employed by your orator and working for your orator in or around your orator's mine, to break, violate, and disregard their several contracts with your orator, all with the avowed purpose of compelling your orator to unionize its plant without your orator's consent, and to such end have unlawfully and maliciously agreed, confederated, combined, and formed themselves into a conspiracy to compel, by threats and intimidation and by other unlawful means, your orator's said employees to join the union and to apply to their own relation with your orator, in the matter of their employment, the rules of the union, and to enable said union to apply its rules and regulations to your orator under penalty of closing down your orator's mine, provided your orator still refuses to unionize its plant and recognize the union.

Your orator says that it has no contractual relation whatever with any one of the defendants hereto, and that each of said defendants is fully aware that your orator is operating a nonunion mine and will not consent to operate a union mine; that its employees are nonunion; that said employees are required by your orator, at the time of entering service, to agree not to become connected with the union while employed by your orator, and that if they do join the union their employment with your orator shall cease; that with such understanding your orator's employees enter into its employment, and that they are now working for your orator under such contract and with such conditions, all of which is known to these defendants, and to each of them, as aforesaid.

Your orator further says that the said John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, Lee Rankin, and Thomas Hughes, individually, and as officers, agents, employees, and servants, as aforesaid, of said United Mine Workers of America and of its said subordinate associations or branches, are fully aware that your orator's said employees are satisfied with their employment; that your orator is engaged in mining coal and in fulfilling contracts for coal; that it would be impossible to fulfill those contracts without the labor of its said employees, and that it would entail upon your orator great financial loss to have its ability to fulfill its contracts interfered with by the failure of its men to work longer for your orator, and likewise would entail great loss and damage to your orator to have its mine shut down and to have a strike declared; yet your orator says that the said defendants have unlawfully and maliciously agreed together, confederated, combined, and formed themselves into a conspiracy, the purpose of which they are proceeding to carry out and are now about to finally accomplish, namely, to cause your orator's mine to be shut down, its plant to remain idle, its contracts to be broken and unfulfilled until such time as your orator shall submit to the demand of the union; that it shall unionize its plant, and having submitted to such demand unionize its plant by employing only union men who shall become subject to the orders of the union, paramount to the orders of your orator, their employer, and until in thus unionizing its plant your orator shall surrender its control and the management of its business to the union and become subject to and acquiesce in the enforcement by the union of the various rules and regulations laid down by the union, and accede in advance to every demand the said union by its said officers, agents, employees, and servants may take.

Your orator says the effectuating of this purpose is imminent and the damage threatened is great and irremediable, and that your orator's loss so far has been in excess of $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, while on the accomplishment of said purpose of said defendants and the shutting down of your orator's mine the damage to your orator would be still greater and incapable of definite ascertainment, being incalculable, but amounting to many thousands of dollars.

Your orator further says that it pays as much as the union scale of wages to its said employees, and that the said defendants in thus unlawfully and maliciously agreeing together, confederating, combining, and conspiring to effectuate by unlawful means the unionizing of your orator's mine are simply seeking power for the purpose of strengthening the union in future contests with employers of labor, to compel all miners and mine workers to join the union, establish a monopoly, and force employers of that kind of labor, and especially to force your orator to yield to the union's demands or else to give up its business.

Your orator says that the union is not a competitor of your orator in the labor market; that the union does not employ labor and is not an employer of labor.

Your orator says that at the annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held at Indianapolis, Ind., January 15 to January 22, inclusive, 1907, the said defendants, John Mitchell, T. L. Lewis, W. B. Wilson, William Green, D. H. Sullivan, George W. Savage, A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, and Lee Rankin, were present and participated in its proceedings, during which it was openly stated with reference to the objects of the union: "Organized labor contends that as industry can not exist without labor, labor has the right to say under what conditions it shall be employed, thereby dictating the management of the productive end of the business."

Your orator says that at the same convention the defendant, T. L. Lewis, stated that he had charge of the organizing force under the direction of the president; that there has been a tremendous loss in the membership of the union as a result of the strike of April 1, 1906; that he had been instrumental in building up three national organizations of mine workers, and was one of the delegates and had attended the convention which laid the foundation of the United Mine Workers of America; that the union had "closed shop" wage agreements with operators whereunder 181,384 persons were employed in the year 1905, and that all of those men were required to be members of the union; that the American continent is not large enough to maintain two organizations of miners, and that he favored one organization of the mine workers of the American continent and a complete recognition of the union's right to organize in every mining district in the country.

Said defendant, W. B. Wilson, at said convention read his report as secretary-treasurer, in which he said: That resultant from the strike of April 1, 1906, the union had had a large number of men on strike and a comparatively small amount of money in the treasury, and that the union had been unable to contribute sufficient money to the various districts to enable the payment of very large strike benefits; that this created dissatisfaction and that the question was frequently asked, "What has become of our money?" that he had been in charge of the finances of the organization, and that there was paid for aid to strikers in the years 1900 to 1906, inclusive, $5,191,554.77, and that to this amount the cost of organizing was to be added.

Your orator says that at said convention a committee's report was unanimously adopted, which contained the following: "Your committee recommend that this convention heartily approve of the board's action in withdrawing a part of our organizing force from active service, as a result of a depleted treasury, but we further recommend that the force be increased whenever, in the discretion of the board, our funds would warrant."

Your orator says that at said convention said defendant T. L. Lewis in making an address in speaking of organizing West Virginia and the unorganized sections of Pennsylvania, said: "We will organize them by a strike movement;" while another delegate in his address at the same convention at the same time said: "I agree with President Green and Vice-President Lewis that you never can get those men organized except at the end of a general strike, but I warn you not to go into it until you are thoroughly prepared;" and in addressing the convention at the same time in the same discussion another delegate in recommending and explaining organization said, speaking of the union's method: "If we are able at a colliery to force all the men to become members of the union, we do so. If we are too weak, we do not attempt it, but keep gradually working among the men until we are able to accomplish our end;" while John Mitchell in addressing the convention as president said: "I believe it is possible, indeed I believe it is probable, that in the not distant future we will be able to inaugurate a movement in West Virginia and the other unorganized fields that will involve them in a strike, and then we will expect you to furnish the sinews of war, as you have done in the past, to keep these men in idleness." And again: "If one year hence it is my judgment that a suspension of mining throughout the United States would be best, I will favor that policy."

Your orator says that at a convention of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, held at Wheeling, March 14–19, 1907, the said defendants, A. R. Watkins, Lee Rankin, T. L. Lewis, John Zelenka, and Thomas Hughes, were present and participated in the proceedings.

Said defendant, A. R. Watkins, in his report, which he submitted to the convention as president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, said: "The general strike in our subdistrict last year was characterized by a great deal of bitter feeling by a few operators trying to operate their mines on a nonunion basis. The attempt of those operators to operate their mines was defeated by the splendid loyalty of our members in standing shoulder to shoulder in that bitter struggle. You and those who stood so loyally to the organization deserve great credit for your conduct under the trying conditions that existed in some sections of the district during the strike." * * *

"At our last annual convention it was unanimously decided that the eastern Ohio scale should apply to the West Virginia Panhandle counties. The operators of those counties refused to meet us in joint convention to sign a general scale. Some of the operators even refused to sign a contract, and this resulted in several local strikes, all of which were settled except the one now on at Elm Grove, where the men are on strike and are standing firm. It is with regret that some of the locals in the Panhandle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed.

"I am of the opinion that there are many good, active union men in the Panhandle counties, and if we all work together we can organize every mine worker in that section and establish scale rates," and expressed his wish that "Time may enable us by active work to make the United Mine Workers the most glorious and powerful of all trades unions."

The defendant, Lee Rankin, in his report to that convention as secretary-treasurer of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, said, in speaking of the strike declared April 1, 1906: "After several attempts to reach an agreement with the operators of Subdistrict 5, our members were compelled to strike, and that strike developed into the most bitter struggle that has taken place since the formation of our subdistrict.

"The failure of the district organization to provide each striking member with benefits to the amount of $3 per week caused considerable friction, and this was taken advantage of by the enemies of the organization. What for a time seemed to be a division in our ranks encouraged certain operators with the hope that they could crush our organization. In this hope they were doomed to disappointment, as later developments fully demonstrated.

"When the district organization found that they could not comply with the constitution in the payment of strike benefits, a system of paying relief in orders was established. This policy was condemned and denounced by a few men, who did not stop to consider why the system was established.

"After a great deal of work on the part of your representatives, the reason for adopting such a policy was made clear to the members, who then took renewed courage and showed a determination to win in the struggle that then existed.

"With all the obstacles that we had to overcome last year, we have reason to feel proud that Subdistrict 5 came out of the strike with such credit to itself and the principles of unionism that it represents.

"To the fidelity, unity, and activity of the mine workers of this subdistrict is due the credit for winning in the struggle of last year. If any mistakes were made in that contest, let us profit by the experience of the past and be that much better prepared for the future," and again said: "We have one mine at Bellaire, Ohio, and five mines in the Panhandle district which I believe should be organized. I believe those mines can be organized, and in my opinion this convention should adopt some plan to organize those mines."

Your orator says that the five mines referred to in the statement above made by said defendant, Lee Rankin, are Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, Glendale Coal Company, Elm Grove Coal Company, Richland Coal Company, and Beech Bottom Coal Company.

Adopting that suggestion of the defendant, Lee Rankin, the following resolution was then adopted by the convention:

"RESOLUTION No. 8.

"Whereas there are miners in the Panhandle district and Ohio that are not organized, and believing every mine should be organized, be it

"Resolved by this ninth annual convention, That the subdistrict officers, together with the district officers, be authorized to take up the work of organizing every mine in the subdistrict as quickly as it can be done," and

Your orator says that at said convention last mentioned a resolution was also adopted as follows:

"RESOLUTION No. 10.

"Whereas there is a growing tendency among some operators in eastern Ohio to violate contract provisions, and having more than one mine, leave the mine idle rather than comply with the agreements or settle disputes.

"Whereas we believe 'an injury to one is the concern of all,' and believing that disputes should be settled promptly,

"Resolved, That we, the delegates of this ninth annual convention, authorize the officers to close all mines of one company when such company fails to comply with contracts or settle disputes."

Your orator says that in the foregoing quotation of the language of the defendant, T. L. Lewis, reading: "It is with regret that some of the locals in the Panhandle broke away and the members went to work without any union or without getting a scale signed," the said defendant, T. L. Lewis, referred to the locals of the United Mine Workers of America which existed at the mine of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company and at the mine of the Glendale Coal Company at the time the said strike was declared, April 1, 1906.

Your orator says that the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company and the Glendale Coal Company are owned by the same persons; that the same persons are members of the board of directors of each corporation, and that W. H. Koch is a stockholder, a director, and general manager of each of said mines, while the business of the Glendale Coal Company is managed from the office of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company.

Your orator says that the said defendants and each of them treated the two mines as a single concern, and have so dealt with your orator, and your orator in filing this bill refers to and makes a part of it, so far as the same may be properly done, a similar bill, coincidently prepared and filed in this court, seeking the same redress against said defendants and each of them on behalf of the Glendale Coal Company as your orator in this proceeding seeks on its own behalf and makes such reference and use of all supporting exhibits and affidavits.

Your orator says that in refusing to recognize the union after the declaration of said strike April 1, 1906, and after its men had left your orator's employment, pursuant to said strike, and in thereafter and now running its mine nonunion your orator did not seek to reduce the wages of its said employees nor cause its said employees to work for less than the scale of wages established by said United Mine Workers of America, nor does your orator now seek nor contemplate any reduction in the wages of its present employees. Your orator's sole purpose in running nonunion and in now insisting upon its right to do so, unhampered by and without interruption from said defendants, acting individually and as representative of the said United Mine Workers of America, was and is to escape from the intolerable oppression and vicious intermeddling of the said defendants.

Your orator says that these same defendants have for some years last past been in business such as it is herein shown they are now engaged in; that they are well acquainted, one with the other, and that they constitute a part of certain upper officials of the United Mine Workers, in whose hands the management of the affairs of said union have been centralized.

Your orator says that while your orator's mine remained idle after the shut down April 16, 1906, efforts were frequently made by some one or more of said defendants to induce your orator to sign the scale and run union, but every request of that kind met with a refusal. After your orator started up nonunion about June 12, 1906, as aforesaid, efforts were repeatedly made by one or more of the defendants to induce your orator to unionize its mine, and failing in that, efforts were made by some one or more of said defendants to bring about, by inducement, persuasion, threats, and intimidation, and by various means and devices unlawfully to induce your orator's employees to cease working for your orator, and by use of like means, devices, intimidation, threats, persuasion, and inducements to prevent men willing to work for your orator not to engage to work, or if having engaged to work, then not to go to work for your orator; but despite their efforts your orator was able to increase the number of its employees and to increase its business, which it conducted successfully and peacefully and lawfully from that time until the present.

Your orator says that upon different occasions since starting up nonunion, as aforesaid, the different officials of the United Mine Workers of America, amongst them the defendants, John Zelenka, A. R. Watkins, D. H. Sullivan, and William Green, visited the general manager of your orator at his office at the Hitchman mine and talked to him on the subject of the recognition of the union, the signing of the scale, and a reemployment of your orator's employees, under the technical guise of thus entering into contract relations with your orator's employees as members of the United Mine Workers of America, and for the purpose of doing away with the express provision of your orator's contract with each of its employees that they should not become members of the union, and if they did that their employment should thereby cease, and proposed to your orator that it recognize the union, sign the scale, and so reemploy its men. Your orator refused each and all of these propositions.

Your orator says that about July 1, 1907, the defendants, William Green, John Zelenka, and A. R. Watkins, came to the office of your orator's general manager and had a conversation with him regarding the forming of a miners' union, or rather the putting of your orator's employees under the jurisdiction of the United Mine Workers of America, and while your orator on that occasion, through its general manager, distinctly stated that the proposition of said defendants would not be considered at all, still said Zelenka subsequently reported to your orator's employees, and caused that report to be spread amongst them, that he, Zelenka, Green, and Watkins had had a conference with your orator's general manager and that said general manager had agreed to allow the United Mine Workers of America to put all of your orator's employees into the union, and made the further statement, which he caused to be circulated amongst your orator's employees, that it was up to the employees of your orator to join the union, or else that they would be out of a job at an early day, because only union men would be permitted to work at the mine and that those of your orator's employees who did not join the union would not be permitted to get a job any place else. Your orator says that its general manager shortly after this occurrence complained of the action mentioned and that said Zelenka, Green, and Watkins each denied making any such statement or circulating any such report. Yet your orator says its statement in this respect is true and that in the action referred to and complained of to said defendants said defendants were simply carrying out their unlawful purpose heretofore formed, as aforesaid, to unionize your orator's mine without its consent, there being involved in the said unionizing the doing of the many unlawful acts and for the many unlawful purposes herein stated.

Your orator says that its employees are nonunion men who have entered into employment with your orator with the understanding that your orator shall continue to run a nonunion mine; that some of your orator's employees, employed under such condition and with such understanding, have bought property and homes and expect to have permanent employment with your orator, so running its mine nonunion, and with the understanding and expectation on their part that while in the employ of your orator they shall be protected in such employment.

Your orator says that some time during the middle of this summer of 1907 the defendants, Green, Watkins, and Zelenka, called on your orator's general manager at his office, and said Green was spokesman. He said he would like to talk organization. Your orator's general manager stated to them then that, while unionizing of the mine was out of the question, yet if they had any business proposition to submit it would be listened to. Green urged that under your orator's present arrangement or contract with its employees the men felt at liberty to do as they pleased and did not feel any restraint, while if your orator would make a contract with him as president of the United Mine Workers (he is president of District 6, United Mine Workers of America) he could hold the men in check, see that all agreements incorporated in the scale were fulfilled and carried out to the letter, and, generally, that he would see that the men lived up to their contract. To this your orator's general manager replied that from personal experience in the past in dealing with the union he had found the facts in reality to be just the opposite from the way Green put it, and that if that was all Green had to offer, there was nothing worth considering. Green then requested your orator's general manager to think the matter over, and said he would see him again about it within a couple of weeks. Several weeks after this said Green, Watkins, and Zelenka met your orator's general manager while the latter was at the McLure House, in Wheeling, and the latter then told Green that he could see nothing in the union's proposition that would interest him in any manner. Green then asked said general manager if he would not put the proposition up to your orator's board of directors. This he did, and your orator's board unanimously refused to have anything whatever to do with the United Mine Workers of America. Shortly after that said defendant, Green, telephoned your orator's general manager, asked if he had submitted the union's proposition to your orator's directors, and was told that the proposition had been submitted and that the directors refused absolutely to consider the matter in any manner whatever.

Your orator says that in the dealings that antedated the declaration of the strike of April 1, 1906, your orator's general manager talked with the defendant, D. H. Sullivan, and also with the defendant, William Green, and told them both that in case they brought your orator's men out on strike they would be taking away from them something they would never be able to give back—that is, reemployment with your orator. Yet despite this warning, the union ordered the strike. Your orator's same official made the same statement to the defendant, Watkins, at about the same time and before April 1, 1906. And these statements have been by your orator's general manager called to the attention of these same men during the repeated conferences they have had on the subject of reunionizing the mine since the declaration of the strike aforesaid.

Your orator says that under the rules of said United Mine Workers of America, enforced against your orator and its employees, while your orator ran its mine union, certain moneys being wages earned by your orator's employees, then members of the union, were withheld by your orator from their pay and paid over, with the consent of the employees, to the secretary-treasurer of the local union at your orator's mine; and at your orator's mine there was paid over by your orator to the secretary-treasurer of the local union during the two years ending April 1, 1906, a total of $9,155.88. A very much less amount was paid over by the Glendale Coal Company, inasmuch as the owners of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company had become owners of the Glendale Coal Company only a few months prior to said strike, April 1, 1906.

On one or more of the occasions heretofore referred to, when some one or more of said defendants besought your orator to unionize its mine your orator's general manager stated to said defendant that with them as officers of the union it was not so much a question of looking after the interests of the men employed by your orator as it was a question of money, and that they, these defendants, were in the business for what they could get out of it, and their attention was called to the fact that nearly $10,000 had been turned over to them from the Hitchman mine alone in the two years just prior to the strike.

Yet your orator says that, although it has refused to permit it, still the said defendants, further proceeding to carry out their conspiracy, are now endeavoring to unionize your orator's mine, and threaten, and your orator has reasonable ground to fear that they will, and so alleges, close down your orator's mine and keep it closed until your orator will agree to sign the scale and employ none but union labor.

Your orator says that on or about September 7, 1907, the defendant Thomas Hughes was noticed about the Glendale mine and about the Hitchman mine, intercepting the miners, taking lists of names of employees, and trying to induce the men, by persuasion, threats, coercion, and intimidation, and by various other unlawful methods and devices, to quit working for your orator and to join the union, and such efforts said Hughes is keeping up at each mine, although he has been ordered off of the premises of each mine and has been directed to stay off and to let your orator's employees alone.

Your orator says that as a result of the labors of the defendant Hughes, who has been assisted by others of the defendants from time to time, by their counsel and advice aiding and abetting him, with their presence, about your orator's mine and about the Glendale mine, the said defendants succeeded in getting twenty-four of the employees of the Glendale to agree to join the union and to quit the service of the Glendale Coal Company. And your orator says that while the said defendants have so far been unable to bring about or induce your orator's employees to quit its service, still the said Hughes has recently stated to one of your orator's miners, whom he was trying to induce to leave your orator's service and join the union, that he (Hughes) had succeeded in having 125 men at the Hitchman mine sign their names agreeing to become members of the United Mine Workers of America, and that just as soon as he got 25 more names he was going to shut the Hitchman mine down; and in this connection your orator says that 54 of your orator's present employees have in writing signed a statement that they are satisfied with their employment with your orator, with the wages paid to them, and with their work, and that they would like to remain in your orator's employ. Your orator employs from 175 to 200 men at its mines as a general rule, and now has in its employ 160 to 175 men.

Your orator says that the said United Mine Workers of America, the said International Union, United Mine Workers of America, the said District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and the said Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, voluntary associations as aforesaid, are, under their constitutions, violating the common and statutory law of the State of West Virginia, as well as the constitution of said State, especially in this, to wit, in the provisions of section 1, section 3, and section 4 of Article X, constitution International Union, United Mine Workers of America, and in the provisions of section 1 and section 2 of Article VIII and section 15 of Article IX, constitution District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and in the provisions of section 2 and section 3 of Article I, section 1 of Article IV, section 6 of Article VI, and sections 2 and 3 of Article IX, constitution Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and as well in the said oath which is administered to each member of the United Mine Workers of America on his initiation.

Your orator files herewith as part hereof the constitution of the International Union, United Mine Workers of America, the constitution of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, the constitution of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, the proceedings of the eighteenth annual convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Indianapolis, Ind., January 15 to 22, 1907, and the proceedings of the ninth annual convention of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, held at Wheeling, W. Va., March 14–19, 1907, to the extent only that they show the constitutional provisions hereinbefore quoted, the members' oath and the statements made during said several conventions particularly pointed out and alleged herein, as well as the said resolutions No. 8 and No. 10 of the said convention of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, held at Wheeling, March 14–19, 1907, as aforesaid; but asks to be permitted to withdraw the said constitutions and the said proceedings of said conventions, upon filing with the clerk of this court copies of such portions of said constitutions and of said conventions' proceedings as are made part hereof, certified to be such copies by such clerk.

Your orator says that the said John Mitchell, the said T. L. Lewis, the said W. B. Wilson, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated; the said William Green, the said D. H. Sullivan, the said George W. Savage, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated; the said A. R. Watkins, the said John Zelenka, and the said Lee Rankin, acting in their several official capacities hereinbefore stated, are representatives of the said United Mine Workers of America, the said International Union, United Mine Workers of America, the said District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and the said Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, respectively; and that the said Thomas Hughes is acting as an organizer of said United Mine Workers of America, all voluntary associations; that the principal office of said United Mine Workers of America and of said International Union, United Mine Workers of America, is at Indianapolis, Ind.; the office of said District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, is at Columbus, Ohio; and that said Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, has no office, business being transacted at the places of residence of the said A. R. Watkins, John Zelenka, and Lee Rankin, president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer, respectively, all residing within the State of Ohio as aforesaid; that the jurisdiction of this court is invoked on the ground that your orator is a resident of the northern district of West Virginia and a citizen of said State, and that each of the said defendants is a resident of a different State, to wit, no defendant is a resident of the State of West Virginia, and that the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $2,000.

Your orator says that while membership of the said United Mine Workers of America of the said District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America, and of said Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, is large, as hereinbefore stated, yet the names and addresses of the said members of the said several associations are to your orator unknown; that if any of them should happen to be residents of the State of West Virginia they are not necessary parties hereto, are not interfering with your orator in the matters herein complained of, and that they can not be joined without ousting the jurisdiction of this court as to the other parties, the said defendants hereto, of whose actings and doings, purposed and proposed acts and doings, your orator herein complains as hereinbefore set forth.

Your orator further says that unless enjoined by this court the said defendants, acting individually and agreeing, confederating, combining, and forming themselves into a conspiracy under the name of the United Mine Workers of America as aforesaid, will, in pursuance of their unlawful purposes and designs, by enticement, persuasion, or coercion, in one form or the other, bring about the shutting down of your orator's mine and the ultimate destruction of its business, and will without the consent and against the will of your orator compel your orator to recognize said defendants and said associations in the further transaction of its legitimate business in mining and shipping coal, and will compel your orator to contract with its employees through the said defendants as officers of the said associations under such rules and regulations made and enforced by said associations and by said defendant officers as will enable the union to dictate the persons whom your orator shall employ and those whom your orator shall discharge, the wages your orator shall pay, and further will compel your orator to agree that each of its future employees as members of the said United Mine Workers of America shall owe and yield to said union an allegiance which shall in all things be paramount to that which said employees would owe to your orator, and that they will thus take charge of, dictate the management of, and virtually control your orator's business, and thereby perpetrate acts of oppression and wrong upon your orator which distinctly violate your orator's contractual, common law, statutory, and constitutional rights as a citizen of the State of West Virginia.

Your orator further says that in effecting their said object of unionizing your orator's mine the said defendants propose and threaten to, and your orator being so informed and believing it to be true, alleges on such information and belief that said defendants will and are about to indulge in all of the many methods of accomplishing their result by the use of threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, picketing your orator's premises, picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to your orator's premises and going to the homes or boarding houses of your orator's employees for the purpose of intimidating or coercing them to leave your orator's employment and to picket railroad and street cars passing to and from or through your orator's premises for the purpose of intercepting your orator's employees in going to or from your orator's premises and for the purpose of intercepting and preventing persons coming to your orator's premises for the purpose of seeking or for the purpose of entering into your orator's employment.

To the end, therefore, that your orator may have that relief which it can only obtain in a court of equity, and that the said defendants may each answer the premises, but not upon oath or affirmation, an answer under oath being hereby expressly waived by your orator, your orator now prays the court that the said John Mitchell, the said T. L. Lewis, and the said W. B. Wilson, each, individually, and as president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the said United Mine Workers of America and of the said International Union United Mine Workers of America; the said William Green, the said D. H. Sullivan, and the said George W. Savage, each, individually, and as president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the said District

No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; the said A. R. Watkins, the said John Zelenka, and the said Lee Rankin, each, individually, and as president, vice-president, and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the said Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and the said Thomas Hughes, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with employees of your orator for the purpose of unionizing your orator's mine, without your orator's consent, by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of your orator's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of your orator, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or in entering the employment of your orator, assigning, representing, or causing to be represented in express or implied terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of your orator not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because your orator runs a non-union mine;

That the said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with employees of your orator for the purpose of unionizing your orator's mine, without your orator's consent, and in aid of such purpose knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service known to them at the time to exist, which your orator now has with its employees, and from knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with your orator and be known to them while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and willfully enticing your orator's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave your orator's service, giving or assigning, directly or indirectly, as a reason for any such act so brought about, or enticement and leaving of your orator's service, that your orator does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or that your orator runs a nonunion mine, or that the interest of the United Mine Workers of America requires that your orator shall not be permitted to run a nonunion mine, or that the interest of the union will be best promoted thereby; that the said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of your orator so as knowingly and willfully to bring about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service, known to them at the time to exist, which your orator now has with its employees, and from knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by your orator's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with your orator, and be known to them, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and willfully enticing your orator's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave your orator's service, without your orator's consent, against your orator's will, and to your orator's injury;

That the said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, may be by this court ordered and commanded to desist and refrain from in any manner interfering with, hindering, or obstructing any of the business of your orator, or its agents, servants, or employees, in the discharge of their duties as such, at and about your orator's mine or elsewhere by trespassing on or entering upon the grounds and premises of your orator, or within its mine, for the purpose of interfering therewith, or hindering or obstructing its business in any manner whatsoever, or with the purpose of compelling or inducing, by threats, force, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any of the employees of your orator to refuse or fail to perform their duties as such employees; also from compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any of the employees of your orator to leave its service or fail or refuse to perform their duties as such employees, or to compel or attempt to compel, by threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language, any person desiring to seek employment in or about your orator's mine and works from so accepting employment therein; also from entering upon or establishing a picket or pickets of men on or patrolling railroad or street cars passing through or adjacent to your orator's property for the purpose of inducing or compelling, by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, any employee of your orator to fail or refuse to perform his duties as such, or for the purpose of interviewing or talking to any person or persons on said railroad or street cars coming to your orator's mine to accept employment with your orator, for the purpose and with the intention of inducing or compelling them, by threats, violence, intimidation, violent or abusive language, persuasion, or in any other manner whatsoever, to refuse or fail to accept service with your orator; also from compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language, any employee of your orator to refuse or fail to perform his duties as such employee, and from compelling or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any such employee to leave the service of your orator, and, by like methods, to prevent or attempt to prevent any person desiring to accept employment with your orator in or about its mine or works or elsewhere, from doing so by threats, violence, force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language;

Also, from interfering in any manner whatsoever, either by threats, violence, intimidation, persuasion, or entreaty, with any person in the employ of your orator who has contracted with and is in the actual service of your orator to entice or induce him to quit the service of your orator or to fail or refuse to perform his duties under his contract of employment, and from ordering, aiding, directing, assisting, or abetting in any manner whatsoever any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid; that the said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, may be by this court forbidden and restrained from congregating at or near the premises of your orator, and from picketing or patrolling said premises for the purpose of intimidating your orator's employees or coercing them by threats, intimidation, violence, abusive or violent language, or preventing them, in the manner aforesaid, from rendering their service to your orator, and, in like manner, from inducing or coercing them to leave the employment of your orator, and from in any manner so interfering with your orator in carrying on its business in its usual and ordinary way, and from interfering by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, any person or persons who may be employed or seeking employment by your orator in the operation of your orator's mine and works; and that the said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, may be by this court restrained and forbidden, either singly or in combination with others, from collecting in and about the approaches to your orator's mine and works, for the purpose of picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to the property of your orator for the purpose of intimidating, threatening, or coercing any of the employees of your orator from work in its said mine or works, or any persons seeking employment therein from entering into such employment, and from so interfering with said employees in going to and from their daily work in and about the mine and works of your orator; and that said defendants and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, may be by this court enjoined and restrained from going, either singly or collectively, to the homes or boarding houses of your orator's employees, or any of them, for the purpose of intimidating or coercing any or all of them to leave the employment of your orator; and that your orator may have such further or other relief in the premises as the nature of the circumstances of the case may require.

May it please your honors to grant to your orator a writ of subpœna to be directed to the said John Mitchell, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a citizen of the State of Indiana, individually, and as president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; T. L. Lewis, of Bridgeport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pa., and a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, thereby commanding them and each of them, individually, and in their respective official capacities, at a certain time and under a certain penalty therein to be limited, personally to appear before this honorable court and then and there full, true, direct, and perfect answer make to all and singular the premises, and to stand, perform, and abide by such order, direction, and decree as may be made against them and each of them, individually, and in their said official capacities, in the premises, as shall seem meet and agreeable to equity.

And your orator will every pray.

[CORPORATE SEAL.] HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY,
By E. T. HITCHMAN, its President.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, County of Ohio, ss:

Personally appeared before the undersigned, a notary public within and for Ohio County, W. Va., E. T. Hitchman, who, being first duly sworn, says that he is president of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, the complainant corporation; that he has read the foregoing bill of complaint and knows the contents thereof; that as to such matters and things therein as are alleged on information and belief, affiant believes them to be true, and the other matters and things therein stated are true in substance and in fact.

E. T. HITCHMAN.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 23d day of October, A. D. 1907.

[Notarial seal.] HERMAN A. HUNDT,
Notary Public of, in, and for Ohio County, W. Va.

And whereas afterwards, on said 24th day of October, 1907, the following restraining order was entered in said cause on said bill of complaint, to wit:

RESTRAINING ORDER.

At a circuit court of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia, continued and held in Philippi, in said district, on the 24th day of October, 1907, the following order was made and entered of record, to wit:

IN EQUITY.

Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, and citizen of said State, having its principal office at Wheeling, in said State and district, plaintiff,

v.

John Mitchell, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a citizen of the State of Indiana, individually, and as president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; T. L. Lewis, of Bridgport, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; W. B. Wilson, of Blossburg, Pa., and a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America and of the International Union United Mine Workers of America; William Green, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; D. H. Sullivan, of Coshocton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; George W. Savage, of Columbus, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of District No. 6, United Mine Workers of America; A. R. Watkins, of Yorkville, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; John Zelenka, of Warrenton, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as vice-president of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America; Lee Rankin, of Dillonvale, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, individually, and as secretary-treasurer of Subdistrict 5 of District 6, United Mine Workers of America, and Thomas Hughes, of Shadyside, Ohio, and a citizen of the State of Ohio, defendants.

On this 24th day of October, 1907, Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of West Virginia, and citizen of said State, having its principal office at Wheeling, in said State and district, the plaintiff in the above-entitled suit in equity, by George R. E. Gilchrist, its counsel, presented to the court its bill of complaint, duly verified by the affidavit of E. T. Hitchman, president of said Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, and alleging in effect, among other things, that the said defendants are conspiring together to unionize plaintiff's coal mine without plaintiff's consent and against plaintiff's will, and in so doing and in trying to effectuate said unlawful object the said defendants are about to cause a large number of plaintiff's employees to cease working for plaintiff, contrary to the terms of their employment by the plaintiff and in violation of their contract of service with plaintiff; are resorting to the usual experiments of compelling or inducing, by threats, force, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion, plaintiff's employees to leave its service, also contrary to the terms of their employment by plaintiff and in violation of their contractual obligations with plaintiff, and threaten to close down plaintiff's mine and not permit plaintiff to operate its mine until such time as plaintiff shall agree to unionize its mine and employ none but union labor who are members of the United Mine Workers of America; and also alleging in effect that unless this court shall grant an immediate restraining order preventing said defendants, and each and every one of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, from doing the said things complained of in said bill of complaint and purposed as set forth therein, and especially the enforced shutting down of plaintiff's mine and enforced idleness, unless and until plaintiff shall accede to the demands of said defendants, unionize its mine, and employ only union labor, members of said United Mine Workers of America, irreparable injury and damage will be suffered by plaintiff; and said plaintiff thereupon presented and filed with its said bill, in support thereof, the affidavits of W. H. Koch, E. C. Pickett, James Stewart, Clyde Rowland, J. M. Hart, Robert Myers, S. A. Rowland, E. C. Pickett, Wes Corns, E. C. Pickett, William Daugherty, John Hull, J. W. Logston, C. G. Davis, J. C. McKinley, C. G. Davis and J. C. McKinley.

And the court also considered with said bill of complaint the bill of complaint in equity for injunction presented to this court by the Glendale Coal Company against the same persons defendants in a similar suit and the affidavits of W. H. Koch, C. G. Davis, E. C. Pickett, C. G. Davis, E. C. Pickett, William Daugherty, Mike Freeman, Frank Slocum, C. G. Davis, Paul Leonard, and J. C. McKinley, presented to the court with said bill of said Glendale Coal Company in support thereof; and the court also considered with said bill of complaint the bill of complaint in equity for injunction presented to this court by the Richland Coal Company against the same persons defendants, together with A. J. Bauer, an additional defendant, and the affidavits of J. C. McKinley, Paul Leonard, and J. C. McKinley, presented to the court with said bill of complaint of said Richland Coal Company, in support thereof, the said bills of complaint and supporting affidavits of the said Glendale Coal Company and of the said Richland Coal Company being presented to the court simultaneously with the presentation to the court of said plaintiff's bill.

Upon consideration whereof, the said first-named bill of complaint is ordered to be filed and process is ordered to be issued thereon, and it appearing to the court that a temporary restraining order should be allowed as prayed for in said bill of complaint, it is therefore adjudged, ordered, and decreed by the court that said defendants, and each and every of them, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, be restrained and strictly enjoined from interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of the plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent, by representing or causing to be represented in express or implied terms, to any of plaintiff's employees, or to any person who might become an employee of plaintiff, that such person will suffer or is likely to suffer some loss or trouble in continuing in or entering the employment of plaintiff, assigning, representing, or causing to be represented in express or implied terms to such employee or employees that such loss or trouble will or may come by reason of plaintiff not recognizing the United Mine Workers of America, or because plaintiff runs a nonunion mine.

From interfering and from combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with employees of plaintiff for the purpose of unionizing plaintiff's mine, without plaintiff's consent, and in aid of such purpose knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking of plaintiff's employees of contracts of service known to them to exist, which plaintiff now has with its employees, and from knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into with plaintiff and be known to them while the relationship of such employer and employee, as to such employee so brought back to break his contract, exists, and especially from knowingly and willfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave plaintiff's service, giving or assigning directly or indirectly as a reason for any such act so brought about, or enticement or leaving of plaintiff's service, that plaintiff does not recognize the United Mine Workers of America, or that plaintiff runs a nonunion mine, or that the interests of the United Mine Workers of America requires that plaintiff should not be permitted to run a nonunion mine, or that the interests of the union will be best promoted thereby.

From interfering or combining, conspiring, or attempting to interfere with the employees of plaintiff so as knowingly and willfully to bring about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service, known by them at the time to exist, which plaintiff now has with its employees and from knowingly and willfully bringing about in any manner the breaking by plaintiff's employees of contracts of service which may hereafter be entered into by persons with plaintiff, and to be known to them, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so brought to break his contract exists, and especially from knowingly and willfully enticing plaintiff's employees, present or future, knowing of such relationship, while the relationship of employer and employee, as to such employee so enticed, exists, to leave plaintiff's service, without plaintiff's consent, against plaintiff's will, and to plaintiff's injury.

From interfering with, hindering, or obstructing any of the business of plaintiff, or its agents, servants, or employees in the discharge of their duties as such at and about plaintiff's mine, or elsewhere, by trespassing on or entering upon the grounds and premises of plaintiff, or within its mine, for the purpose of interfering therewith, or hindering or obstructing its business in any manner whatsoever, or with the purpose of compelling or inducing, by threats, force, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, or persuasion any of the employees of plaintiff to refuse or fail to perform their duties as such employees.

From compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce by threats, intimidation, force or violence, or abuse or violent language, any of the employees of plaintiff to leave its service or fail or refuse to perform their duties as such employees, or to compel or attempt to compel by threats, intimidation, force, violent or abusive language any person desiring to seek employment in or about plaintiff's mine and works from so accepting employment therein.

From entering upon or establishing a picket or pickets of men on or patrolling railroad or street cars passing through or adjacent to the plaintiff's property for the purpose of inducing or compelling, by threats, intimidation, violence, or abusive language, or persuasion, any employee of plaintiff to fail or refuse to perform his duties as such, or for the purpose of interviewing or talking to any person or persons on said railroad or street cars coming to plaintiff's mine to accept employment with plaintiff, for the purpose and with the intention of inducing or compelling them, by threats, violence, intimidation, violent or abusive language, persuasion, or in any other manner whatsoever, to refuse or fail to accept service with plaintiff.

From compelling or inducing or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, force, intimidation, or violent or abusive language, any employee of plaintiff to refuse or fail to perform his duties as such employee, and from compelling or attempting to compel or induce, by threats, intimidation, force, or violence, or abusive or violent language, any such employee to leave the service of plaintiff, and, by like method, to prevent or attempt to prevent any person desiring to accept employment with plaintiff in or about its mine or works or elsewhere, from doing so by threats, violence, intimidation, or violent or abusive language.

From interfering in any manner whatsoever, either by threats, violence, intimidation, persuasion, or entreaty, with any person in the employ of plaintiff who has contracted with and is in the actual service of plaintiff to entice or induce them to quit the service of plaintiff or to fail or refuse to perform his duties under his contract of employment, and from ordering, aiding, directing, assisting, or abetting in any manner whatsoever any person or persons to commit any or either of the acts aforesaid.

From congregating at or near the premises of plaintiff, and from picketing or patrolling said premises for the purpose of intimidating plaintiff's employees or coercing them by threats, intimidation, violence, abusive or violent language, or preventing them, in the manner aforesaid, from rendering their service to plaintiff, and, in like manner, from inducing or coercing them to leave the employment of plaintiff, and from in any manner so interfering with the plaintiff in carrying on its business in its usual and ordinary way, and from interfering by threats, intimidation, violence, violent or abusive language, any person or persons who may be employed or seeking employment by plaintiff in the operation of plaintiff's mine and works.

From, either singly or in combination with others, collecting in and about the approaches to plaintiff's mine and works, for the purpose of picketing or patrolling or guarding the streets and approaches to the property of plaintiff for the purpose of intimidating, threatening, or coercing any of plaintiff's employees from work in its said mine or works, or any person seeking employment therein, from entering into such employment, or from so interfering with said employees in going to and from their daily work in and about the mine and works of plaintiff.

And from, either singly or collectively, going to the homes or buildings, houses of plaintiff's employees, or any of them, for the purpose of intimidating or coercing any or all of them to leave plaintiff's employment.

The motion for an injunction in this said suit is set down for hearing in the United States court room at Parkersburg on the 14th day of January, 1907, at 10 o'clock a. m.

This restraining order is not to take effect until said plaintiff, or some responsible person for it, shall enter into a bond in the penalty of $2,000; with surety therein satisfactory to the clerk of this court conditioned that said plaintiff shall pay all such costs and damages as are sustained by the defendants, or any of them, by reason of this restraining order should it be hereafter dissolved.

Service of a copy of this order on the defendants, their committees, agents, servants, confederates, and associates, or any of them, shall be deemed and held sufficient notice of this order.

I, S. R. Harrison, clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of an order entered of record in said court at Philippi, on the 24th day of October, 1907, in the equity cause of Hitchman Coal and Coke Company against John Mitchell et al. therein pending.

Given under my hand and seal of said court at Clarksburg, this 26th day of November, 1907.

(Signed) S. R. HARRISON, Clerk.

Be it, therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, directed to speedily investigate and inquire into all of the circumstances connected with the issuance of a restraining order in the case of Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, plaintiff, against John Mitchell and other defendants in the United States circuit court for the northern district of West Virginia, on October 24, 1907, and said committee is directed to report to the Senate whether any additional legislation is necessary for the protection of the rights and privileges of workingmen; and if so, to report such legislation without delay. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, said committee or subcommittee is hereby authorized to sit at such times and places as may suit its convenience, to administer oaths and affirmations, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ stenographers to report its hearings, and to have them printed, such hearings to be submitted by said committee to the Senate, and all necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. The request was that the resolution be printed and lie on the table subject to call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that 500 additional copies of the resolution be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. LODGE. That motion is not in order, I think, until 1 o'clock.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is simply for the information of the Senate, and it will conduce to the orderly business of the Senate to-day to let it be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist on the regular order?

Mr. LODGE. Perhaps I misunderstand the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves that 500 additional copies of the resolution submitted by him this morning be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I think we had better wait until we see what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well, Mr. President.

EFFICIENCY OF THE MILITIA.

On motion of Mr. DICK, it was Ordered, That 3,000 additional copies of the bill (S. 4316) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, be reprinted, 1,500 for the use of the National Guard and 1,500 for the use of the Senate document room.

IMMIGRATION STATION AT PHILADELPHIA, PA.

On motion of Mr. PENROSE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7694) to provide for the purchase of ground for and the erection of a public building for an immigration station, on a site to be selected for said station, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13102. An act to authorize the County of Elmore, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Coosa River, Alabama, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to inquire, ascertain, and report to the Senate whether the moneys of the United States deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in depositaries have been distributed, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections as required by law, and if not, then to report, by bill or otherwise, what additional legislation is necessary to compel such equitable distribution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators kindly to refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator rises to the resolution just read?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read again. There was so much noise I could not hear what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks that the resolution be again read.

Mr. HALE. Yes; before the Senator from Missouri goes on, I want to know what is in the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the resolution is disposed of I desire to submit an observation or two regarding the subject-matter covered by it.

On the 4th day of March, 1907, an act was passed amending section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. I desire to read the section as amended:

"SEC. 5153. All national banking associations, designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security, by the deposit of the United States bonds and otherwise, for the safekeeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government: Provided, That the Secretary shall, on or before the first of January of each year, make a public statement of the securities required during that year for such deposits. And every association so designated as receiver or depositary of the public money shall take and receive at par all the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, or for loans or stocks: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections."

I call particular attention to the last proviso:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections."

When the currency bill, of which the section I have read was made a part, was under consideration in February of last year there was considerable discussion in the Senate of its provisions; and the proviso to which I have directed especial attention was discussed to a considerable extent and with more or less emphasis by different Senators. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and others, including the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], all participated in that rather interesting debate, out of which eventuated the law to which I have called attention.

How has that statutory direction been observed and obeyed by the Treasury Department? What attention has been given to it and how have its provisions been carried out by the Administration? It is in answer to these questions that I desire to speak. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some facts, and particularly to call the attention of the members of the Committee on Finance to some facts which I have collated from official documents of recent date. I hold in my hand two reports issued by the Comptroller of the Currency, the two latest of his reports, upon the matters to which they relate.

The first is entitled: "Abstract of Reports of Condition of National Banks, No. 55, Treasury Department, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Washington, D. C., September 17, 1907.

"Abstract of Reports of Condition of National Banks in the United States on November 12, 1906, January 26, March 22, May 20, and August 22, 1907."

The other document is of exactly the same import, except that it is continued down to December 3, 1907. It is from these documents that I have gathered the data which it is my purpose to lay before the Senate and particularly to lay before the members of the Committee on Finance for their consideration.

Mr. President, it will be observed as I proceed that I have selected for purposes of comparison the two latest dates mentioned in these reports, August 22, 1907, and December 3, 1907.

On August 22, 1907, there was deposited in the national bank depositaries the sum of $143,282,393.15 of public money; on December 3 the amount of deposits had grown to $223,117,082.61, making an increase in about 3½ months of $79,834,689.46, or approximately 55 per cent. This does not embrace, but is exclusive of, deposits made by disbursing officers; it embraces only deposits of Treasury funds made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

This enormous sum of money, as we know, is deposited in these national banks without interest, and is loaned in turn by the banks to their customers.

How are these moneys distributed as between the different States and sections of the Union? The statute I have read requires the Secretary of the Treasury to distribute them equitably as far as practicable. How have they been distributed, as shown by these reports? Let us look at it first from the standpoint of sections. The Comptroller in his report has divided the States into several sections, one embracing the New England States, another the Eastern States, another the Southern States, another the Middle Western States, another the Western States, another the Pacific States, and another the Island possessions. As between these sections the distribution, as shown by the deposits on August 22 and December 3, 1907, was as follows:

The New England States, August 22, had $8,577,417.53 of these deposits; on December 3 that section had $12,633,707.12, an increase in three and one-half months of $4,056,289.59, or approximately 47 per cent.

The Eastern States on August 22 had $58,002,750.82; on December 3, $112,811,046.60, an increase of $54,808,295.78, or an approximate increase of 94 per cent.

The Southern States on August 22 had $21,990,251.15; on December 3 they had $29,541,940.96, an increase of $7,551,689.81, or approximately 34 per cent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What was the percentage of increase in the Southern States which the Senator from Missouri stated?

Mr. STONE. There was an increase in those States of about 34 per cent.

The Middle Western States, which division or section as made by the Comptroller embraces the State from which the Senator from Indiana comes as well as my own State, on August 22 had $32,933,852.79; on December 3 they had $44,135,- 001.01, or an increase of $11,201,148.22, or approximately 34 per cent.

The Western States, lying west of Missouri toward the Rocky Mountains, on August 22 had $8,325,282.20; on December 3 they had $9,285,014.53, an increase of $959,732.33, or approximately 11 per cent.

The Pacific States on August 22 had $13,180,823.89, which had been increased on December 3 to $14,437,360.95, or a total increase of $1,256,537.06, or approximately 9 per cent.

The insular possessions on August 22 had $272,014.77, which had been increased on December 3 to $273,011.44, an increase of $996.67, or approximately one-third of 1 per cent.

Mr. President, these figures show what is to my mind a startling disparity in the deposit of these public moneys as between the sections of the Union, and an utter failure on the part of the Treasury officials to observe the requirements of the law which I have read, a law which was adopted by Congress after full debate for a just and definite purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri a question for information. I am profoundly interested in what the Senator is saying, and I repeat, I ask the question for information. The Senator has evidently given very careful and studious attention to this question, and I have not, and that is the reason I ask the question.

The law requires an equitable distribution of these funds. The Senator from Missouri has read figures showing a discrepancy in the percentages assigned to the various sections of the country. Now, would the Senator construe the word "equitable" to mean that there should be an equal division according to the sections, or might it not be true that "equitable" would also include the volume of business done in each of the sections, or the needs of the hour, or the extent of the balances of the sections? Would the Senator have us to infer—and he knows I am merely asking for information—that an "equitable distribution" means that there should be an equal geographical distribution, or might not the elements of business activity or of wealth come in?

Mr. STONE. The inquiry of the Senator from Indiana is pertinent and proper, but, if he will pardon me, I would rather answer him a little later on, for the reason that I intend then to take up that phase of the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. It would break into the line of my remarks to take up that question now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I only wanted, as the Senator used the word "equitable," to state that it raised a question in my mind which I should be glad to have the Senator elucidate, which I am sure he is quite able to do.

Mr. STONE. I shall have something to say about that presently.

Mr. President, continuing in the line of my statement, I want now to call attention to a disparity as between certain cities of the East and West—the Middle West—and to make some comparisons. Of Eastern cities I have taken Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and Baltimore. Here is what the report shows with reference to the deposits made in those cities:

In Boston on August 22 there was deposited $2,539,523.81; on December 3 there was deposited $6,079,644.83, an increase in actual amount of $3,540,121.02, or approximately 139 per cent.

New York City on August 22 had $28,253,386.58, which had increased on December 3 to $75,829,742.66, or a total increase of $47,576,356.08, being an approximate increase of 168 per cent.

Philadelphia on August 22 had $4,736,477.12; on December 3 it had $6,577,586.72, an increase of $1,841,109.60, or approximately 38 per cent.

Pittsburg on August 22 had $2,921,570.79; on December 3, $5,142,309, or $2,220,738.21 of actual increase, equal approximately to 76 per cent.

Baltimore on August 22 had $3,890,722.84; on December 3, $5,187,547.54, an increase of $1,287,814.70, or an increase of approximately 33 per cent.

In these five cities combined on August 22 there was deposited $42,350,681.14; on December 3, $98,816,830.75, or an increase of $56,466,149.61, being an increase of approximately 133⅓ per cent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is just a little more than the increase of the New York deposits—nearly $9,000,000 more.

Mr. STONE. I have it here in detail.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question as to those figures?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to know whether it is true, or not, that New York is the central banking city through which most of the other cities named transact their business? Is not New York the central banking city for all those cities? That is one question.

The other question to which I wish to call the Senator's attention is, Has he a table of the comparative clearances of the banks of these various cities, showing what the volume of business is in each city? Those two questions I think pertinent to the matter which the Senator is discussing.

Mr. STONE. I have not at hand a table of the volume of clearances, but the question of the Senator is very much along the line of the question he propounded earlier.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But it is a question of fact—I do not know; but the Senator does—whether New York is not the central banking point for all these cities, and indeed for others?

Mr. STONE. Well, the Senator from Indiana knows as much about that as I do. I think it goes by general consent that New York is in a large sense the financial center of the country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course the Senator knows—I do not—whether or not that would furnish a prima facie reason, at least, why New York deposits should be increased in a different proportion from the cities to which he has called attention. That is the only point to my question.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Indiana is interposing, with my permission of course, some suggestions in the way of argument that I think would come better a little later on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, if the Senator prefers, I will ask him to answer these questions a little later on.

Mr. STONE. Undoubtedly New York is the largest financial center in the country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. But notwithstanding that fact, I think these figures, when I am through with them, will convince even the Senator from Indiana that a very gross discrimination has been made in favor of New York as against the cities and States of the Middle West and of the South.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I have not studied this question, while he has; but I wish to submit for his consideration the facts to which I have called his attention.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I want to give the figures for some of the cities of the great Middle West, that comparison may be made as between them and the five Eastern cities to which I have called attention.

I take Cincinnati, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Louis, and Kansas City. I am giving these figures somewhat in detail because I want them to go into the RECORD. To read them may be a little tedious, nevertheless I will do so.

On August 22, Cincinnati had $1,886,906.35; on December 3, $3,763,301.45, an increase of $1,876,395.10, or approximately 99 per cent.

Cleveland on August 22 had $573,331.95; on December 3 $1,465,100.37, or an increase of $891,768.42, or about 155 per cent.

Indianapolis on August 22 had $1,443,808.71; December 3 $1,566,358.69, an increase of $122,549.98, or 8.4 per cent. I think Indianapolis was entitled to better treatment.

Chicago on August 22 had $2,813,559.75; on December 3 $6,406,550.38, an increase of $3,592,990.63, or about 127 per cent.

Minneapolis and St. Paul together—I read them together—had on August 22 $1,084,729.73; on December 3 $2,360,644.68, an increase of $1,275,914.95, or 117 per cent.

St. Louis on August 22 had $1,993,808.52; on December 3 $2,348,835.33, an increase of $355,026.81, or 17 per cent.

Kansas City on August 22 had $638,559.15; on December 3 $647,538.87, or an increase of $8,979.72, or 1.4 per cent.

These eight cities of the great Middle West on August 22 had all told and combined only $10,434,704.16; and on December 3 they had $18,558,329.77, an increase during the three and a half months of $8,123,625.61, or approximately 79 per cent.

Mr. President, the percentage of increase is not so striking by comparison as is the actual sum of the difference. The actual sums show best the disparity of amounts. For instance, the five Eastern cities increased in three and a half months from $42,350,681.14 to $98,816,830.75, or a total increase in amount of $56,466,149.61, while the eight Middle Western cities, on August 22 had only $10,434,704.16, which was increased during the same period to only $18,558,329.77, or a total increase of only $8,123,625.61. The increase in the five Eastern cities was nearly seven times as great as that of the eight Western cities.

Now, Mr. President, let me make a still more specific comparison. Take the city of Boston, not New York, which the Senator from Indiana regards, and properly so, as the largest financial center of the country. Take not New York, but Boston, and compare it with Chicago. Boston with less than one-third the population of Chicago, gets practically as much of the public funds put into its national banks as was deposited in the banks of Chicago, the deposits on December 3 being in Boston $6,079,644.83 as against $6,406,550.38 in Chicago. The difference in favor of Chicago is only $326,905.55.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is a very, very striking discrepancy; and I am wondering whether the Senator in getting this data inquired as to why so comparatively little was given to a great industrial and financial center like Chicago, and so much to a city of lesser consequence in the extent of its industries and trade as Boston. Did the Senator get any explanation?

Mr. STONE. I have not addressed any inquiry to the Treasury Department on that subject.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course they must have had a reason.

Mr. STONE. I have here on my desk part of a speech made by the Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Treat, in South Carolina, a few days ago, in which he undertakes to give some explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if Boston is not the center of a greater population and of greater business interests than is Chicago to-day. Is not that the reason why the same amount of money was deposited at Boston as was deposited at Chicago, and not because of favoritism, or based on the population of the two cities?

Mr. STONE. The Senator asks if Boston is not a greater center of population and business than Chicago.

Mr. SMOOT. From a banking standpoint.

Mr. STONE. I should say not, clearly not, although I have not at hand the clearings of the banks of Boston or Chicago.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just what I was going to ask the Senator, whether he had taken that into consideration.

Mr. STONE. I am not taking anything into consideration at present. All I am doing at this moment is to lay these figures before the Senate for its consideration. I have not come to any discussion of the question, but I do want to lay this information, in this condensed and tabulated form, before the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not understand the Senator from Missouri to state the question of the Senator from Utah as I understood the latter Senator. He did not say that Boston was a larger center with respect to population or anything of that kind, but he asked the Senator from Missouri whether it is not a fact that it is a larger banking center; that is, whether it does not have tributary to it a larger banking population which it serves than Chicago has which it serves.

Mr. STONE. I do not believe it has a larger banking constituency than Chicago. I should be astounded if that should prove to be true.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Before the Senator from Arkansas interrupts me I will ask the Senator from Utah if he is prepared to answer his own question?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not here the figures of the clearings, but I have always understood that tributary to Boston there were greater banking interests and population than were tributary to Chicago.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. May I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that an answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Utah may be found in the fact that the capitalization of the national banks of Boston is $26,050,000, whereas in Chicago it is $27,400,000. It seems from the official record that Chicago is a greater financial center than is Boston.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the city alone. My question went to this point, whether there were not tributary to Boston——

Mr. STONE. What is tributary to Boston?

Mr. SMOOT. Tributary to Boston in a banking sense means the men and corporations who do their business at Boston and do it with Boston banks.

Mr. STONE. That is true of Chicago or any other point.

Mr. SMOOT. From Worcester, and all over the New England States.

Mr. STONE. Boston and New York are not very far apart.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not call Boston tributary to New York, any more than I would call a town near Chicago, doing its banking business with Chicago, tributary to St. Louis.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not true——

Mr. STONE. The Senator will pardon me. The Senators who are evidently seeking among other things to break somewhat the force of these startling figures can do so in their own way. I have no objection to the interruptions, they will understand, but I can not undertake to speculate upon the reasons which induced the Secretary of the Treasury to make these discriminations.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must acquit me of any desire to break the force of his figures. Of course I take the figures to be worthless unless there is some meaning attached to them, which is the point to my question. The Senator said in the beginning that my questions were very proper. With reference to the point the Senator from Utah was making, is it not a fact that Boston is the financial capital of all New England? I take it that is what the Senator from Utah means. Boston is the financial capital of all New England.

Mr. STONE. Suppose that to be true?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Before the Senator proceeds will he allow me to make another suggestion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STONE. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will be seen from this report of the Comptroller, dated December 3, 1907, that the individual deposits in national banks in Boston were $130,632,576.08, while the deposits in the national banks in Chicago on the same day were $131,946,741.30, being greater in Chicago than in Boston.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator say that the individual deposits in the banks——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of all Senators interested in this discussion to the importance of addressing the Chair before they proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I propound the inquiry whether the mere fact of individual deposits would indicate the comparative consequence of cities as banking centers.

Mr. STONE. It would be surprising to me if it were true that in any point of view, whether in population, in the extent of industries, in the volume of business, in the capitalization of banks, in the deposits in banks, or in any of those things that go to make up a great industrial and financial center, Boston exceeded Chicago. I do not believe it is a fact.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, it is a fact that Boston is the financial capital of New England.

Mr. STONE. Oh, that may be; I do not know, but suppose it is.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says, rather inconsequentially, that he does not know. But still it is rather important.

Mr. STONE. Perhaps. I can not answer any more than the Senator can——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In connection with the last remark made by the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STONE. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I submit, in connection with the inquiry made by the Senator from Indiana, the further statement from the report of the Comptroller, which shows that on December 3, 1907, the loans and discounts of national banks in Boston were $169,054,267.74, whereas on the same day the loans and discounts of national banks in Chicago were $220,157,671.08 some fifty million dollars in excess in favor of Chicago in the matter of loans and discounts.

Mr. STONE. Did I understand the Senator from Indiana to say that that seemed to be convincing?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know what the Senator did understand of the conversation which was going on, as it sometimes does, between the Senator from Arkansas and myself. I say openly yes; that it seems to be rather a striking set of figures. I do not know what their interpretation is. It is not for me to interpret, because I am not learned on this subject. I have not investigated it as the Senator has. It is for me to inquire. We want to know. We want to learn. The Senator is handling this question. The Senator knows, or should know, the answers to the questions he raises.

Mr. STONE. I can not answer any more than the Senator from Indiana can the question whether Boston is the great headquarters for all the money transactions and business transactions of New England.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that Boston, by his own figures, had an increase of deposits of 58 per cent, while Chicago, a Western city, and complaint being made that it had not been treated fairly in this matter, had an increase of—I forget just the figures. What did Chicago show?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the percentage?

Mr. STONE. Chicago?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. STONE. The increase of Chicago is 127 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. While the increase in Chicago was 127 per cent, as against 58 per cent in Boston.

Mr. STONE. Now if the Senator will put down the figures of Boston, $2,539,523.81 in August and $6,079,644.83 in December, he will get the increase there.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator from Missouri made an error in stating it was only 58 per cent.

Mr. STONE. I may have made some error in my statement, but you can get it exactly by calculating the per cent on the actual figures given.

Mr. SMOOT. But even with the figures as now given by the Senator from Missouri, the percentage as to cities will be about the same as stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Seventy per cent greater in the case of Chicago than in the case of Boston.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. STONE. No, the per cent of increase is greater at Boston. The per cent at Boston is approximately 139 as against 127 at Chicago. But I stated to the Senate that when comparison is made on the basis of per cent it would not be so striking as when made on the basis of actual amounts deposited.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. As to this very point I should like to say that in the five eastern States there were $56,000,000 deposited during that time—August 22 to December 3—and in the Middle West there was deposited $8,123,000; that is, only seven times as much in the five eastern States as in the western States. The Senator——

Mr. STONE. Are you speaking of Boston or of New England?

Mr. SMOOT. I am speaking of all of them as a whole, as you gave the figures. In the eastern States, including New York and all, there were deposited $56,000,000 during that time. That was the increase.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The middle Western States, you stated, had only eight million dollars increase; or, in other words, in round numbers about seven times more in the East than the West. The volume of business done in the eastern States, I believe, is a great deal more than seven times the volume of business done in the Middle Western States.

Mr. STONE. The Senator can hold to that belief if he desires. I am not prepared to give the Senate the aggregate volume of business of all kinds done in the different sections, but I do not believe the Senator's statement is by any means correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is correct so far as the volume of business is concerned; and of the $56,000,000, $47,000,000 was put in New York alone.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Now I make another comparison. I take St. Louis and compare it with Boston and Baltimore. Those three cities have about the same population. On December 3, Boston had deposited in its banks $6,079,644.83, St. Louis had $2,348,835.33. In other words, Boston held of public money 158.8 per cent more than St. Louis, and Baltimore had at that time $3,899,722.84, or 66 per cent more than St. Louis.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator can explain it, it will be very gratifying.

Mr. SMOOT. I also notice that on August 22 the deposits in Boston, in Baltimore, and in St. Louis showed just as great discrepancies as to amounts as they did on December 3. Therefore it could not be favoritism during the financial panic which induced the Treasury Department to deposit more money in one than in the other. In other words, there was no more of an increase in Boston or Baltimore——

Mr. STONE. The Senator will pardon me. I have not said a word about the panic. I am simply laying certain facts before the Senate. I am calling attention to a state of facts, and upon that I predicate the inquiry whether the Treasury Department is obeying or disobeying the law in the distribution of these public deposits.

Mr. SMOOT. I took it for granted that the Senator took the dates here, August 22 and December 3, in order to show that in the deposit of money by the Treasury of the United States to help the banks during this time of stress, banks in certain cities had been favored as against those in other cities.

Mr. STONE. In the Senator's anxiety to defend the Treasury he anticipates and defends against a charge that has not been made.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, if the charge has not been made, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. STONE. Whether it will be made is another question. It has not yet been made. I took for the purpose of comparison the dates August 22 and December 3 because they were the latest dates covered by the two latest reports.

Now, Mr. President, I want to make another comparison—between Pittsburg and Kansas City. In population these two cities are about the same in size. On December 3 Pittsburg had $5,142,309; Kansas City, $647,538.87. During this financial storm through which the country has been passing, and no doubt because of it, one of the largest bank failures that has occurred was the failure of the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City. With one exception, in the volume of its business, it was the greatest bank west of the Mississippi River. It may be that if there had been a more equitable distribution of the public funds, if more of them had been made available in Kansas City, if there had been an equitable distribution of them, this unfortunate failure might have been averted. I call the particular attention of my distinguished colleague to this comparison, since Kansas City is his home. And yet, Mr. President, in the face of all this the Republicans of Kansas City and that vicinity are still crying halleluiah to Roosevelt and clamoring for a continuation of "my policies."

I wish to make another comparison to which I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah, who seems to be interested in these tabulations. On December 3 the city of New York held of the public deposits $75,829,742.66. Eight Middle Western cities had altogether but $18,558,329.77, an excess in New York of $57,271,412.89. In other words, the excess of deposits in New York, the mere excess, over and above the total of all deposits in all the eight greatest Middle Western cities, was three times as great as the total deposits in the eight Western cities named amounted to. There may be some explanation for this. If there is, it would be interesting to have it.

On December 3—I call the attention of my Southern friends to this—New York, as I have said, had $75,829,742.66, while the twenty-one Middle Western and Southern States combined—twenty-one States—had but $73,676,941.97. There was in the banks of New York $2,152,800.69 in excess of the combined deposits in all the States of the Middle West and South. There may be some explanation for this. It would be interesting to hear it.

And here is another comparison to which I call the particular attention of the Senator from Utah. Washington City, this city in which the Capitol stands and the Treasury is located, on December 3 had $4,581,558.46. The whole State of Iowa on that date had but $3,615,397.46, Minnesota $3,406,535.11, Missouri $4,386,738.13, Texas $2,746,603.65, Kansas $2,148,292.35. In other words, the city of Washington had deposited in its national banks from one and a half to two million dollars more than were deposited in all the banks of Iowa, or in all the banks of Minnesota, or of Missouri, or of Texas, or of Kansas.

Mr. President, talk about resources, industries, and the need for money! Compare, if you will, the industrial and commercial importance and financial needs of such States as I have named with that of Washington City, this great emporium of Government clerks, boarding houses and retail shops. There may be some explanation for this, and if so it would be interesting to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows what was the increase in the deposits in the city of Washington?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator cares he can examine these papers and reports and find an answer to his question.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator had it before him and could answer it offhand, or I would not have asked the question.

Mr. STONE. No; I could not answer without referring to the reports.

Mr. President, another thing. It is said, and with good reason, that the money placed in Southern and Western banks is not always placed there with the expectation that it is to remain there and serve the needs of the people living and doing business in the vicinity of the banks. I am told that in some instances, in how many I do not know, the stocks of Western and Southern banks are held, sometimes even to the point of control by Eastern banks or bankers, and that the funds nominally deposited in these Western and Southern banks are transmitted at the call of the New York banks to their vaults.

If that be true, as I am told it is, what is shown in these reports is not always reliable, by which I mean that when it appears that a given sum of money is deposited in the banks of the Middle West and South, and while in fact it was nominally deposited there, yet as many of these banks are controlled by the banks of New York, the money is soon transmitted, in large part at least, to that city. That a large amount of these deposits is really held by the banks of New York is shown in the reports.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I shall not take much of the time of the Senator. As it is almost 2 o'clock there will be no opportunity to reply.

The Senator has arrayed figures showing discrimination as in favor of the East against the West, and has said that there may be some explanation of all this. I only wish to say that the Secretary of the Treasury is engaged day and night in bringing out, in order to submit to Congress, a complete answer not only to the Senator's resolution but to other resolutions. The Senator is not the pioneer of these resolutions; perhaps half a dozen have been introduced; and the Secretary of the Treasury has set to work to answer them. He is encumbered with a vast mass and collection of facts. It ramifies into every part of the country.

But I can assure the Senator that there will be completed, perhaps within a very few days, by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is giving his whole time, days and nights, to this subject, a complete answer upon the proposition that he has hewn to the line under the statutes the Senator has quoted, and that his distribution has been fair and just and equitable. The Senator will get this information at no distant day, as all the Senate will.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I make no pretension to being a pioneer in this field or any other. I am aware that resolutions covering different phases of Treasury transactions have been introduced and inquiries made. Possibly (as to that I am not prepared at this moment to speak definitely) information as to the deposits in the different banks of the country has been called for. I hardly think so, for it would be a useless labor to impose upon the Secretary of the Treasury, since all that information appears in the published reports of the Comptroller.

The purpose of my resolution, and it is so expressed in terms, is not to ask information of the Secretary of the Treasury, but to require the Committee on Finance to inquire whether the funds deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in depositaries have been equitably distributed as far as practicable in pursuance of law, and if not, then to report by bill or otherwise what legislation is necessary to compel obedience to the law.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Senator should have occasion to revise his remarks I would suggest that he will find upon examination of the printed reports of the Treasury Department that in this distribution of the public moneys upon an equitable basis, New England was entitled to 11.1 per cent and received 5.7 per cent; that the Eastern States were entitled to 41.8 per cent and received 50.6 per cent; that taking New England and the Eastern States together they were entitled to 52.9 per cent and they have 56.1 per cent of these funds; that the Southern States as a whole are entitled under an equitable distribution to 13.1 per cent of these funds and they have received 13.2 per cent; that the Middle West is entitled to 23.7 per cent and it has 19.8 per cent; that the Western States are entitled to 5.6 per cent and they have 4.2 per cent, and that the Pacific States are entitled to 4.7 per cent and they have 6.5 per cent.

I think if the Senator will examine——

Mr. STONE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BURROWS. He will find that the distribution of the deposits is as equitable and fair as could be made.

Mr. STONE. I understand the Senator to say that the distribution had been made on some authorized basis. On what authority? Upon what basis was the distribution made?

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose it was made upon the basis——

Mr. STONE. I mean upon what basis does the Senator fix the percentage?

Mr. BURROWS. I presume it was made upon the basis of the capital and surplus of the banks. That would be a proper basis, I should suppose.

Mr. STONE. The Senator supposes. Does the Senator know upon what basis the distribution was made?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not know, but I presume it was made upon that basis. That certainly would be equitable.

Mr. STONE. I will take that up now. I have here an excerpt from the Washington Post, being part of a dispatch from Columbia, South Carolina, giving extracts from a speech delivered on the 15th instant by Charles H. Treat, Treasurer of the United States, at a dinner given by the Columbia Chamber of Commerce. I wish to read from it:

The speaker said it had been charged by persons well informed that the Secretary of the Treasury showed favor to the New York City banks, in making Government deposits, over those of other sections.

Mr. Treat gave the figures to prove that New York banks were not unduly favored, pointing out that the percentage of public deposits to capital and surplus in those institutions during the months of acute panic was smaller than in some of the Southern States.

Mr. Treat said these figures fairly illustrated that the deposits of the Treasury were put where they were most needed to move the crops of the South, and that much of the money deposited in New York banks was afterwards loaned to Southern banks, so that the South got not only the use of direct deposits, but also a portion of those made to the banks of the North.

That is in accordance with the notion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. The Senator and the Treasurer agree. The Senator said he supposed the distribution was made on the basis of capital and surplus. Mr. Treat says the distribution was so made. Very well; let us institute a little comparison on that basis.

On December 3 New York had on deposit $75,829,742.66 and the Middle Western States $44,135,001.01. New York had $31,694,741.65 more than all the Middle Western States. The capital and surplus of the New York City banks at that date, as shown by the report of the Comptroller, were $226,973,500, while the capital and surplus of the banks of the Middle Western States——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Missouri can conclude his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I object to laying aside the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Who objected to the request?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we hope to-day to finish the consideration of the criminal code, the Senator from Missouri will——

Mr. STONE. I hope the Senator will let me conclude.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho will permit the Senator from Missouri to conclude his remarks. It is an ordinary courtesy.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was going to suggest——

Mr. STONE. I can make the speech on the bill when it is taken up——

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho——

Mr. STONE. But it is only a matter of ordinary courtesy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize Senators in regular order. Senators will please not address the Senate until after they have been recognized by the Chair. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply desire to suggest to the Senator from Idaho, and to others who are assisting and aiding him, that it is entirely unusual to object to a Senator concluding his remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he permit the Senator from Missouri to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair again calls attention to the rule that the Chair must be first addressed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I have the floor I believe, and I think I can probably unravel this matter in a few words. I would inquire of the Senator from Missouri about how much time he contemplates will be occupied in the conclusion of his remarks?

Mr. STONE. I do not care to put a limit upon the time, but I was approaching the conclusion of what I had to say. I may want to enlarge it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I appeal to the Senator from Idaho to permit the Senator from Missouri to conclude his remarks. The Senator knows, as we all know, that that is an ordinary courtesy which is always permitted here. A Senator midway in his address, of course, naturally wants to conclude the remarks which he is making. I hope the Senator will permit that to be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, no appeal is necessary from the Senator from Indiana on behalf of the Senator from Missouri. I think I understand the situation. I would very cheerfully yield to the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would very cheerfully yield to the Senator, and it was entirely proper that I should inquire of him as to the probable time he would require. The regular order of business was called to the attention of the Senate. I have been in charge of the bill under consideration under that order of business. I desire to finish it as soon as possible. I recognize the fact that the Senator from Missouri would not like to have a break in the middle of his speech, but I desire to say that if I were to agree at all to it it would not be in order that any other Senator might speak on the subject to-day, or that any considerable debate might be engaged in.

I can consider the proposition of yielding for only a brief time; but if the Senator has no idea of the length of time he will require——

Mr. STONE. I ask for no favors of the Senator. Proceed with your bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am exactly in the position the Senator is in. I have a measure before the Senate and am proceeding——

Mr. STONE. I ask no favors of the Senator, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is before the Senate and will be proceeded with.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read section 215.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, this seems to be a very important matter in the opinion of the other side, and I think there should be a full Senate present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ankeny	Cullom	Heyburn	Paynter
Beveridge	Curtis	Johnston	Perkins
Borah	Depew	Kean	Piles
Bourne	Dick	Kittredge	Richardson
Brown	Dixon	La Follette	Simmons
Bryan	du Pont	Latimer	Stephenson
Bulkeley	Flint	Lodge	Stone
Burnham	Frazier	Long	Sutherland
Burrows	Frye	McCreary	Taliaferro
Clark, Wyo.	Fulton	McCumber	Taylor
Clarke, Ark.	Gallinger	Nelson	Warner
Clay	Gamble	Newlands	Warren
Crane	Hale	Nixon	Whyte
Culberson	Hansbrough	Overman

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Missouri concludes his remarks.

Mr. STONE. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 215. [Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in the postal service, shall act as agent for any lottery office, or, under color of purchase or otherwise, vend lottery tickets, or shall knowingly send by mail or deliver any letter, postal card, circular, or pamphlet advertising any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any ticket, certificate, or instrument representing any chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any list of the prizes awarded by means of any such scheme, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 215.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out the section just read.

Mr. STONE. I desire, Mr. President, to submit some observations in support of the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, when interrupted I was proceeding, in reply to the Senator from Michigan, to make a comparison on the basis of a percentage of bank capital and surplus as between the banks of New York and the States of the Middle West, the Senator being of the opinion that the distribution of deposits was made on that basis and as the Treasurer of the United States affirmed it was. I will go on with that comparison and see if the distribution was equitable even if made on that basis.

On December 3 there was deposited in the banks of New York $75,829,742.66. In all the banks combined in the Middle Western States there was deposited $44,135,001.01. There were in the banks of New York $31,694,741.65 more than in all the banks of all the Middle Western States including, as they do, the cities of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Des Moines, Dubuque, Kansas City, St. Joseph, and St. Louis, with an aggregate population of probably a million or more greater than that of the city of New York.

On December 3 the capital and surplus of the New York banks amounted to $226,973,500. The capital and surplus of the banks of the Middle Western States—that is, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri—amounted to $343,793,806.08, or an excess in favor of the banks of the Middle Western States of $116,820,306.08 over the capitalization and surplus of the banks of New York.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Capitalization and surplus?

Mr. STONE. Capitalization and surplus. The Treasurer of the United States gave it out in his speech at Columbus, S. C., that the distribution was made largely upon the capital and surplus of the banks; and that is the contention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. But it appears by these reports that the capital and surplus of the banks of these Western States is over 50 per cent greater than the capital and surplus of the banks of New York; and yet the banks in New York received $31,694,741.65 more money than was paid into the banks of these Western States.

Now take the South. On December 3 the deposits of public funds in the banks of the Southern States—that is to say, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee—amounted to $29,541,940.96. At that time New York held of these deposits $46,287,801.70 more than all the Southern States. At that date the capital and surplus of the New York banks, as I have shown, was $226,973,500, while the capital and surplus of the banks of the Southern States was $189,247,759.88. The excess of capital and surplus of the New York banks over the capital and surplus of the banks of the Southern States was $37,725,740.12.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. In a moment. In New York City the percentage of deposits to capital and surplus was about 33 per centum; the percentage of deposits to surplus and capital in the Middle Western States was about 12 per centum, and in the Southern States about 15 per centum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator whether he is not now comparing a group of States on the one hand with the city of New York on the other hand, instead of comparing a group of States—the Middle Western States or the Southern States—on the one hand with the Eastern States on the other hand? Of course, the point of that question is clear to the Senator. The Senator from Michigan (Mr. BURROWS) stated that this distribution was based upon capital and surplus. If the Senator is showing whether that is true or untrue, he would necessarily have to compare one set of States with another set of States, and not one set of States with a single city in another set of States.

Now, just one word more and I am through with my question. The deposits in New York, as the Senator admitted very early in this debate, were caused by the fact that it was the central banking city of that whole region. I do not make these suggestions, Mr. President, in any wise to defend any improper distribution of money, and if anything of that kind is done I shall be against it quite as earnestly as the Senator; but I again ask him if he is not comparing a group of States with a single city in another group of States?

Mr. STONE. That is what I did.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is true, the Senator must admit——

Mr. STONE. I have already compared cities with cities.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has compared cities with cities, and now he is comparing a group of States with a city. The Senator from Michigan stated that this distribution was made according to capital and surplus, but the Senator from Missouri is comparing bank capital and surplus in a section of States with the bank capital and surplus in one city of another set of States, instead of comparing one set of States with another set of States.

It has been brought out three or four times here that the excess of deposits in New York City in comparison, for instance, with Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other cities, was due to the fact that New York is the central banking capital not only of the eastern set of States, but of nearly all the States. I submit to the Senator whether he does not himself think that that takes the virtue out of his comparison.

Mr. STONE. I do not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. STONE. On the contrary, I think if the Senator will take the trouble himself to make the comparison that he thinks ought to be made he will find that the discrimination and disparity will still be apparent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I never could admit that, I will say—and it perhaps has nothing to do with the debate—because I have sat in this Chamber for some time with the Senator from Missouri, and if ever he has yet admitted a point that would bear very heavily upon a proposition he has advocated I have failed to see it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have made comparisons now until I have wearied the Senate, and I might go on for a whole day making them. The Senator can take the comparisons that I have made and take the reports of the Comptroller, and get what comfort he can out of them on the lines he has in mind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was merely asking, and then, when I found out, pointing out the fact that the comparisons which the Senator is now making, and which do seem rather outrageous on their face, are between a set of States on one hand, all bunched together, and between a single city in another set of States on the other, the inequity of all of which will appear from the statement.

Mr. STONE. I make this further statement, then, for the benefit of my friend from Indiana. On December 3 the capitalization of all national banks was $901,681,682. The surplus of all the banks was $549,614,684.05, and the deposits at that date in all the banks were $223,117,082.61. The deposits thus loaned without interest equal approximately 24 per cent of the total capital, and approximately 40 per cent of the total surplus of all the banks, and practically one-half of the whole was loaned to the banks in these six Eastern cities, including Washington.

Mr. President, Mr. Treat also says that the money deposited in New York was loaned to the banks of the South, and thus they had the benefit not only of the United States deposits but of their own. I would like to inquire why these public moneys were deposited in such excessive amounts in the banks of New York without interest, that they might be loaned by those banks to the banks of the South at interest——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. In a moment—when if a fair basis of distribution had been observed, the money would have been placed in the banks of the South in the first instance, and there met the demand of the people for money to move their crops and carry on their business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. First, does not the Senator think capitalization and surplus is a fair basis of distribution?

Mr. STONE. Mr. Treat said so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, second, in answer to the point the Senator makes—which is very plausible on its face—the Senator certainly would not have the Government go into the banking business?

Mr. STONE. No; I do not want the Government in the banking business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the point. Therefore, the Senator would have the deposits made in accordance with capital and surplus, and then have the money distributed according to the banking system and not by the Treasury Department as a banking institution.

Mr. STONE. I do not want the Government to go into the banking business. I have always opposed it, but, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] suggests in an aside to me, if the Government does go into the banking business, I do not want it all done in one section of the country or chiefly to the advantage of one section of the country.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, of course, Mr. President, with reference to that, I take it that both the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri, if they did permit the Government to go into the banking business, would have the Government do banking business at the natural financial and banking business centers, and not according to political distribution or geographical distribution.

Mr. STONE. Whenever I come to the point that I am willing for the Government to go into the banking business at all, I would want it to do it upon a basis that will, in the administration of the law, develop equality among all sections of the country, without showing favoritism to any particular section of the country as against other sections.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Equality being of course, since the Senator is speaking of the banking business, based upon business and not upon geographical distribution.

Mr. STONE. Business has something to do with it, but I think people have something to do with it also.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The business the people do.

Mr. STONE. The people need money for business purposes. They do not care to have it for any other purpose that I think of. Money is only a business agency.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would ask the Senator whether that is not a little extravagant?

Mr. STONE. But I think, when we come to distribute the fund, population ought to have some consideration. The fact is, as we all know, Mr. President, that the demand for money in New York, the claim made that there was a pressing and immediate need for money in New York, was due to the fact that there was a call from the banks in the South and West for money to be used in moving the crops raised on the wheat fields of the Northwest, on the great corn and grain fields of the Middle West, and on the cotton plantations of the South. There is where the money was most needed for legitimate business. The bankers of New York said so; it was the common understanding, and yet with the banks of New York holding millions of money that belonged to their correspondents in the South and West—the banks of those sections—and refusing to deliver it when it was demanded and sorely needed, the Secretary of the Treasury takes the public funds and places them, without interest, not in the sections where money was most needed, but in the banks of New York, that they might loan the deposits to the banks of the South and West to be in turn loaned at a high rate of interest to the people.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has touched upon an extremely important and unpraiseworthy practice in our banking system, upon which I wish that he would say just one word. But before I point that out to him, I will say that I condemn as much as does the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator the practice of New York banks in getting hold of all the money they can and using it. But will the Senator point out why it is—because it goes to the heart of all this money congestion in New York—that the Western and Southern banks have their money in New York? I do not want to go on and answer my own question, but I will ask the Senator, who has given profound study to this question, if it is not because of the desire of the bankers of the South and West and elsewhere, to place their surplus money in New York, where they can earn the most on it, instead of keeping it in their own communities for loans to their own constituents? Has not that practice grown up, and is it not the heart of the reason for the congestion of money from our Southern and Western States in the New York banks? The New York banks can not be blamed for taking the money of these fellows if they want to loan it out upon the curb for very high interest. The bankers who send their money there in order to get part of that adventurous profit are entirely to blame, are they not? I think the Senator now—he knows, and I am asking him—has put his finger upon a very weak place in the whole banking principle.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Indiana very nearly answers his own question. He asks why the banks of the South and West send their money to New York. For more than one reason; partly that they may meet their exchanges in New York, but chiefly, I assume, because the banks of New York offer them a rate of interest——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Exactly.

Mr. STONE. On their deposits that tempts them to send it there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Therefore, they put their money in hazard by reason of the temptation of this high rate of interest.

Mr. STONE. My friend says "in hazard." It ought not to be in hazard.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. According to the Senator's showing——

Mr. STONE. It ought not to be in hazard. The banks of New York are supposed to be solvent, and for the most part I am sure are solvent. And then if they can have the Treasury of the United States behind them, as they seem to have, money intrusted to them should not be in hazard.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is so, there is no objection to the bankers sending money to New York.

Mr. STONE. There is a very serious objection to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is getting tangled up.

Mr. STONE. I do not say that money deposited in New York is placed in hazard ordinarily; I do not think it is. But it boots nothing to ask what induces the bankers of the South or West to place their money on deposit in New York. The fact is they do it for reasons of their own. According to the terms of the deposits, they have a right to call it, perhaps on demand, or on time, as the case may be; but the fact remains—and it is a fact of common knowledge—that during the last three or four months, when the Western and Southern banks did call upon the New York banks for their money held on deposit there, it was denied, and they were unable to get a dollar in the usual course of business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They had it loaned out.

Mr. STONE. I do not care what they had done with it. They refused to pay a dollar, and I know as a matter of fact—that is to say, I know it upon the assurance of bankers in St. Louis, who are at the head of some of the leading institutions of that city—that during the financial stress they went to New York and bought currency and paid from 1½ to 2 per cent premium for it.

Mr. TELLER. Three per cent.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Colorado says 3 per cent. I know it was a high per cent. They bought it in New York and had it shipped out to them in the West. They were compelled to buy currency at a high premium, although they had their own money on deposit in New York. It was withheld, and all kinds of devices, such as clearing-house certificates and other kinds of certificates, were resorted to, as we know.

Mr. President, from my point of view, in the face of that state of affairs, for the Treasury Department to take $50,000,000 or thereabout——

Mr. CULBERSON. Forty-seven million dollars.

Mr. STONE. Forty-seven million dollars of public funds and pour it into the vaults of the New York banks that they might loan it out or sell it to the banks of the West and South for use in carrying on the business of those sections is indefensible.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. Always, with pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, to get the Senator's mind on this question, I would ask him if he were Secretary of the Treasury and had to distribute this money, or thought it wise to do so, would he distribute it upon any other basis than capital and surplus and amount of business done? Would he make a geographical distribution?

Mr. STONE. What is the meaning——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of "equitable distribution?"

Mr. STONE. Of the law, which says the money shall be placed among the different "States and sections." There is a geographical description——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite true.

Mr. STONE. Written in the very letter of the law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite so, if there were not also in the letter of the law the word "equitable." Of course, if the law had meant geographical distribution, it would have said "among the several States and sections," but it did not mean that, and, therefore, the word "equitable" was put in. That was the reason I asked the Senator in the very beginning of this debate whether the word "equitable" did not include the general volume of business done over the country, amount of capital, surplus, etc. Now, I ask the question, since he thinks this involves a criticism—it may be a just criticism, and I am not complaining of the Senator's criticism—whether if he were Secretary of the Treasury and had this distribution to make, he would make it upon any other basis than capital, surplus, extent of business done, and points of pressure?

Mr. STONE. Yankee fashion, I will ask the Senator another question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator would not mind answering my question, would he?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator were Secretary of the Treasury and he found that in the banks of New York, for instance, there were already on deposit an amount of public moneys equal to the total amount of such moneys on deposit in the eight great States of the West, and if he found also that the banks in Indianapolis and Chicago and St. Louis had their moneys on deposit in New York and could not get a dollar except by going there and buying it—buying their own money from the banks there and paying a premium for the currency—if he found that state of facts, would he then go and pour another fifty million dollars of Government money into the vaults of those banks that they might loan it out also to his constituents, the bankers of Indianapolis, or to mine, the bankers of St. Louis?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I will gladly——

Mr. STONE. Would that be equitable?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will gladly answer the Senator's question when I have studied the subject as thoroughly as the Senator has studied it; but, since the Senator has thoroughly studied it and I have not, and since he is the teacher and I a learner, and a respectful one, I ask the Senator again to answer my question, which he parried by asking me another. If he were Secretary of the Treasury and had the distribution to make, would he make it upon any other basis?

Mr. STONE. I would make an equitable distribution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Equitable distribution!" I asked the Senator at the beginning of his remarks how he interpreted the word "equitable," and he stated it was a proper and pertinent question and that he would answer it later in his address. So I ask now what the word "equitable" does mean?

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator that I think the distribution ought to depend upon several things.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So do I.

Mr. STONE. It ought to depend somewhat upon geographical divisions—sections and States should be taken into consideration. I think it ought to depend also——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Wait a moment. Let me get through.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to speak of that geographical matter.

Mr. STONE. It ought to depend also to a greater or less degree upon population in the different sections and States, and it ought to depend also upon the volume of business of all kinds——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite right.

Mr. STONE. Done in the different sections and States; and it ought to depend again at stated intervals as these deposits are made upon the especial need of the different sections and States at a given time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite right.

Mr. STONE. There are many considerations that ought to obtain in addition to the mere question of capital and surplus of the banks. All these things and others ought perhaps to be taken into consideration in making a distribution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I agree with the Senator. I think he has given a very clear and fair answer to that question in everything except as to the element of geography. I do not believe on second thought the Senator will include the element of geography. If he would include it, I would ask him how much money he would send to Alaska?

Mr. STONE. I cannot answer that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. STONE. The Senator might ask me how much I would send to the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. It shows that geography has nothing to do with it.

Mr. STONE. The Senator might ask me how much I would send to "Bugletown," or some other place.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. It shows that geography as an element has absolutely nothing to do with it.

Mr. STONE. But the statute does put that element in it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, the statute says "equitably among sections and States."

Mr. STONE. That is what I said; that it should be distributed equitably among the different States and sections, and that the matter of geographical subdivisions——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Had not a thing to do with it.

Mr. STONE. I think it has something to do with it, and ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, for instance, suppose it were possible that a certain State or section did not have any business at all and it was as big as all Alaska. Of course, he would not under the law send any money there. The Senator is right in everything except geography and, therefore, he does not answer how much money he would send to Alaska, because he would not send any.

Mr. STONE. We will not further debate the subject of geography.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We will eliminate that.

Mr. STONE. We will eliminate that.

Mr. President, I am about through with what I care to say. It seems to me that the course taken by the Secretary of the Treasury has been all wrong; it seems to me that it is sectional favoritism on the one hand, and sectional discrimination on the other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is just the reason I asked the Senator about the geographical question.

Mr. STONE. Moreover, it is violative of both the letter and spirit of the law. An investigation should be had with a view to fully developing the facts and the whole truth of the situation, and if it is found that additional legislation is necessary to prevent evasions of the law and to compel executive officers to respect the will of Congress as expressed in its laws then let that legislation be speedily enacted.

I withdraw the motion I made to strike out the section.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the financial question, but I think it is but fair to say that the trouble we have had financially—I mean the lack of money—in my opinion arises out of the system we have and not out of the administration of law. It is possible and probable that the Treasury Department did not distribute the money in proportion to banking capital or population. There was one point in the United States which was the storm center of the whole trouble, and that was the city of New York. We, in the West, did not need any money; at least I have heard no complaint from that section. I should not myself have been willing to ask the Department to send any money to Colorado or any other Western State, because I do not think they needed it. The papers announced that the banks of Denver had $11,000,000 in New York and could not draw it; and no doubt that was true. It is true, as has been suggested, that it is a mistake to have so much money put into New York by banks in other cities; but that is their own fault. It is not necessary. There are other reserve cities where they can put it—St. Louis, Chicago, and other cities. Undoubtedly when the banks send their money to New York it induces speculation, overloading, overtrading, and then a panic comes, as panics will come hereafter.

At least panics have always come in every country that had a financial system approximating to ours or anything like it.

The question for the Department to determine was, in my opinion, how it could best conserve the public interest by the distribution of this money. I am not a particular admirer of the financial history of this country, but I think it is only just to say that, in my judgment, the Secretary of the Treasury could not have served the country better than by putting the money in New York City. A large number of trust companies there—anywhere from twelve to fifteen—were just in condition to go to the wall. They needed money. The banks in New York City came to the relief. They raised a large amount of money to save the trust companies. If the trust companies had failed, there would have been practically failure all over the United States. The people of the West were just as much interested in maintaining the integrity of those trust companies as were the people of New York or of New England.

Mr. President, I think we have a vicious system of finance. I expect it will continue. I have no idea there will be any reform in it for years to come. It is a system which has been condemned by the wisest financiers of the world. It has been condemned in this country by men who have given thought and attention to it. Yet we are likely to go on in the same way, and if we do shall have the same trouble.

I am not willing to vote to restrict the Secretary of the Treasury, when such a time comes, to placing the money according to population, according to geography, according to bank capitulation or circulation, or anything of that kind. You leave with one man the authority to control the entire financial system of the United States. It is a vicious principle, Mr. President, but until you abandon that principle you have to trust somebody. In this case I have no doubt the President of the United States practically ordered the distribution, although I do not know that he did.

There is one thing more I should like to say. This is an age of criticism of people who have money. They have been charged with having brought on this panic. I think the panic resulted from overtrading and overspeculation and overloaning and from the price of some securities soaring way beyond what they were worth. Securities had been run up to a hundred and fifty and a hundred and sixty that went down to thirty, and when they got down to thirty they were nearer their real value than when they were at a hundred and sixty.

I think had it not been for some of the rich men of the country, who have been denounced in the public press and in certain magazines as being inordinately rich, there would have been a panic in New York which would have wiped out practically all the trust companies and all the banks. Men there who have been held up to public contempt for years came forward and put their entire capital practically into the breach. One man put in $40,000,000. It may be said that no man ought to have $40,000,000, and I do not think he ought to have, but there is no way to prevent it unless you are going to interfere with the business, the energy, and the skill of mankind.

Mr. President, some of these rich men could have made a great deal of money by letting the banks fail. I think I could name a man in New York City who could have made a hundred million dollars as easily as turning his hand over by withholding the contribution he made to relieve the banks and trust companies in New York City.

I think this ought to be an object lesson to us—not because I think there has been discrimination or unjust treatment by the Secretary—to satisfy us that we have a system of finance which ought to be changed. I do not know whether it can be, although I believe it can. Some other countries have a better financial system than ours; at least they do not have quite so many frightful panics. You can not base the American system of finance upon that of any other country in the world. There is no country like this. There is no country where there are the same progress and push. There is no country where business men will take such chances as they take here. Because we have had that kind of men we have progressed as no other nation in the world has ever progressed. In my opinion it is not possible, legally or properly, to put a stopper, if I may use the term, upon the force and push and energy of the American business men. It will go on. It belongs to us as a nation. It has grown out of the fact that we had a new continent. We had a country of unusual resources. We have had here opportunities to make money that no other people in the world had. We have had incentives to make money that no other people had.

Mr. President, I have said this only because I wished to emphasize the fact that this is a good opportunity, not that I have the slightest hope that it will be availed of, to establish the financial system of this country upon a proper basis. I have some ideas on the subject, but I should gladly surrender them to anybody who could show that they are not sound. I would be glad to join with anybody, yielding my own judgment in many particulars, in adopting a proper financial system. I do not believe we can ever adopt a financial system here so that there may not be these recurring troubles.

We have a large amount of paper money. It is issued by the banks, guaranteed by the Government of the United States. There was not a man during the panic who looked to see what national bank issued a bank note or what State it came from. The possessor knew it was a national-bank bill, issued by a bank, and that the Government of the United States had guaranteed it, and there was no question. The recent panic was unlike the panic which occurred when I was a boy, when bills were scanned for weeks and months before the panic; when banks would not take them on deposit unless you put them in as a special deposit, in order that they might pay you back the bills you put in. That occurred, to my knowledge, just before the outbreak of what we call the rebellion. We have no system of that kind. Our banks are all right.

We have $346,000,000 of paper money issued by the Government of the United States; and now the banks and the Treasury Department and everybody else put it down as lawful money. It is lawful money. Why, Mr. President? In the first place, it will pay any debt you owe, whether to the Government or to anybody else; and that is the function of money which always maintains it to its standard, unless you have more money afloat than the business of the country requires. Then, if you have gold and silver, it may seek a market in Europe or some place else. Paper money will not, because it will not do money duty abroad. You must restrict the volume of paper money to the needs and demands of commerce.

Mr. President, I presume some gentlemen will tell me that the greenback is at parity with gold, because it is redeemable in gold. British consols have no guaranty of ever being paid. They are not redeemable. They draw interest. They are purchased by people who desire to put away money. It is not necessary that you should guarantee greenbacks in gold. But they are guaranteed in gold.

Mr. President, we saw the greenbacks go from par to 38 cents. Somebody may say that was an object lesson against paper money. But it was not money under the law. We were collecting in the neighborhood of two hundred and fifty or three hundred million dollars in import duties, and we denied to the importer the privilege to use the greenback in the payment of customs dues. The moment Mr. Sherman, who was Secretary of the Treasury, before the time authorized by law in the act of 1873 for the redemption of the greenbacks, made an order, which I think he had the right to do—and I think it was the wisest act of his administration that I ever did know of—to the collectors of the ports to take the greenbacks as they did gold, that minute the greenback went to the value of gold; and it would have been there from the day it was issued until this time if it had had that function, or if, in other words, it had had the full function of money.

Mr. President, under a bill that you will have here after a while we are going to issue under certain conditions what is called "emergency money." I do not think it will remove the trouble.

I doubt very much whether it will meet the wants of the people when trouble comes. It seems to me the way to meet it would be for the Government of the United States to issue $500,000,000 of this paper money, put it in its vaults, and when the time comes put it out. You could not put it out fast enough to meet the emergency by buying something and paying for it. What is to be done with it? What is proposed to be done with it under those circumstances? You will use the banks as the agencies to carry it out. You will have to put the money in the banks just as you do under the present system. I do not suppose anybody would have approved it if the Secretary of the Treasury had said, "I am going to keep the money in the vaults of the nation; I know it is safe here, and I am going to keep it here." What would have happened if he had done that? I can not tell, and nobody else can tell. I do not suppose anybody believes we would have got along as well as we did. Undoubtedly there would have been a panic such as we have never seen in this country. The money had to be put out; and if the Secretary of the Treasury is to distribute the money, he must use his discretion at such time, if he is a useful citizen and if he is to take charge of the finances of this country, which under the present system he practically must do. You can not make any fixed rule by which he shall distribute it. In this instance he put it where I think it ought to have gone—in the city of New York—where the storm center was, where the trust companies were just ready to surrender.

Mr. President, I am not concerned with the trust companies; I do not care anything about them especially; but they held millions of the people's money; they held in their vaults securities that would have greatly depreciated if they had shut their doors.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is it not possible the Senator is mistaken when he says the national banks and certain patriotic bankers, not the entire number of national banks, came to the rescue of the trust companies? The statement which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] presented to the Senate to-day shows that the national banks on the 3d of December owed the trust companies $6,000,000 more than they owed them on the 22d of August, 1907. It looks very much as if the trust companies came to the rescue of the national banks.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care to name the banks, or to call individuals by name; but I will say to the Senator that if he will take the pains to investigate he will find that a few men put out $25,000,000 of money in a single day for the express purpose of saving the trust companies.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We interpret that differently. It looks to me like they put it there to prevent an avalanche, and to stop the decline in stocks which was then in progress. It was to aid stock speculation, and not the trust companies.

Mr. TELLER. That would have followed. Perhaps they were not entirely lacking in mercenary interest. I do not mean to say they did not have interests to maintain. But I do say that some men who had large amounts of money came to the rescue. Those men might have benefited themselves by letting the bottom fall out, and then buying the securities held by the banks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They did it to break the high rate of interest.

Mr. TELLER. And to give the people confidence.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. And to give the people confidence in the institutions where their deposits were, from which they could not for the moment get the money.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was, as I understand, unheard of. These men, to whom everybody is grateful, put a vast sum of money on loan at a reasonable rate of interest.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. It was a pretty good rate of interest—10 per cent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Six per cent.

Mr. TELLER. I have been through other panics in my life. I have been interested—not financially to any extent, but as an attorney—in several banks. When people know the money is in the bank they are in no hurry to get it. When they do not know it is there they want to be the first ones at the window. That is the trouble. I have no doubt that during the late crisis there was a billion dollars held by individuals in the United States because they were afraid to put it in bank.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything on this subject, but I thought it was a fair opportunity to express my disgust with the present banking system. It is not new to the Senate, because I have expressed my opinion on the subject heretofore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 216. [Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, distribute, supply, or furnish or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, bank note, paper money, or any obligation or security of the United States, or of any State, Territory, municipality, company, corporation, or person, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious article, or any scheme or artifice to obtain money by or through correspondence, by what is commonly called the "sawdust swindle," or "counterfeit-money fraud," or by dealing or pretending to deal in what is commonly called "green articles," "green coin," "green goods," "bills," "paper goods," "spurious Treasury notes," "United States goods," "green cigars," or any other names or terms intended to be understood as relating to such counterfeit or spurious articles, shall, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice or attempting so to do, place, or cause to be placed, any letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, whether addressed to any person residing within or outside the United States, in any post-office, or station thereof, or street or other letter box of the United States, or authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post-office establishment of the United States, or shall take or receive any such therefrom, whether mailed within or without the United States, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such letter, postal card, package, writing, circular, pamphlet, or advertisement, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I call attention to one change especially, in the latter part of the section, where the law is amended so as to include matter mailed outside of the United States. In order to avoid the provisions of existing law these fraudulent schemers have resorted to the plan of going outside of the United States to mail their fraudulent matter, and the law is amended so as to meet that condition which has presented itself to defeat the purpose of existing law. I do not think there is any other change, which is not obvious upon the face of the bill, that needs any further explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 217. [Whoever, for the purpose of conducting, promoting, or carrying on, in any manner, by means of the post-office establishment of the United States, any scheme or device mentioned in the section last preceding, or any other unlawful business whatsoever, shall use or assume, or request to be addressed by, any fictitious, false, or assumed title, name, or address, or name other than his own proper name, or shall take or receive from any post-office of the United States, or station thereof, or any other authorized depository of mail matter, any letter, postal card, package, or other mail matter addressed to any such fictitious, false, or assumed title, name, or address, or name other than his own proper name, shall be punished as provided in the section last preceding.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The section is enlarged so as to include existing conditions that have arisen since the enactment of the original statute. That is to say, there are now other depositories than the post-office in which mail may be placed, and the statute is made sufficiently broad to include them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 218. [All kinds of poisons, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable materials, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scabs, and all other natural or artificial articles, compositions, or materials of whatever kind which may kill, or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post-office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier; but the Postmaster-General shall permit the transmission in the mails, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe as to preparation and packing, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill, or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section in italics will be passed over.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 218 may be passed over for the present.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that when that section comes up I will be very glad if he will call my attention to it, as I want to be present and discuss it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that sections which are being passed over, which are what might be termed new sections, will probably be printed separately after we have disposed of the other sections of the bill, and the Senator's attention will be directed to it. It will not be called up until after the other sections are entirely disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to know whether notice will be given when section 218 will be taken up. There is an amendment to that section which I should like to offer at the proper time.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are a number of sections which have been passed over that will precede this one, and the sections that are passed over, so far as we may control it, will be taken up in their order. In other words, I think the Senator will have ample notice of the taking up of sections that are passed over as being objected to at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 219. [Whoever, with intent to defraud, shall falsely make, forge, counterfeit, engrave, or print, or cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, counterfeited, engraved, or printed, or shall willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, counterfeiting, engraving, or printing, any order in imitation of or purporting to be a money order issued by the Post-Office Department, or by any postmaster or agent thereof; or whoever shall forge or counterfeit the signature of any postmaster, assistant postmaster, chief clerk, or clerk, upon or to any money order, or postal note, or blank therefor provided or issued by or under the direction of the Post-Office Department of the United States or of any foreign country and payable in the United States, or any material signature or indorsement thereon, or any material signature to any receipt or certificate of identification thereon; or shall falsely alter, or cause or procure to be falsely altered in any material respect, or knowingly aid or assist in falsely so altering any such money order or postal note; or shall, with intent to defraud, pass, utter, or publish any such forged or altered money order or postal note, knowing any material signature or indorsement thereon to be false, forged, or counterfeited or any material alteration therein to have been falsely made; or shall issue any money order or postal note without having previously received or paid the full amount of money payable therefor, with the purpose of fraudulently obtaining or receiving, or fraudulently enabling any other person, either directly or indirectly, to obtain or receive from the United States or any officer, employee, or agent thereof any sum of money whatever; or shall, with intent to defraud the United States, or any person, transmit or present to or cause or procure to be transmitted or presented to any officer or employee or at any office of the Government of the United States any money order or postal note, knowing the same to contain any forged or counterfeited signature to the same, or to any material indorsement, receipt, or certificate thereon or material alteration therein unlawfully made, or to have been unlawfully issued without previous payment of the amount required to be paid upon such issue, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section is made up from two existing enactments of law of kindred character, but the provisions of which overlap the one upon the other. The two existing sections have two penalties prescribed. The section as reported contains all of the provisions of section 5463 of the Revised Statutes, and also of the act of January 3, 1887. It does not change existing law. The penalties of the two sections are carried into the one.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 220. [Whoever shall forge or counterfeit any postage stamp, or any stamp printed upon any stamped envelope, or postal card, or any die, plate, or engraving therefor; or shall make or print, or knowingly use or sell, or have in possession with intent to use or sell, any such forged or counterfeited postage stamp, stamped envelope, postal card, die, plate, or engraving; or shall make, or knowingly use or sell, or have in possession, with intent to use or sell, any paper bearing the watermark of any stamped envelope, or postal card, or any fraudulent imitation thereof; or shall make or print, or authorize or procure to be made or printed, any postage stamp, stamped envelope, or postal card, of the kind authorized and provided by the Post-Office Department, without the special authority and direction of said Department; or shall, after such postage stamp, stamped envelope, or postal card has been printed, with intent to defraud, deliver the same to any person not authorized by an instrument in writing, duly executed under the hand of the Postmaster-General and the seal of the Post-Office Department, to receive it, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HALE. The section which has just been read is a very embracing section, with reference to postage stamps and imitating them and dealing in such imitations. I wish the Senator would state upon this very important provision in what way the enactment reported in the bill changes the present conditions, so far as covering the subject-matter and the penalties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the penalty is the same as is provided in existing law, except that the minimum punishments are omitted, in pursuance of the universal rule that applies to the entire bill. The changes in the language in no way affect the substance of the enactment. The change in the form of expression is merely in the interest of a better construction of the sentences. The statute was not constructed according to the recognized rules of grammatical construction. No material change is made in the existing law. It really should not have been in brackets, except for the fact that there had been a transposition of language in the interest of better construction.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 221. Whoever shall forge, or counterfeit, or knowingly utter or use any forged or counterfeited postage stamp of any foreign government, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 222. [Matter of the second, third, or fourth class containing any writing or printing in addition to the original matter, other than as authorized by law, shall not be admitted to the mails, nor delivered, except upon payment of postage for matter of the first class, deducting therefrom any amount which may have been prepaid by stamps affixed, unless by direction of the Postmaster-General such postage shall be remitted. Whoever shall knowingly conceal or inclose any matter of a higher class in that of a lower class, and deposit or cause the same to be deposited for conveyance by mail, at a less rate than would be charged for such higher class matter, shall be fined not more than $100.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 222 is a composite of two existing provisions of law, and there is no change made in the substance of existing law.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 223. Whoever, being a postmaster, shall affix his signature to the approval of any bond of a bidder, or to the certificate of sufficiency of sureties in any contract, before the said bond or contract is signed by the bidder or contractor and his sureties, or shall knowingly, or without the exercise of due diligence, approve any bond of a bidder with insufficient sureties, or shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent certificate, shall be forthwith dismissed from office and be thereafter disqualified from holding the office of postmaster; and shall also be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. That section should have been printed in brackets. It is a composite of two provisions of existing law, but it in nowise changes existing law.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 224. Whoever shall submit or cause to be submitted to any postmaster, or to the Post-Office Department or any officer of the postal service, any false evidence relative to any publication for the purpose of securing the admission thereof at the second-class rate, for transportation in the mails, shall be fined not more than $500.

Mr. McLAURIN. I suggest to the Senator that in the first line of the section, after the word "shall" and before the word "submit," it would be better to insert the word "knowingly." A person might submit false evidence supposing that it was truthful evidence. If he knowingly submitted it then he should be subjected to the penalty. Otherwise I think we had better not subject a man to the penalty who submits the evidence supposing it to be truthful evidence, when, in fact, it may be false evidence.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call attention to the fact that section 224 is existing law. The word "knowingly" is not in the existing law.

Mr. McLAURIN. I know that.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would necessarily come in the shape of an amendment to existing law. The Senator will find on the opposite page in the third line——

Mr. McLAURIN. I see that; but I think it ought to be amended so as to put in the word "knowingly." Hardly a court would construe a party to be guilty if he were not "knowingly" to submit, or cause to be submitted, the false evidence, but the statute by its language would make him guilty if he were to submit evidence which was false, even though he at the time believed the evidence to be true.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the existing law. The proposition of amending existing law has been a question rather of policy in considering the bill. It is entirely within the power and province of the Senate to propose amendments to existing law.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HEYBURN. And if it is the judgment of the Senate that the existing law should be amended in this particular, of course it may be done upon motion.

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator will accept the amendment, I will move it. I do not want to get into any discussion about it, but I move to amend by inserting the word "knowingly" between the words "shall" and "submit," in the first line of the section. I think that is a good amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 120, line 23, after the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly," so as to make the section read:

Whoever shall knowingly submit or cause to be submitted to any postmaster or to the Post-Office Department or any officer of the postal service, any false evidence relative to any publication for the purpose of securing the admission thereof at the second-class rate, for transportation in the mails, shall be fined not more than $500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 225 is in italics, and it may be passed over as belonging to the new sections.

Mr. CULBERSON. Has it been read?

Mr. HEYBURN. It has not been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

SEC. 225. Whoever shall make, allege, or present, or cause to be made, alleged, or presented, or assist, aid, or abet in making, alleging, or presenting any claim or application for indemnity for the loss of any registered letter, parcel, package, or other article or matter, or the contents thereof, knowing such claim or application to be false, fictitious, or fraudulent; or whoever for the purpose of obtaining or aiding to obtain the payment or approval of any such claim or application, shall make or use, or cause to be made or used, any false statement, certificate, affidavit, or deposition; or whoever shall knowingly and willfully misrepresent, misstate, or conceal any material fact or circumstance in respect of any such claim or application for indemnity, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

The Secretary proceeded to read section 226, and was interrupted by

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator tell us what he means there? I do not thoroughly understand that section. I have read it through two or three times. It changes the present law considerably. It says:

Any money or property coming into his hands or under his control in any manner whatever, in the execution or under color of his office, employment, or service, whether the same shall be the money or property of the United States or not;

That is the feature of it which I do not exactly understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will explain the purpose of the committee in proposing the section, but I would suggest that the Secretary finish the reading of the entire section and I will then make an explanation as to the whole of it.

Mr. CLAY. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the section, which is as follows:

SEC. 226. [Whoever, being a postmaster or other person employed in or connected with any branch of the postal service, shall loan, use, pledge, hypothecate, or convert to his own use, or shall deposit in any bank, or exchange for other funds or property, except as authorized by law, any money or property coming into his hands or under his control in any manner whatever, in the execution or under color of his office, employment, or service, whether the same shall be the money or property of the United States or not; or shall fail or refuse to remit to or deposit in the Treasury of the United States or in a designated depository, or to account for or turn over to the proper officer or agent, any such money or property, when required so to do by law or the regulations of the Post-Office Department, or upon demand or order of the Postmaster-General, either directly or through a duly authorized officer or agent, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement; and every such person, as well as every other person advising or knowingly participating therein, shall be fined in a sum equal to the amount or value of the money or property embezzled, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Any failure to produce or to pay over any such money or property, when required so to do as above provided, shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of such embezzlement; and upon the trial of any indictment against any person for such embezzlement, it shall be prima facie evidence of a balance against him to produce a transcript from the account books of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department. But nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit any postmaster depositing, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, in a national bank designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose, to his own credit as postmaster, any funds in his charge, nor prevent his negotiating drafts or other evidences of debt through such bank, or through United States disbursing officers, or otherwise, when instructed or required so to do by the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of remitting surplus funds from one post-office to another.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would call the attention of Senators to the first portion of the section, which is in italics, and which reads as follows:

Except as authorized by law, any money or property coming into his hands or under his control in any manner whatever, in the execution or under color of his office, employment, or service, whether the same shall be the money or property of the United States or not.

Some embarrassment has arisen in the courts in regard to the ownership of the money that was taken by postmasters. For instance, the question has arisen whether it was the property of the sender or the receiver of the letters from which it was taken. In other instances in the case of money taken from dead letters in the dead-letter office, it is a question as to the ownership. The law has made certain provisions in regard to the disposition of that money. In order to avoid the quibbles that continually arise on behalf of parties charged with the taking of money in connection with their office, as to the ownership of the money, we have made it so definite and certain in this statute that a party performing the duties of an officer in the postal Department must truly and honestly account for and pay over the moneys that come into his hands in the performance of any part or character of duty that it may be proper for him to perform.

This enlargement of the provisions of the section is in the interest of the certain administration of justice, where parties are shown to have appropriated money in order that they may not escape upon a quibble as to the ownership of the money, it not being theirs. That, I think, accounts for the first amendment to which our attention has been called by the Senator from Georgia.

The other changes in the statute from existing law are of obvious purpose. They are merely in the interest of molding together the provisions of existing law which are found in sections 4046 and 4053 of the Revised Statutes. This section is a composite of two provisions of existing law enacted at different times.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 227. Whoever, being a person employed in the postal service, shall become interested in any contract for carrying the mail, or act as agent, with or without compensation, for any contractor or person offering to become a contractor in any business before the Department, shall be immediately dismissed from office, and shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 228. Whoever shall make use of any official envelope, label, or indorsement authorized by law, to avoid the payment of postage or registry fee on his private letter, packet, package, or other matter in the mail, shall be fined not more than $300.

SEC. 229. Whoever shall place or cause to be placed any matter in the mails during the regular weighing period, for the purpose of increasing the weight of the mail with intent to cause an increase in the compensation of the railroad mail carrier over whose route such mail may pass, shall be fined not more than $20,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 230. Every foreign mail shall, while being transported across the territory of the United States under authority of law, be taken and deemed to be a mail of the United States so far as to make any violation thereof, or depredation thereon, or offense in respect thereto, or any part thereof, an offense of the same grade, and punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as though the mail was a mail of the United States; and in any indictment or information for any such offense, the mail, or any part thereof, may be alleged to be, and on the trial of any such indictment or information it shall be deemed and held to be, a mail or part of a mail of the United States.

SEC. 231. Every person employed in the postal service shall be subject to all penalties and forfeitures for the violation of the laws relating to such service, whether he has taken the oath of office or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. Section 232 may be read, as it is not strictly within the class of sections to be passed over.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

SEC. 232. The words "postal service," wherever used in this chapter, shall be held and deemed to include the "Post-Office Department."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before we pass from the chapter with reference to offenses against the Post-Office Department, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that one section of the Revised Statutes has been wholly omitted by the committee. In other words, it is proposed to repeal that section.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator to please repeat what he has just said. There was so much confusion in my neighborhood that I could not hear him, and I desire to hear him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was calling the attention of the Senate to the fact that one section of the Revised Statutes with reference to offenses against the postal laws had been entirely omitted by the committee, designedly omitted, and it is proposed to repeal that section. I think we ought not to pass on the subject without calling the attention of the Senate to it. I believe it is the only case in which the committee has undertaken to repeal any provision of existing law.

Mr. BACON. What section is it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That section is 3954 of the Revised Statutes, and reads as follows:

Whoever having presented a bid for the transportation of the mails upon any route which may be advertised to be let, and having received an award of the contract for such service, shall wrongfully refuse or fail to enter into contract with the Postmaster-General in due form to perform the service described in his bid or proposal, or having entered into such contract shall wrongfully refuse or fail to perform such service, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. BACON. Where is that found?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is not in the bill. I am reading from an old print of the bill which was before the committee. It is not in the present bill because it has been omitted, but the section is 3954 of the Revised Statutes. The section proceeds, as follows:

The failure or refusal of any such person to enter into such contract in due form, or having entered into such contract the failure or refusal to perform such service, shall be prima facie evidence in all actions or prosecutions arising under this section that such failure or refusal was wrongful.

The section in question makes it a criminal offense, punishable by fine or imprisonment, which may extend to a year in the penitentiary, for any person having agreed to do so to fail or refuse to enter into a civil contract; and it also makes it a criminal offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any person having entered into the contract to refuse to carry that contract into effect. It seemed to the committee so obviously not in accordance with proper principles that the committee felt constrained to recommend its repeal. It seems to me an unheard-of proposition to say that any man shall be punished criminally for having violated a civil contract, it makes no difference whether the contract is one entered into with the Government of the United States or with an individual.

Mr. BACON. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I think the view taken by the committee is eminently proper.

Now, I would inquire of the Senators whether, under the system adopted by them, the simple failure to reenact a statute, or a section of the penal code will operate to repeal it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. BACON. Or whether it will not in this bill require a distinct repeal of the section; that there should be affirmative words to that effect?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it would require a specific repeal.

Mr. BACON. I think so, too.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And of course that has been done.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; in another part of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will find in chapter 15, the last chapter of the proposed revision, that we have enumerated various sections, and that this is included in them; but of course it would be lost sight of here in the reading of the bill.

Mr. BACON. That is in another part of the bill which I have not read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know it has been expressly repealed.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

CHAPTER NINE.

OFFENSES AGAINST FOREIGN AND INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

SEC. 233. [Whoever shall knowingly transport, or deliver or cause to be delivered, nitroglycerine, nitroleum or blasting oil, or nitrated oil, or powder mixed with any such oil, or fiber saturated with any such substance or article, or dynamite or other like explosive, on board any vessel or vehicle whatever employed in conveying passengers by land or water between any place in a foreign country and any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or between a point in one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a point in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, section 233 is broadened so as to apply in all places over which the United States exercises jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the United States having been very much enlarged since the passing of the existing law. It also prohibits the shipment of dynamite or other like explosives in passenger vessels. The imprisonment clause is added to the fine provided by existing law. The use of dynamite and, in fact, its very existence dates since the enactment of existing law, and this change in the law is merely intended to cover its use and conditions arising out of it.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 234. [Whoever shall knowingly ship, send, or forward any of the articles mentioned in the section last preceding, or shall transport the same by any mode of conveyance upon land or water, between any of the places specified in that section, unless such articles be securely inclosed, deposited, or packed, in conformity with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.]

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask to have that section passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator suggest that we should pass over the section for the same reason for which we pass over sections in the nature of new legislation?

Mr. KEAN. This is in the nature of new legislation, and I think the Senator from West Virginia will desire to be present when it is considered. I think he wishes to propose an amendment to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is existing section 5955 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. KEAN. It is the one giving the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor power to make rules and regulations.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be passed over.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 235. [When the death or bodily injury of any person is caused by the explosion of any article named in the two sections last preceding, while the same is being placed upon any vessel or vehicle to be transported in violation thereof, or while the same is being so transported, or while the same is being removed from such vessel or vehicle, the person knowingly placing or aiding or permitting the placing of such articles upon any such vessel or vehicle, to be so transported, shall be imprisoned not more than ten years.]

SEC. 236. [Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, for the purpose of disposing of the same, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or any advertisement of, or list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of, any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme; or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, or shall carry, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States through a foreign country to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon, the event of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, or any advertisement of, or list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of, any such lottery, gift enterprise or similar scheme, or shall knowingly take or receive, or cause to be taken or received, any such paper, certificate, instrument, advertisement, or list so brought, deposited, or transported, shall, for the first offense, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than two years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this section proposes to amend existing law so as to conform it to the changes made in section 214 of this bill relating to the sending of lottery tickets through the mails. It is believed that the language here used will reach all attempts to bring into the United States or to transport within the United States any lottery or similar ticket. The changes are in the interest of harmony with the section which we have already passed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, so far as the section proposes to break up lotteries, I suppose we shall all be in accord in support of it; and it may be that this section does not interfere with any legitimate enterprise. We do know the fact, however, that it is frequently a pretty close question in some of these newspaper enterprises whether or not there is a violation of law, and I am unable myself to determine, upon a casual reading of this section, whether there will be any effect of that kind or not; but I think it is a very common custom on the part of our newspapers or other publications to have enterprises which are not designed to be an infraction of the law, which are very frequently so determined by the Post-Office Department, showing that there is doubt as to what is the exact matter prohibited and what not. It might be well, therefore, to have this section lie over for careful examination. I do not desire it to lie over for the purpose in any manner of opposing the feature of it which relates to lottery enterprises or anything which is kindred to that, but simply for the protection of what may be sometimes innocent enterprises.

Mr. CLAY. I call the attention of my colleague to a section which we have already passed, which prohibits even a guessing contest conducted by any newspaper. If my colleague will pardon me, we have already adopted section 214, which reads:

SEC. 214. No letter, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order, for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

My colleague will remember that there is a very heavy penalty imposed for the violation of that section.

Mr. BACON. I am quite aware of that fact.

Mr. CLAY. I will say that the old law is proposed to be changed and made more stringent by reason of this provision.

Mr. BACON. That may be; but is the Senator not aware that in each instance it is a prohibition against anything which is dependent upon lottery, or lot, or chance? That is the point that is in my mind. Of course I recognize that as a policy of the Government; and I am not seeking in any manner to contest the propriety of that.

Mr. CLAY. I do not want my colleague to understand me as saying that I agree with the changes that are proposed. I do not. I think the changes are unwise, and that the old law is sufficient.

Mr. BACON. But what I am calling attention to is this language, which seems to me goes beyond the language of the section my colleague has just read, which would condemn some enterprises in which there is no lot or chance. It may be, in my casual reading, that I have made a mistake in that regard, but lines 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22 do not contain the limitation of lot or chance, if I read them correctly, and if I am incorrect, of course I have no suggestion to make in regard to the matter. So far as lot or chance is concerned, I suppose the policy of the law is well defined, but it may be that this language would interfere with some enterprises which have no element of lot or chance. That is the point I am after.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is the Senator now referring to section 236 or section 214?

Mr. BACON. Section 236. The lines, the numbers of which I gave, are on the second page of that section. The only interest I have in it is simply to see whether the language is sufficiently clear to limit this penalty to a case where there has been something determined by lot or chance. I suppose it will be recognized that there may be enterprises in which there is no element of lot or chance; for instance, as to one who furnishes the largest number of subscribers to a newspaper or periodical and kindred conditions of that kind. There is no lot or chance in that.

If the Senators in charge of the bill, however, have examined the section carefully in reference to that question, of course I am willing to abide by their judgment about it; but the casual reading which I make indicates that enterprises which have no lot or chance in them may be under condemnation of this section. I think that would be a very great hardship.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The lines of the section to which the Senator calls attention refer back to the first part of the section. The first part of the section applies to any—instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme, offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, etc.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think that that limitation is intended to apply to the entire section?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think so.

Mr. BACON. If he does I am content.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When we come to read the lines to which the Senator refers, the language is "any such lottery, gift enterprise, or similar scheme," the word "such" referring back to the gift, lottery, or scheme which is described in the forepart of the section, meaning a lottery dependent upon chance.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt the Senator is correct in that matter, but, reading it casually, I feared the proper limitation was not put in.

Mr. HEYBURN. The limitation is in.

Mr. BACON. Then I am content if the Senator is satisfied as to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 237. [The importation into the United States, or any Territory or District thereof, of the mongoose, the so-called "flying foxes" or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, and such other birds and animals as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time declare to be injurious to the interests of agriculture or horticulture, is hereby prohibited; and all such birds and animals shall, upon arrival at any port of the United States, be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner. No person shall import into the United States, or into any Territory or District thereof, any foreign wild animal or bird, except under special permit from the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That nothing in this section shall restrict the importation of natural history specimens for museums or scientific collections, or of certain cage birds, such as domesticated canaries, parrots, or such other birds as the Secretary of Agriculture may designate. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.]

Mr. BACON. There is no change, I presume, in that section except such as is indicated in italics?

Mr. HEYBURN. No material change.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 238. [It shall be unlawful for any person to deliver to any common carrier for transportation, or for any common carrier to transport from any State, Territory, or District of the United States, to any other State, Territory, or District thereof, any foreign animals or birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or the dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds, where such animals or birds have been killed or shipped in violation of the laws of the State, Territory, or District in which the same were killed, or from which they were shipped: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the transportation of any dead birds or animals during the season when the same may be lawfully captured, and the export of which is not prohibited by law in the State, Territory, or District in which the same are captured or killed: Provided further, That nothing herein shall prevent the importation, transportation, or sale of birds or bird plumage manufactured from the feathers of barnyard fowls.]

Mr. BACON. Is there any penalty attached to that section?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the section comes under the same class as section 237, in which the only change was a general transposition of the language, making this provision apply within any Territory or District of the United States, enlarging the limit of jurisdiction to which the provisions of the act were applicable.

Mr. BACON. The question I asked was whether there was any penalty attached to that section.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is in section 240.

Mr. BACON. I see.

Mr. HEYBURN. In that section will be found an accumulation of the penalties for the three preceding sections.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not intend to offer any amendment, certainly not at this time, in regard to that section; but I do not think it is a proper section to be in the law. I do not believe in surrounding the citizen with a network of penal statutes, so that he can hardly put his hand out in any direction without becoming involved in the meshes of the law. This is, as I understand it, the existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Then, as I understand, it is a law which seeks to give the courts of the United States criminal jurisdiction in case some one in some State, where it is unlawful to kill birds in certain seasons, may shoot a bird and ship it into another State. I can not dispute but that it is a matter which relates to interstate commerce, a matter in which there can be criminal jurisdiction conferred upon the United States courts, but it is too small a matter for the Federal courts to be having criminal jurisdiction of. It is a subject that the States in their more limited range of duties can very readily deal with. While it is not beyond the jurisdiction of the Government, I think it might be well not to seek to enlarge the criminal jurisdiction of the United States courts so as to reach such small matters as this. Though I am not going to offer to strike it out, I should be very glad if the committee would do so. It reminds me of what was once said in this Chamber by a very celebrated lawyer upon the most celebrated impeachment trial in the history of the United States, when he was inveighing against a very large proceeding for the purpose of correcting a very small offense. He said, "Men do not ordinarily rig a trip hammer to crack a walnut." That is about the nature of this statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this statute was enacted for the purpose of making effective State laws regulating the seasons during which game could be killed and shipped. It was found that the laws of the States were being evaded by the plea as to the right to kill or the right to receive in the absence of any law prohibiting those acts at the place where the courts could obtain jurisdiction of the party. I remember very well the difficulties which arose in our own section of the country, where there is a very strict law against the killing of pheasants and birds of that kind. They were being shipped in in very large quantities—not just a few casual shipments—for distribution in the markets of the States that had a closed season against the sale or the killing or use of that kind of game. The States are absolutely helpless against such an infraction of their laws. It was because of those conditions that the original statute was passed, and, it being the existing law, we carried it forward.

Mr. BACON. Then, Mr. President, how ridiculous and absurd it would seem that a great United States court, with all its vast powers and great machinery, and with its gowned judges, should sit up and try a boy for shooting a robin out of season and carrying it across the border of a State; because, while it may be, as stated by the Senator from Idaho, that there are cases in which the law relates to large transactions, the Federal court would absolutely have jurisdiction of just such a case as I have suggested.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is unfortunately true that the United States courts are frequently called upon to deal with what seem at first glance to be very trifling matters; but it is pursuant to a rule that is of general application. I have known, however, United States courts to be engaged for weeks in trying trivial offenses that could better have been disposed of before some justice of the peace or local court, but, because of the necessity of the application of a general rule the courts are often engaged in that kind of business for a long time.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 239. [All packages containing animals, birds, or parts thereof, when shipped as provided in the section last preceding, shall be plainly and clearly marked, so that the name and address of the shipper, and the nature of the contents, may be readily ascertained on inspection of the outside of such packages.]

SEC. 240. For each evasion or violation of any provision of the three sections last preceding, the shipper shall be fined not more than $200; the consignee knowingly receiving such articles so shipped and transported in violation of said sections shall be fined not more than $200, and the carrier knowingly carrying or transporting the same in violation of said sections shall be fined not more than $200.

SEC. 241. [Whoever shall bring or cause to be brought into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, for the purpose of disposing of the same, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier, for carriage from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States through a foreign country to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, or any drug, medicine, article or thing designed, adapted, or intended for preventing conception, or producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use, or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore-mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or whoever shall take from such express company or other common carrier with intent to sell, distribute, or circulate any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would call attention to the fact that the section as read is existing law, except that the jurisdiction is enlarged to conform to existing conditions. It takes in "noncontiguous territory," that being a class of jurisdiction that at the time of existing law was not included.

Mr. KEAN. Does it include the Panama Canal Zone?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is included in the expression "noncontiguous territory."

Mr. BACON. The Senator refers to that part of the world subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, which is sometimes called "the United States improper," instead of "the United States proper." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a very entertaining suggestion. I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 27, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 23, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BONDING TUCSON, ARIZ., FOR REPAIR OF WATER AND SEWER SYSTEM.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14638) to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Tucson, Pima County, Ariz., pursuant to an election held for that purpose on the 14th day of March, 1907, in said city, is hereby authorized, through its mayor and board of common councilmen, to issue bonds of said city to the amount $300,000, the said bonds to be payable thirty years from the date of their issue and sale and to bear interest at the rate of not more than 4½ per cent per annum, payable semiannually. Of the proceeds of the bonds so issued the sum of $260,000 shall be applied to the extension and repair of the water and sewer system of said city, the sum of $25,000 to the equipment and improvement of the fire department; the balance of $15,000 shall be applied to the erection of a city hall for the use of said city. Said bonds, when issued, shall bear the date of their issue and the date of maturity and the rate per cent of interest, not exceeding 4½ per cent per annum. Each of said bonds shall have sixty annual interest coupons attached to and printed with the bonds, and each coupon shall bear on its face the amount of interest due for six months on the bond and each shall bear a number corresponding with the number of the bond to which it is attached. The interest on said bonds shall be paid semiannually, and as the interest is paid the coupon representing the same shall be detached from the bond and, after being marked paid, shall be filed by the treasurer of said city and preserved as vouchers. Said bonds shall be issued under the seal of said city of Tucson, if it have a seal, and shall be signed by the mayor of said city and attested by the signature of the clerk of the common council.

SEC. 2. That the mayor and common council of said city, after the sale of said bonds, and in addition to all other city taxes, shall cause to be levied, assessed, and collected as other city taxes are levied, assessed, and collected each year a sum reasonably sufficient to meet the interest on said bonds and provide a sinking fund to meet the payment of said bonds at their maturity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has this city any other bonds outstanding now?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably. The city of Tucson in 1900 had 7,000 people. To-day it is a city of 22,000. Our water system can not nearly provide for that city. It is a question of absolute necessity for the protection from fire. We pay every dollar of it ourselves; there is no charge on the Public Treasury. A vote was had by the taxpayers of the city as to whether or not these bonds should be placed on the city, which is eminently able to take care of them, and that vote carried by 15 to 1 in favor of bonding the city.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman did not seem to understand my question. Has this city any other bonds outstanding?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not think it would be necessary to answer that question if I told the other facts. It has other bonds outstanding—$137,000 worth.

Mr. PAYNE. That was the question I wanted answered.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wanted to show that, notwithstanding what debts she might owe, this was a necessity.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], the minority ranking member of the committee, as to how much time he desires for general debate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest that general debate should run the balance of this day, and before we adjourn to-night I will see if I can not come to some definite conclusion with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that that arrangement is entirely satisfactory to me, so that the Members may understand that general debate will continue throughout the day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Minnesota asks that the time be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time be controlled by himself and by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Is it the understanding that the bill will not be read to-day under the five-minute rule?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; that is the understanding.

Mr. MANN. In any event?

Mr. TAWNEY. In any event.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is my duty, in presenting this first appropriation bill of the session, to call attention to the necessity for a practical revision of the estimated ordinary expenditures of the Government for which appropriations are asked for the next fiscal year, to the end that these authorized expenditures may be kept within the estimated revenues for that year. I do this not to excite alarm or to create any apprehension regarding the ability of the Government to meet all of its obligations and legitimate expenditures. I do it from a sense of duty to the House, for unless these estimated ordinary expenditures as submitted to us are revised and materially reduced by the committees having jurisdiction of the several appropriation bills we can not avoid authorizing expenditures for the next fiscal year far in excess of the estimated revenue, which excess expenditures will have to be met either from the surplus in the Treasury or from the proceeds of the sale of Government securities.

However much we may strive to keep these authorized expenditures within the probable revenues for the next fiscal year, we will not, and we can not, succeed unless we appropriate far less than the amounts estimated for by the several Executive Departments and refuse the authorization of much, if not all, proposed new services and all proposed new governmental obligations or exxtraordinary charges upon the revenues for the fiscal year 1909.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that this statement will not be received with applause either here or elsewhere where there is a desire for additional Federal expenditures. I know those who are interested in having the Federal Government assume the exercise of rights and duties belonging to the States or to private individuals or corporations and bear the expense thereof will endeavor to minimize the importance of my statement by appealing to the magnitude and wealth of our country, and be calling attention to my well-known desire to keep Federal expenditures within estimated revenues, and also within the constitutional functions of the Federal Government. But, whatever may be said, this Congress, if it desires to close its first session without facing a certain deficit, is confronted with the herculean task of closing the gap between estimated ordinary governmental expenditures and estimated revenues for the next fiscal year of not less than $100,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the analysis of the estimates which I have made shows that the total estimate for the fiscal year 1909 aggregate in round numbers $997,000,000. The last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury gives us his estimate of the revenues for the next fiscal year and places that estimate at $878,123,011.30. It is only fair to say that this estimate was made before the recent financial depression, and in submitting the estimate in his annual report the Secretary says:

It is estimated that upon the basis of existing laws the revenue of the Government for the fiscal year 1909 will be $878,123,011.30.

The Secretary also says:

The above estimates are submitted in pursuance of law. I regret the necessity of submitting them, for they are, for the most part, problematical.

But in closing his detailed statement he adds this:

Total estimated appropriations $912,949,288.96, showing an excess of the total estimate of appropriations submitted by the several Departments over the estimated revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1909 of $34,826,277.66.

So that on the face of the estimates as they have been submitted to Congress in the Book of Annual Estimates we have an apparent deficit of $118,826,277.66.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman's argument——

Mr. TAWNEY. It is no embarrassment to me at all.

Mr. MANN. But do these estimates include the estimates for the Isthmian Canal Commission, which are to be paid out of bonds and not out of current income?

Mr. TAWNEY. They do. These estimates include not only the estimated expenditures of the Canal Commission for the fiscal year 1909, aggregating almost $33,000,000, but they also include an item of $25,000,000 for the redemption of national-bank notes, which redemption will be made out of the statutory national-bank redemption fund, but notwithstanding the reduction on account of these facts regarding Panama expenditures and the redemption fund, the estimated appropriations referred to do not include the supplemental estimates we will receive during this session. The amount of these supplemental estimates we can not now estimate, but during the last session of Congress there were submitted, in addition to the regular annual estimates, supplemental estimates aggregating $31,500,000. Now, the estimated revenues for the fiscal year 1909 are in excess of the annual revenues for the fiscal year 1907, $31,395,672. I think it is fair to say that there is no one at all acquainted with the history of financial depressions and the revenues of the Government during such times but knows that our estimated revenue, estimated on the basis of last year when the revenues were larger than ever before in the history of the Government, is in excess, or that the actual revenues will be less than they were last year. But assuming that the revenues of the Government during the fiscal year 1909 will equal the actual revenues for the fiscal year 1907, the estimated revenues are $31,000,000 in excess of what they will actually be. The actual revenue for the fiscal year 1907 was $846,725,339, and the estimated revenue, as I have before stated, is $876,123,011. So that if we deduct $25,000,000, which is included in the estimated expenditures for the redemption of national-bank notes, and assuming that the supplemental estimates during this session of Congress will equal those of last session, and deducting $31,000,000 from the estimated revenues, it shows a deficit on the face of the estimate of at least $150,000,000.

Appropriations for the current year, for fortifications, Military Academy, Navy, and pension bills aggregate $332,563,804. It may be of interest, in view of the apparent deficit upon the face of the estimate, to know wherein the revision of the present estimate should be made principally and where reductions can be made without detriment to the public service, and for that reason I state what the current appropriations are for fortifications, Military Academy, and Navy and pension bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask at this point if the gentleman is going to consider the deficiencies for the service in the different Departments?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not in the estimate considered the deficiencies as yet. The estimates for the same purpose—that is, the estimates for fortifications, Military Academy, Navy, and pension bills—for the fiscal year 1909 aggregate $406,011,216. The average expenditure estimated for the next fiscal year on account of the Army and the Navy is more than $1,000,000 every day, and an excess over the current appropriations for that service of $73,447,412.11.

Mr. MANN. What is that?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is, the excess estimated for the Army and Navy for next year over current appropriations for that service; this excess is $73,447,412.11.

Mr. MANN. That is, the excess estimate for next year over the appropriation——

Mr. TAWNEY. For this year. About $75,000,000.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. Can the gentleman segregate those items and tell us whether it is the Army or the Navy?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is about equal in both, when the increase for fortifications is included. I can give the exact amount later on. This stupendous sum, Mr. Chairman, of $406,011,216 is asked for simply for the military side of the Government, and is larger than appropriations for the entire expenses of the Government for any fiscal year since the civil war down to 1890, and not appreciably less than appropriations for any fiscal year prior to 1897, or the Spanish-American war. The amount asked for, exclusive of expenses for the War and Navy Departments, which is the amount, I should say, I have just referred to, is asked for, exclusive of expenses incident to the War and the Navy Departments here in the city of Washington, all of which, if added, would increase the amount on account of the military arm of our service $21,000,000, bringing the sum total asked for on account of war and navy expenditures for the next fiscal year to $427,000,000, or considerably more than 50 per cent of the estimated revenues for the next fiscal year, and more than 60 per cent of what I believe the actual revenues of the Government will ultimately prove to be. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of these facts appearing upon the face of the estimate, and I have endeavored to be conservative in my statement, we are confronted with a probable deficit of about $100,000,000, and this, too, after deducting from the estimated canal expenditures about $30,000,000.

Now, I wish to say, further, that this is entirely exclusive of all new authorizations which this Congress will make, no doubt, as previous Congresses have done. It is entirely exclusive of the four $10,000,000 battle ships that have been recommended. It is also exclusive of the proposed enlargement of the military posts and many other projects for which appropriations are asked throughout the country. All of the projects that are now proposed and pending before this Congress are in excess of the estimated revenues to which I have referred.

So that, Mr. Chairman, all new authorizations only emphasize what I said at the beginning, that it is absolutely necessary for us to practically revise the estimates in making up the several appropriation bills if we are to avoid facing a certain deficit at the end of the first session of this Congress.

Mr. Chairman, with referrence to the urgent deficiency bill reported and now under consideration. However, before I get into that, if any gentleman cares to ask me any question in relation to the estimates I would be pleased to answer it now.

Mr. BOUTELL. Before you pass to the consideration of the bill, I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill whether his estimate of expenditures includes the total amount of the sinking fund item.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does.

Mr. BOUTELL. Ought not that to be deducted from your expenditures; because we have never complied with it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, yes; we are complying with it. It is a statutory obligation, and the application of $58,000,000 to the sinking fund, or any part of it, is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTELL. Absolutely?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; absolutely. It is not mandatory upon him to do it; but it is there for the purpose of reducing the bonded indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. BOUTELL. Would that be a desirable consummation at the present time? Would it not be wiser for the sinking fund to be carried on as it has been for the last few years?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely impossible to hear what the gentleman from Illinois says. We can hear the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The sinking fund item is a statutory obligation; to discharge the obligation, however, in whole or only in part, or not all, rests in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. Nevertheless, it is always included in the estimates of public expenditures, and is appropriated for. It is a permanent appropriation. So that I do not think that we are justified at this time in deducting the $58,000,000 from the estimates of expenditures, for the reasons that I have given. But estimating that no part of the sinking fund will be paid, we will still have, upon the face of the estimates, without any new authorizations, without any new obligations, without appropriating a dollar independent of the estimates, a deficit of at least $50,000,000; and when you have deducted the items for the Panama Canal estimates, that can be met from the proceeds of the sale of bonds, and when you have deducted $25,000,000 included in the estimate for the redemption of bank notes, and after making all these reductions, and not applying a dollar of the sinking fund, we would still have a deficit of about $50,000,000, and that, too, independent of any new authorizations at this session of Congress.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman how his statement compares with the condition of affairs he gave at this time a year ago when the urgent deficiency bill came in?

Mr. TAWNEY. In regard to the revenue, this time a year ago we had a surplus of $28,000,000, and to-day we have a deficit of about $13,500,000, showing there will be a material, a substantial decrease in the revenues for the fiscal year 1909; and when I make this comparison on the basis of the estimates of next year equaling the actual revenues of the last fiscal year,

I am certainly within the bounds of fairness, and not only within the bounds of fairness in making that comparison, but I think I am ultraconservative in regard to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman if this calculation which he has made embraces any appropriation whatever for rivers and harbors and public buildings?

Mr. TAWNEY. Only those that are authorized. I refer to no new authorizations. I will say one thing more. In this estimate, however, should also be included deficiencies and miscellaneous and additional appropriations that will have to be provided for at the next session of Congress and paid out of the revenues of the Government for the next fiscal year. I have not included these, because we can only approximate them by comparison with previous Congresses; but they have in the last four years averaged not less than $25,000,000.

Mr. MANN. I understand these figures are for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and the gentleman makes out a deficit according to the estimate of probable receipts. Now, the gentleman knows that next year is a Presidential year.

Several MEMBERS. This year.

Mr. MANN. I mean the next fiscal year. The gentleman knows that we are promised on that side of the House that if they are successful there will be a revision of the tariff. We are promised on this side of the House, or possibly not on this side, but in other places, that if we are successful there will be a revision of the tariff. Is it not always the case that immediately preceding a revision of the tariff there is a great decline in the customs receipts of the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not only a fact that there is a decline in the revenue immediately preceding a revision of the tariff, but it is also equally true that there is a decrease in the revenues when there is a declaration in favor of a revision of the tariff, and the power has been once given to the party that makes that declaration to revise the tariff. That is true, for the reason that importers, in anticipation of reduced duties, import only for the immediate demands of their trade.

Mr. MANN. Is it not also true that the estimates of receipts submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury are based upon former receipts, and do not take into consideration the fact that the tariff probably will be revised, or that declarations at least will be made for its revision, and that the receipts will fall off, so that unless Congress is extremely economical—if our friends on the other side of the aisle prevail—they will come into power with an empty Treasury?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Secretary of the Treasury in estimating the revenues did not take into consideration all that the gentleman from Illinois has said, nor did he take into consideration the effect upon the revenues of the Government resulting from the recent financial depression, for the reason that his estimate was made before the depression began and before the revenues of the Government began to fall off.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In answer to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, is the gentleman from Minnesota or the gentleman from Illinois either ready to guarantee a revision of the tariff provided you prevail in this next election?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but I believe there will, and I am not ready to guarantee that there will be a revision of the tariff if you prevail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Eliminating this tariff discussion, has the gentleman from Minnesota made any investigation since the Secretary submitted his estimates that would lead him to believe that following the course of events in the past, that following a financial depression, the revenues will be greatly less than they would have been had that depression not taken place?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say in answer to the gentleman that I have made some investigation with reference to the postal revenues immediately preceding and following the panic of 1873, and also immediately preceding and following the panic of 1893.

In the estimate of revenue for the next fiscal year, made by the Secretary of the Treasury, he estimates the postal receipts at $220,000,000, which is an increase of about $15,000,000 over the actual postal receipts for the last fiscal year. Now, I find, upon examining the statistics in the Post-Office Department as to the revenue preceding and following those two panics to which I have referred, that between the fiscal year 1874 and 1875 there was an increase in the postal revenues of only $300,000, and that between the fiscal year 1894 and 1895 there was practically no increase in the postal revenues. Now, in view of the history of postal revenues immediately preceding and following these two panics, I doubt whether we can possibly hope for such an increase in the postal revenues during the next fiscal year as has been estimated for.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the committee how much revenue would be lost by putting wood pulp on the free list now, as recommended by the President?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not answer that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much was lost when you put coal on the free list to crush out the coal trust?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not investigated that question at all, as to the effect upon the revenues of placing any article upon the free list.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It did not cripple you any when you put coal on the free list.

Mr. TAWNEY. The estimates are made upon the basis of existing conditions, without any reference to changed conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it fair to assume from the gentleman's investigation that this increase in the postal revenue will not take place?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think so. In the investigation of the revenues of the Post-Office Department at the times of these preceding panics I do not see anything to justify an estimate of an increase in the postal revenues to the extent that has been estimated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that the gentleman's analysis is more favorable by $15,000,000 than it really should be?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have endeavored to make the analysis as conservative as possible, but I do not care how conservative a man may be in making comparisons, the result will emphasize the fact that if we are going to avoid the largest deficit at the end of the fiscal year of 1909 that the Treasury books ever have shown since the civil war, except when the Democratic party was in control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, it is absolutely necessary that these estimates be revised and materially reduced. I will now yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question or two with reference to the deficiency in the revenues for the collection of customs. I want some information.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Texas will wait until we begin the consideration of the bill. We have not commenced the consideration of the bill yet. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Leaving out of the question any new authorization by this Congress, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what has been the result of the action of the Appropriation Committee upon estimates submitted to previous Congresses. At the beginning of each Congress estimates are submitted, as in this case, by the various Departments as to the probable sums required for the ensuing fiscal year, and the Appropriation Committee usually estimate the receipts of the Government and compare it with the estimates submitted by the various Departments. What is the usual result? Are not these estimates submitted by the various Departments usually scaled down in a considerable amount by the committee in its report to the House for approval? And is not the estimate usually diminished before the appropriation is made?

Mr. TAWNEY. Diminished. I will say for the information of my colleague that at the last session of Congress, upon the estimates submitted, appropriations were made of almost $21,000,000 less than the estimate submitted, but in addition to that Congress appropriated about $25,000,000 independent and in excess of any estimate that was made, which was new authorization.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am leaving out any new authorization. Is it not the almost uniform policy of the committee and Congress to cut down the estimates submitted by the Departments?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is. It is not only the policy, but the duty of the committee and of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And if such is the case, will not that presumably be the case in this Congress?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will, and it will require an unusual reduction in order to close the gap between the estimated expenditures and the estimated revenue; in other words, a much larger reduction than has heretofore been made at any Congress since I have been in this House. Twenty million dollars was the amount we appropriated below the amount estimated last year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think that reductions will amount to or exceed that this year?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will have to exceed it if we are to avoid a certain deficit at the end of this session.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman's estimate upon the ultimate deficit is based upon the present estimates, is it not, and not after probable reduction by Congress?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is based upon the estimates as they have been submitted, including all statutory authorizations at the present time, and including also the sinking fund of $58,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In making your estimates as to the probable deficit, you base it exclusively on the estimates now before you?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and with an estimate also of what the supplemental estimates will probably be, using the amount of the last session that was estimated for in supplemental estimates, which was about $30,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Are not the supplemental estimates usually brought into Congress?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; always.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Are the supplemental estimates at the present time less than usual?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have none yet to speak of. Some came in just before the close of the holiday recess. We have but very few supplemental estimates as yet. The supplemental estimates come along toward the last of the session, when the other appropriation bills are being considered.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The departmental estimates for the year at this time are larger than they have ever been, are they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are $101,000,000 in excess of what they were last year. That is, the general estimates carried in the Book of Estimates are $101,000,000 in excess of last year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The gentleman from New York asks a question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to whether he had investigated as to the probable falling off in revenues following the panic, judged by past events of that sort, and from him he did not get a definite reply, but got one relating only to the postal revenues. I desire to ask the chairman what has been the falling off in revenues, customs receipts, and the internal revenues for the three months that have elapsed since the panic, and what would be the falling off for the next fiscal year providing the same proportion is maintained?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can only answer the gentleman by saying that during this entire fiscal year the internal revenue, as compared with the same months in the last fiscal year, is about one million and a half less, and I do not know exactly what the customs receipts are, except as shown by the general statement which we all receive every morning, which shows that there is a deficit to-day of almost fourteen millions during this fiscal year, as against a surplus of twenty-eight millions for the same period last year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the gentleman not state what the deficit in revenue as compared with the corresponding period of last year has been?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I can not give the gentleman that information. I have been trying to obtain it for this purpose, but I have not succeeded. I hope to get it and publish it with my remarks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the gentleman can make no estimate for the House as to what the falling off in revenues for the fiscal year 1909 will be, providing the effect of the panic continues?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it has continued long enough as yet to determine with any certainty. I will say for the information of the gentleman that when the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was before the subcommittee a few days ago, that is, the Assistant Secretary who has control of the collection of the revenues, he informed the committee that although the customs revenues have decreased very materially within the last two months—I think he stated $11,000,000 for this fiscal year—yet there are in the warehouses of the Government at our ports large quantities of goods, upon which the duties have not been paid, and that when those goods are withdrawn and the duties paid upon them, it will in amount about equal the deficiency in the revenue for this year. The storage of these goods he attributes to the inability of the importer to obtain the money from the banks for the purpose of making the withdrawal. My own opinion, however, it that while that may to some extent be the cause, the principal cause for lack of withdrawal is, I think, the falling off in consumption. If that is true, and this decrease in consumption continues, it will probably affect the revenue during the remainder of this fiscal year and also during the next fiscal year.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to have an authoritative statement, Mr. Chairman, from the chairman of the committee with regard to the old practice of exceeding the appropriations on the part of the Department. Is there a case in this bill in which the appropriation made last year has been exceeded?

Mr. YOUNG. In violation of the law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In violation of the law passed at the last Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will forego that for a moment, I will say that I have not yet touched on the bill and I intend to cover that very fully in regard to the antideficiency law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is there a case in the bill at this time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri, the committee has not allowed a single item of deficiency where that deficiency is not a legal deficiency. In other words, the miscellaneous appropriation, where the Departments estimate there will be a deficiency before the end of this fiscal year, are by the antideficiency law required to be apportioned by monthly or other allotments. There were several cases submitted where the apportionment was waived in these cases, but improperly waived, and the items for that reason were rejected. It does not carry a single item of deficiency where the deficiency is not a legal deficiency.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In other words, the old practice is effectually broken up.

Mr. TAWNEY. The old practice is effectually broken up. The practice of allowing Departments of this Government to fix the standard of public expenditure was broken up or destroyed when the Congress enacted the antideficiency law on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill at the first session of the last Congress, whereby we specified the appropriations that can not be exceeded, and we also required the apportionment of certain appropriations by monthly or other allotments, and then required that such apportionments, when made, must be adhered to, and can not be waived except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance that could not be reasonably anticipated at the time such apportionment was made. The effect of that has been to serve notice upon the Departments that when Congress makes an appropriation for a given service, that that appropriation is the standard of expenditure in that particular Department, and is fixed by Congress, and that they can not by following the practice that obtained for many years of spending their appropriations on the basis of their estimates make a deficiency, and then near the close of that fiscal year coerce Congress into appropriating for their deficiencies on the ground that if it is not done the public service will have to stop or greatly suffer. They are now living within their appropriations, and the bill now before you called a "deficiency bill" is a misnomer. They are practically all additional appropriations. I have not made a careful analysis, but I do not think there is, out of the $24,000,000 reported, to exceed $3,000,000 of actual deficiencies in this bill, and those deficiencies arose by reason of circumstances that could not be reasonably anticipated at the time either of making the appropriation or the apportionment of the appropriation. Gentlemen must remember there are many appropriations which may be exceeded when the statute authorizes the Department to exceed them. I now yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe that Congress and the people are interested in not having the expenditures exceed the revenues. I am also aware of the fact that the gentleman has been in Congress for a great many years, and perhaps he could, in fact I know he can, enlighten me upon one question. He has been here through at least two revisions of the tariff, and is, perhaps, as familiar as any man on the floor of the House with the provisions of the tariff at the present time. I would like to ask him, as the tariff has been touched upon, whether in his judgment a Republican revision of the tariff in the near future, scaling it down a reasonable amount, a moderate amount, and particularly upon those schedules where the tariff is now prohibitive, would increase or decrease the revenues of the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, in reply to my colleague, that in my judgment the greater the facility and ease with which exporters can get foreign-made goods into the United States, the greater in all probability will be the revenue, provided that revision of the tariff is along the lines that he suggests.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. So that a revision downward to a moderate extent would increase revenue rather than diminish it?

Mr. TAWNEY. That depends altogether upon the nature of the revision and the character of the articles the duty on which is revised and the amount of duty fixed. In other words, it depends upon a scientific, sensible adjudication of all questions submitted to the committee that revises the tariff and the Congress that must adopt it. So far as I know, and whatever opinion I might express at this time would be purely speculative, the effect of a moderate reduction of the tariff would be to increase the revenue.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Such a revision as a Republican Congress, composed of intelligent men, would likely make—that is, a scientific revision.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think a revision by the friends of the tariff would be along the line of providing the Government with sufficient revenue to meet its ordinary expenses.

Mr. MANN. But no revision of the tariff could affect the revenue that the present tariff produces, because it will not become a law during the fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. And the effect of revising the tariff might have a tendency to reduce the receipts.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe that side of the House could make such a scientific and intelligent revision of the tariff as to produce sufficient revenue to meet the extraordinary expenditures of this Adminstration, or, if any other party was in control of this House it could produce sufficient revenue to pay these enormous expenditures?

Mr. TAWNEY. I leave the gentleman to answer that question himself. I know no more about that than any other man who guesses about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will try to answer that.

Mr. COCKRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he is prepared to furnish the House with some suggestion as to whether the administration of the Government could be maintained at its present efficiency if the reduction in appropriations which he foreshadows could be accomplished by these committees?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, I understand the gentleman to say that the expenditures as estimated by the Departments, the estimates being now before his committee, would exceed the revenues by some one hundred millions of dollars?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. And the gentleman thinks, as I understand, or he affords the committee the gratifying assurance, that it will be possible for this House to reduce these estimates by $100,000,000 without impairing the efficiency of the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. I congratulate the committee upon the possession of such a Committee on Appropriations and such a chairman. I will——

Mr. TAWNEY. I have answered the gentleman's question, and I would like to make a statement now in connection with the question which the gentleman has asked.

Mr. COCKRAN. My question was intended to elicit information.

Mr. TAWNEY. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is entirely possible for us to close this session of Congress without facing a certain deficit, and that can be done by reducing the estimates and keeping the next year's expenditures within the probable revenues. But this duty, for I consider it a duty, of doing that does not devolve alone upon the Committee on Appropriations. I would have the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to understand that the Committee on Appropriations is not in control and does not report all the principal appropriation bills where this deduction can be made, and, in my judgment, can be made, without any danger or detriment whatever to the public service. The Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will my colleague simply mention those two or three Departments and let us have it all out?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have stated in the analysis of the estimate that the Navy and Military Establishments are asking this year in excess of current appropriations, in round numbers, $75,000,000, and that is exclusive of new authorizations which have been recommended to Congress by both. I think there are, and there will be, material reductions in the estimates for appropriations coming from the committee that I have the honor to preside over, but inasmuch as these appropriations, outside of the fortification bill, all relate to the civil service of the Government, it necessarily follows that we must take into consideration the actual demand of the public service in making and preparing our appropriation bills. But if the House of Representatives does not support these committees, or the Committee on Appropriations, when they come in here refusing to give appropriations for doing that which the Government of the United States has no business to do—if the House insists upon appropriating to defray the expense of exercising rights and performing duties by the Federal Government that belong exclusively to the States, to private interests, and to private corporations to do, then it will not be possible for either of the committees having appropriating jurisdiction to keep down the appropriations and keep them within the estimated revenues.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman supplement the very valuable information which he has already given us by making it a little more precise and definite as to the exact character of appropriations that he thinks could be cut off by due vigilance on the part of this committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that in the preparation of an appropriation bill it is first necessary to analyze estimates. It is necessary for the committee to have the men who have submitted the estimates come before it, and to have them carefully examined as to the requirements and the necessity, the urgent necessity, if you please, of making the appropriations for which they have asked. It would be impossible for me at this time, having examined or analyzed only the estimate for urgent deficiency expenditures, to say in detail what particular items can be omitted from the appropriation bill. I might refer to some items that are carried usually in the sundry civil bill; items that have been put on in this House against the protests of the Committee on Appropriations that, in my judgment, are absolutely foreign to any constitutional Federal governmental function.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would appeal to the gentleman to go on and let us know.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will call attention to some of them.

Mr. YOUNG. Before the gentleman leaves this point I wish to say that I see that in this urgent deficiency bill there are items aggregating $3,980,000 for the Military Establishment. I assumed that the Committee on Appropriations deemed that amount necessary, and I wish to ask my friend from Minnesota, in answer to something that seemed like criticism upon the Committee on Military Affairs, if this does not indicate that that committee, instead of being extravagant in the last Congress, pared its appropriations too closely?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not criticising any committee, Mr. Chairman. The fact is, as I said before, almost all the deficiency appropriations for the Military Establishment arise out of unusual circumstances that have occurred since the committee considered the estimates and reported the Army appropriation bill to the House. Most of it comes on account of Cuban occupation; some, a remnant, on account of the fire and earthquake in San Francisco. Then a part of it is on account of a law that was passed by Congress late in the session, as I now recall it, authorizing and requiring the Coast Artillery to be separated from the Field Artillery and the recruiting of the Coast Artillery. It is made up of items of that character, which are unusual, which were not and could not be anticipated by any appropriation committee of the House. I want to say right here, because every session of Congress is called upon to make appropriations on deficiency and supplemental estimates, that I have not included any of these in the estimated deficiency at the end of the next fiscal year I have given. That is another reason why the estimate and statement I have made to the House is an ultraconservative one.

Mr. Chairman, upon reflection I don't think it would be wise at this time to enter upon any detailed statement in regard to particular items in the appropriation bills which, in my judgment, might be omitted for the ensuing fiscal year. I know that every committee of this House will patriotically endeavor to discharge its duty, and when these bills have been reported to the House it will then be the duty of every Member for himself to scrutinize the various propositions included and for himself to determine whether or not the expenditure is necessary, and if not necessary, in his judgment, then to endeavor by his vote and in every honorable way to prevent it or reduce it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the deficiency bill that has been presented. Members of the House will observe from the report that it is made up of a few items. For the Treasury Department there is $1,680,331. The most of that is on account of the increased revenue of the Government during the last year and the current year, and is absolutely necessary in order to carry on this service. The expenditure will be made, and can be made, whether Congress appropriates or not, because it is a statutory authorization. The District of Columbia has $304,000, $107,000 of which is for furnishing and equipping our new municipal building. The balance is made up of comparatively minor items urgently needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the fact that he has occupied one hour. Of course he controls the time himself.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the Military Establishment there is carried in this bill $4,000,000 in the aggregate; and this, as I stated before, is made necessary on account of Cuban occupation and an increase in the price of forage, clothing supplies, and other equipment, which increase occurred largely since the estimates were submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs last year; and the average increase, as the Quartermaster-General informs us, is 15 per cent. Gentlemen of the War Department submitted an explanatory note covering fully and explaining in a detailed way this additional appropriation and why it is necessary in order to meet the demands of the service.

The next large item is $300,000 for the payment of back pay and bounty claims. We appropriated $200,000 for this purpose at the last session of Congress. You will all remember that near the close of the last session we passed an act reopening a large number of bounty claims. My recollection is that there are now pending and unsettled with the Auditor of the War Department 90,000 of these claims. This amount is an ascertained amount necessary to pay the claims that have been allowed or will be allowed during the remainder of this fiscal year, and the Auditor informed us that it was doubtful if it would be sufficient.

The Naval Establishment has $1,611,790. It is made up practically of two items—one on account of coals and the other on account of transportation, neither of which appropriation for the current year is within the provisions of the antideficiency law. There was a statute passed in 1861 which gives to the Army and to the Navy express authority to exceed its appropriations for fuel, for transportation of the Army, and other necessary supplies which are specifically mentioned in that act.

The necessity for this additional appropriation, I may say, as appears from the testimony before the committee, grows out of the fact that our fleet is now being transferred from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and $1,000,000 of this additional appropriation is on account of coal. If you will read the hearing, you will see that the committee went into the question carefully of where this coal has gone to and how much of it has been distributed at the different places.

The Department of Commerce and Labor, $553,000, is largely on account of new buildings at Ellis Island, N. Y.

We appropriate each year, I think, about $400,000 to be expended, in the discretion of the President of the United States, for the purpose of eradicating epidemics, and during the last year the Department, under the direction and authority of the President, has been engaged in that work in the city of San Francisco, trying to eradicate the bubonic plague. I want to say in this connection, not by way of criticism, but as a statement of fact, that to-day San Francisco is contributing for this purpose $10,000 a month, and the Government of the United States is paying $30,000 a month, and the State of California is not paying a cent. I brought to the attention of the officers who appeared before us the fact that before any further expenditures were made on that account it was their duty to endeavor at least to have the State of California contribute something toward the eradication of this plague.

The large item in the bill, in fact, half of it, is $12,178,900 on account of the Isthmian Canal. I will say for the information of the committee that some of the members of the Committee on Appropriations visited the Isthmian Canal in November last for the purpose of examining the estimates for canal expenditure on the ground, and during that visit we ascertained what caused the necessity for this additional appropriation. It is due entirely to the increase in the amount of work that is being done—that is, the excess of work that is being done over the amount it was estimated could be done when the appropriation for this service was made at the last session of Congress. Almost this entire appropriation of $12,000,000 is for skilled and unskilled labor, and for material and supplies, to be expended under the engineering and construction department of the Commission. When we reach the item, doubtless there will be some questions that Members will desire to ask, for the purpose of securing information upon the subject, and any member of the committee I know will be very glad to give any information concerning the details of the expenditure that may be called for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary for me to weary the patience of the committee any longer with any further statement. As the bill is considered by paragraphs, opportunity will be given for full discussion of each paragraph and to obtain all the information that the members of the committee may be called upon to give and that they may be able to give. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BUTLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 10368. An act to authorize Secretary of War to change name of Julius Flemming to his proper name of Jacob John Locher.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 110. An act for the erection of an addition or extension to the post-office and court-house at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; and

S. 4064. An act to provide for a term of the United States circuit and district courts at Lander, Wyo.

Senate concurrent resolution 20.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to extend the examination and survey of Cowlitz River, provided for in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, up to the head of navigation, at Toledo, Wash.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the warning the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has just indulged in, notifying the House that unless we retrench in our governmental expenditures and inaugurate a new system of economy at once we may expect to see a deficit in the National Treasury before the end of the next fiscal year, caused by the present financial distress of the country, the reduction of imports from foreign nations, with a corresponding reduction of revenue arising from the taxes levied on imports, brings before us the cause of the present panic and its effect upon the business interests of the country.

As long as time shall last in revolving periods of longer and shorter duration our country will face panics and financial depressions; sometimes arising from one cause and sometimes from another. This has been the history of the past and it will undoubtedly be the story of the future.

Whenever there are times of depression and financial ruin comes to the country there is some cause for the advent; it may be war or pestilence, crop failures or a dearth of money, business mismanagement or reckless speculation that produce these conditions. Whatever the cause may be the country always calls on the Congress for legislation to relieve the situation, and as a rule the relief asked for is a change of our banking laws or our money conditions.

When the patient is sick the doctor must first diagnose the case and determine what is the matter before he can prescribe his remedies for relief. In the case of the present panic we should search thoroughly for the cause that produced it before we attempt to apply the legislative remedies for its cure.

The panic of the nineties (1891–1897) has not yet passed from the memory of man, and a comparison of the conditions existing then with those of to-day may throw light on the question, and may guide our footsteps to a solution of the problems that now confront us. From the time of the panic of 1873 down to 1897 the balance of trade was against the United States, and during that time the exports of gold and silver bullion with which we paid our balances with foreign countries greatly exceeded the imports of the precious metals from abroad. We were being continually drained of the redemption money of the country. On the other hand, since the period of the Spanish war (1897) down to the present time, the importation of gold and silver bullion has greatly exceeded its export to other countries, with the result that although the money in circulation in 1897 amounted to only $22.87 per capita, of which 33.82 percentum represented gold, there has been a constant increase of the volume of money in circulation until at the end of the fiscal year 1907 it amounted to $32.22 per capita, as shown by the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, of which amount 41.90 percentum represented gold.

From the organization of our Government down to 1897 the per capita circulation of money had never exceeded $24.56, but after 1897 it gradually, year after year, increased to the present volume.

Compare the business conditions of the early nineties with those existing in 1907:

From this comparison of products and prices in the country, before the last panic and the present one, it is shown that the material condition of the country was very different then from what it is now. In the panic of the nineties there was a dearth of money and low values for agricultural products and manufactures. The day before the present panic broke upon the country we enjoyed unrivaled prosperity—all the products of the fields, of the mines, and of the factories were selling for the highest prices they had commanded in a generation—there was a third more money in circulation in the country than ever before, and an enormous demand for labor. The products of the country were consumed by the people.

The production of cotton in 1892, at the beginning of the panic of the nineties, was about 9,000,000 bales; middling cotton was selling in New York—not at the farms, but in New York—at 7 cents a pound; in 1907 we produced about 13,500,000 bales, which sold in New York at an average of 12 cents per pound. Consider how differently the credits of the country were affected by the production and price of these two crops: 9,000,000 bales in 1892 at 7 cents per pound, and 13,000,000 bales in 1900 at 12 cents per pound. Would not this increase in production and price, if left to itself, bring prosperity to the country?

Mr. HARDY. I want to say to the gentleman that just before the panic began cotton was selling on the farm at over 13 cents a pound.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably, the panic condition has to some extent reduced the price of cotton. But, even with the panic, the price is being maintained. Why? Because the demand for cotton is keeping it up, the world demand and the demand at home, showing that this panic is not produced by the lack of consumption of our crops or by crop failures or natural conditions; but there must be some other condition that is the cause of the panic.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. My colleague will remember that during the last cotton year, after it had been ascertained that the crop was, in round numbers, thirteen and a half million bales, middling cotton went as high as 13½ cents a pound. He will also remember that during the current cotton year, when it has been ascertained that the cotton crop is eleven and a half million bales, in round numbers, middling cotton has been below 11 cents per pound. This has happened this year, when the wealth of the country is greater than ever before, and this decline has been one of the results of a Republican panic. Does not my colleague believe that if the cotton growers of the South had not held on to a large part of their crop and sold only by degrees that cotton would be much lower than it is? And does he not also believe that if a thirteen million and a half crop of cotton was worth 13½ cents per pound, an eleven and a half million bale crop ought to be worth 15 cents per pound?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with my colleague from Alabama that the splendid organization of the farmers of the South, coupled with the practical business methods they are now inagurating in the sale of their crops, are largely responsible for the prices that are being paid for cotton in these times of financial depression, but I also contend that there was no falling off in the world's consumption of cotton before the beginning of the present panic.

There were 515,000,000 bushels of wheat produced in 1892, at 62 cents a bushel; in 1906 there were 735,000,000 bushels produced and sold at 66 cents a bushel, an increase in the production of wheat of one-third, and a large increase in the price. The same thing may be said of pig iron. We find that in 1892 there were only 9,157,000 tons of pig iron produced and sold at $15 a ton; in 1906 there were 25,000,000 tons of pig iron produced that sold at $20 a ton. Did that produce this panic? Is it the failure of a wheat crop, the lack of consumption, on the part of the purchaser, of cotton, the failure of the iron manufacturer to find a market in which to sell his product that produced the present panic? It can not be. These figures all controvert that fact. It shows that the country was prosperous when we rolled into the good year of 1907. Why, the wages in 1890 were $1,000,891,000 in the manufacturing industries of the country and the value of the product they produced was $9,372,000,000, whereas in 1905, as shown by the last industrial census, the wages amounted to $2,600,000,000 and the products to $14,800,000,000—an enormous increase, an increase of more than one-third in the wages paid in our industrial establishments and the product of their manufacture. Does that look like the country had arrived at a panic by reason of the inability to consume the product? The wealth of the country in 1890 was only sixty-five billions of dollars and in 1904 it had increased to one hundred and seven billions of dollars. The bank clearings in 1892 were sixty billions of dollars and in 1907, the year of the panic, they had increased to one hundred and fifty-four billions of dollars.

What caused the panic? It was not an act of God, pestilence, fire, or famine. It was not low values and hard times—we had never before been as prosperous. It was not crop failures—for several years past we had harvested the greatest crops the country had ever produced. It was not the burden of debt, for the consuming masses had paid their debts and owed less money than at any time since the civil war. It was not from a contraction of the circulating medium—we have more now than ever before in the history of the country, with a constantly increasing volume of money due to the great production of gold and the balance of trade in our favor.

Some years ago a distinguished Ohio statesman said of a political victory that it had been won by God and the Republican party. It is evident to-day that if such a partnership could have ever existed the combination has been dissolved by the Republican party, for the Almighty has given to our people an abundance of all that makes a people great, prosperous, and happy, and the Republican party has stood idly by and allowed the country to drift into a panic, the cause of which is apparent to all. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What then caused a panic in the midst of plenty? There could be but one cause—loss of confidence by the people. Loss of confidence in whom? Not in the powers of God to send the sunshine and the showers to produce the crops; not in the brawn and sinew of the man who delved in the mine or labored in the factory to continue the great industrial development; not in the markets of this country and the world to consume our products, for the demand was more than keeping apace with the production. The loss of confidence in whom? In the ability of the banks of the country to return to their depositors their money when they needed it—to maintain solvent credits. Why should this condition exist? Most of our banks are safe and solvent; most of our bankers are honest and conservative. There is probably not one bank in a hundred which was doing business last summer which is not perfectly solvent and which will not pay its depositors every dollar it owes them; but the depositors do not know which is the one insolvent bank and which the ninety and nine solvent ones, and when the lawful reserves in the New York banks went below the legal requirements the depositors became alarmed and went after their money. It is stated that over two hundred millions of dollars went into hiding in a few weeks, which destroyed the basis of credit and stopped the wheels of commerce.

In my judgment, it was not due to lack of character, intelligence, or business ability on the part of the individual bankers, but to the lack of the proper safeguards in the banking laws of the country to protect the depositors.

The national bank act provides that the banks in the smaller towns and cities shall retain 15 per cent of their deposits, and in the larger cities, known as reserve cities, 25 per cent of their deposits, and does not allow the loaning out of these sums. In other words, a bank not in a reserve city or reserve center can only loan to its customers $85 out of every $100 deposited and the bank in a reserve center only $75. It is not necessary for the banks to carry that amount of cash to transact their daily business; 4 or 5 per cent in most cases would be ample, but the law requires it to be held to meet emergencies and unusual conditions. For that purpose it is a very wise provision. The law also provides that the bank not in the reserve center or reserve city may deposit three-fifths of its lawful reserve in a bank in a reserve center. In other words, the bank in Alabama can not lend its lawful reserve to its customers in Alabama, but it can deposit three-fifths of it in a bank in New York City and get interest on it at 2 or 3 per cent. What is the result? The banker is in business to make money for his stockholders; he only needs 4 or 5 per cent of cash on hand to handle the ordinary demands of his business. The balance of his reserves he can not loan at home and therefore he sends it to New York, Chicago, or some other reserve city to get the 2 or 3 per cent interest they offer him.

The result is that the money is not in the bank vaults when an extraordinary emergency arises, and if the reserve bank refuses to return the reserve deposit promptly, as was done in this panic, the banker is deprived of the lawful cash reserve that the law contemplates he should have for the protection of his depositors.

This system of the country banks depositing their money in New York City is more responsible for the recent panic than any other immediate cause.

In the spring and summer when the demand for cash in the South and West was normal, the bankers from those sections of the country sent their reserves to the reserve banks in New York City, because they could get interest on them. When the fall of the year came and cash was needed to move their crops they demanded their money, all at the same time. This year the New York banks could not respond—their reserves fell below the legal requirements, the people became alarmed, withdrew their deposits, and hundreds of millions of dollars went into hiding and out of circulation at the time, above all other times, when the money of the country was most needed in the banks to liquidate the indebtedness of the country.

It should be borne in mind that the primary object of a bank, so far as the business of the country is concerned, is not merely to protect the depositor against loss, but to keep the money in the country in circulation. If "A" hoards his money for future emergencies and buries it under the hearthstone or keeps it locked up in a safety box, it is as much out of circulation as if it had been burned up; but if "A" deposits it in the bank and "B," needing cash to carry on his business, borrows the money, he thereby puts it back into circulation, where it pays the debts and transacts the business of the country.

Most of the business of the country is done on a credit basis; open accounts, notes, mortgages, bills of exchange, checks, and contracts; the stability of this credit system depends upon the ability of the debtor to obtain sufficient cash to pay off his indebtedness at the time it becomes due. The volume of credits is so much greater than the volume of money that there is never a time when the credits could all be paid in cash, but the banks are the clearing houses of the country that facilitate the handling of cash and enable the debtors to readily and conveniently meet their obligations when they become due.

It is obvious to everyone how necessary it is to all classes of people, whether they have money deposited in the banks or not, for the idle money of the country to be in the banks, that it may at once be put back to its work of liquidating the indebtedness of the country and perform the task it was created to do. In the ordinary course of business not more than one dollar in twenty-five that is deposited is called for in cash at the same time, so that the banker can safely return a large amount of these deposits to circulation, but, when his depositors become alarmed, run on the bank, and all demand their money at the same time, the function of the bank ceases; and unless the banker is so fortunate as to have assets that are quickly converted into cash his bank must liquidate and its creditors be paid. When this occurs to a number of banks at the same time, and the cash in the country is not sufficient to pay the outstanding credits, failures follow as a natural consequence, and the country is thrown into a general panic—with business curtailed, idle factories, unemployed labor, and low prices for agricultural products as the result.

Is there a remedy; and if so, what is it?

It should be borne in mind that the volume of lawful money available for use as a circulating medium and as bank reserves can not be changed by a currency plan, as the volume of lawful money will adjust itself according to the course of trade and the prevailing rates of interest; and a circulating medium that is not redemption money will drive the redemption money out of circulation in times of financial distress, as has been demonstrated by the recent issue of clearing-house certificates. The lawful money was immediately hoarded, leaving the bank credits alone in circulation as a substitute for the lawful money of the country.

An addition to the stock of gold can be obtained only from the mines or by importing gold from abroad, either by means of loans or by means of sales of shares or bonds or other property. That states the whole question in a nutshell. Issue asset currency to the country. I do not care whether it is perfectly safe in its ultimate payment or not. What is it? It is merely a forced loan, an issue of indebtedness that you force the people to take for another indebtedness. What is the difference between asset currency and your credit on your bank deposit book?

You take your money and put it in the bank and the cashier enters on your book a credit of so much money. You go to the bank to demand that money. What have you a right to demand? Lawful money of the United States. But if the bank can issue asset currency and give you asset currency, how has it changed its position? The currency can be worth nothing—is good for nothing—will either not circulate at all or will drive all the lawful money in circulation out of circulation unless it is redeemable in gold. Well, then, when they have issued the asset currency, how have they changed the condition in the country? When you had your bank book you went with your check and demanded gold. If they gave you asset currency and it is redeemable in gold, when you get the asset currency and you want the gold you go to the bank and present it and demand your gold again—that is, if the bank redeems it; and if the Government redeems it, then you are giving the privilege to an individual banker to issue a paper—to issue his debts as money—force his debts into the hands of the people and force the United States Government to redeem the banker's debts in gold.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. If that is done, is it not equivalent to making the Government stand sponsor for the redemption of the obligations of the bank?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely.

Mr. HARDY. And would it not be better and straighter to make the Government guarantee the deposits of the bank?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably. That is what I am coming to. I will state to the gentleman that I expected to come to that part of the argument in a moment.

The demand for emergency currency can come from but two causes—first, that the credits of the country have so far expanded either from a natural and legitimate growth of business that the lawful money of the country can not sustain and liquidate them, or from wild and reckless speculation. In the first case it is the duty of the Government to see that the lawful money of the country keeps apace with legitimate demands of business. In the second instance it is better to let the interest rates go so high that they will slow down reckless speculation in time to prevent disaster; second, that the depositors, for good reasons or bad, have lost confidence in the banks and are drawing out their money, not for business use, but from fear of loss.

Would an emergency currency of any kind meet this emergency? Various forms of credit currency have from time to time been proposed—some based on bonds and other securities, and some on bank assets, with a tax on the amount in circulation to provide an insurance fund to pay them if the bank failed to do so. I shall not stop to discuss the merits and demerits of these various schemes, for, in my judgment, there is an obstacle that lies in the path of all of them which makes the adoption of such a plan impossible, and that is their redemption in lawful money. If they are not redeemable in lawful money, they will either not circulate at all or they will circulate with lawful money at a premium, and it will then cease to perform its function as money and become a commodity, like wheat and cotton, to be bought and sold.

Then who shall redeem this bank currency in lawful money? Each individual bank? In that case the notes of the strong bank will be good and those of the weak bank worthless; in the end it will depend upon the confidence of the people in the ability of the bank to obtain in times of great stress sufficient lawful money to redeem its notes, and when that confidence failed all the outstanding notes would go to the bank for redemption at once, and we would have a note holders' run on the bank instead of a depositors' run; in all probability we would have both at the same time, which would not relieve the situation, but only embarrass it the more and fill the country with a cheap money.

Some say the power to issue money, and the redemption of it, should be placed in the hands of a great central bank. If we are to have a bank currency at all, I grant this to be the safer and more uniform way to issue it; but this bank must redeem its issue of notes in gold to make it circulate with lawful money, and, on a larger scale, it is subject to the same difficulties that the issue by the individual bank presents to us. Besides, it would create a banking monopoly, of which the American people certainly will not approve.

Another plan suggested is that the Government shall redeem the bank currency in lawful money, and that means in gold, for the Government now redeems all other money in gold, and the new currency must be put on the same level with the balance of our currency, or else it will not be as good. What does this lead to? No matter what limitations you prescribe as to its ultimate solvency and safety, you grant to an individual, or collection of individuals incorporated as a banking association, the power at his will and discretion to issue his notes of indebtedness to circulate as money and put the burden and cost upon the Government of personally paying them. When the banker has loaned out his deposits beyond the power of recall, you authorize him to convert his credits into bank notes and put the cost of finding the gold to redeem them upon the people; for, in times of financial distress, when the gold reserves are not sufficient to redeem the outstanding notes, the Government would have to sell bonds, whether the money was needed for governmental purposes or not, to get the gold to meet obligations not of its own creation or under its control.

On the other hand, if the currency is to be redeemed and protected by the Government, if the Government is standing behind the money that is issued by these banks, why should not the Government issue the money itself if it is necessary to issue it at all? If the Government is selling its bonds, as it would have to do if this asset scheme were carried out to get the gold and bring it into this country to redeem the asset currency, why should it not in the first instance sell its bonds and bring the gold here for the people of the country, rather than allow the bankers to speculate in the Government's credit?

Mr. HARDY. Let me ask you another question right there. As a matter of fact, is it not the practice of the Treasury Department, when they allow the national banks to withdraw their National Government bonds upon which the security for the Government deposits is based, and place instead of Government bonds other collateral approved by the Secretary, have we not an asset currency in practice now which shows itself utterly inefficient in effect in preventing panics?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Secretary of the Treasury has attempted to establish a bond-secured currency without the warrant of the law.

Mr. HARDY. And we have two hundred and twenty millions of it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And it has proven that it would not meet the emergency.

Consider the proposition in another way, with which we are all familiar—the recent issue of clearing-house certificates. Should the proposition be made to pass a law providing that the Government shall, on demand, redeem clearing-house certificates issued by the banks, in gold—granting for the sake of the argument that the securities behind the issue were safe and the amount limited—will anyone contend that the Government should be forced in this way to bear the burden of the banking business when only the bankers participate in the profits and the United States Treasury bears the burden? Would it be a proper use of the taxing power to collect gold coin in the Treasury for the purpose of aiding a corporation to carry on its business at the expense of the taxpayers of the country?

It should also be considered that, in the event the Government should carry on hand a small amount of gold in its vaults with which to redeem these bank notes, in times of stress and danger it would be at great cost and with great difficulty that it could obtain gold. On the other hand, if it carried a large amount of gold on hand for this purpose, it would take the gold out of the channels of commerce, destroy its use as money for the time being, reduce the amount of redemption money in the country, and, to that extent, reduce commodity values, which, in the end, are measured by the lawful money in the country and not by bills payable, checks, demand notes, and asset currency.

I have endeavored to show that bank panics really arise from two causes—one, the accumulation of the bank reserves in the reserve centers when they are not needed for unusual emergencies, such as the movement of the crops in the fall, and the other is from the depositor becoming alarmed for the safety of his deposit and withdrawing it from fear of loss, and not in the ordinary course of business. If a law can be passed that will prevent the recurrence of these dangers, I believe bank panics will be prevented in the future and any necessity for an emergency currency laid to rest forever.

As to the first cause of trouble, the accumulation of the reserves in reserve centers, this can be readily prevented in two ways, either of which will be effective. Require all national banks to carry their reserves in their own vaults, or prohibit the banks in reserve centers, or reserve cities, from paying interest on balances deposited by other national banks. The banks may desire to carry a small part of their reserves in reserve centers for the purpose of facilitating exchange, but this requires only a small amount of the usual deposits. The bulk of the reserves go to the reserve centers to earn interest, and if the payment of interest on them is stopped the reserves would remain in the bank where they were originally deposited. In cases of emergency there would be no call on the reserve centers, and the strain that now occurs every fall when the crops are moved would be prevented and the business interests of the country would not be alarmed by reason of the contraction of credits in reserve cities due to the calling in of loans to meet the emergency demand for cash.

The other cause of bank panics—the fear of the depositor that he will lose his money—can only be prevented by the removal of all cause for such fear of loss. In the last Congress I introduced a bill that required national banks to pay a tax into the Treasury that should accumulate as an insurance fund to guarantee the depositors against loss, and at this session of Congress I have introduced a bill to protect and secure the depositors, a copy of which I will ask leave to insert in the RECORD.

The most useful legislation we can enact is that which will restore confidence in the banking institutions of the country; it will build up business interests, facilitate trade, raise prices, and give employment to labor and increase the circulation of the money in the country. And how can we do that? Why, the machinery by which we do it is the bank, where the idle money of the country can go and be loaned to the man who wants to put it in industrial circulation. But can you do that when the people of the country are alarmed as to the solvency of the banks? As a matter of fact, we all know that there are hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, not only to-day, but in normal times, when no panic conditions exist, that are buried in the ground, locked up in safety-deposit vaults, and hidden away because the people distrust the banks. That same money in circulation would go on doing the business of the country and the per capita circulation we have to-day would be increased threefold in its efficiency and ability to attend to the business of the country if the people of the country took all their idle money and deposited it in the banks. But they will not do it as long as they lack confidence in the solvency of the banks. The minute you restore confidence and let them understand that they are going to get their deposits back out of the banks, under any conditions that might arise, then they will bring their money to the banks.

Now, there is but one way in which that can be accomplished, and that is for the Government that has passed the national banking law, which has created this banking system and has adopted the rules and regulations for its government to make additional new rules and regulations that will force this banking system to protect the money of the depositor at all times. [Applause.] It is a very simple method. The idea is not a new one. It has been proposed for a decade or more that the Government should force the banks to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury sufficient money to insure their de-positors against loss. It would not be a heavy tax on the banks.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If you require national banks to secure their depositors, what will become of the State banks?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from North Carolina that I am thoroughly satisfied, able as is the body of men that we have in the halls of Congress, that we are no abler than those who constitute the legislatures of the various States. If we pass a law that will protect the depositor of the national bank, and it is a good law and accomplishes the result desired, I have no doubt in the world that the legislatures of the various States will pass laws that will protect the State depositors.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would not the effect of this policy be to force all the State banks out of business, or go into the national banking system?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not at all.

Mr. HARDY. Oklahoma has already preceded the National Government and passed that law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I was just about to call attention to the fact that our friends in the States are wiser than we in the national halls of Congress, and some of them have already taken the step.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I take it for granted that the gentleman from Alabama is in favor of repealing the national 10 per cent tax on State bank issues, in accordance with the Democratic platform of 1892.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is irrelevant, so far as this issue is concerned, because that is a question of bank issues. This is a question of bank solvency, a very different question; and, as I said, it would not be a serious tax on the banks of the country. If you levied a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent, 1 mill, on the average amount of circulation in the national banks to-day, it would raise $5,000,000 a year. It would raise more money every year than the greatest losses that have occurred in any one year in the history of the national banks of the country. It would raise four times as much in one year as the average losses of the national banks since the beginning of the present national banking system. In other words, the tax would only have to be levied, to create this insurance fund, about once every four years, which would be a tax on a national bank having a million of deposits of $250 a year. What does that amount to? A national bank in the country is entitled to loan out 85 per cent of a million dollars of deposits—that is, $850,000, at 5 per cent, which would produce $42,500 a year—$42,500 a year that the banker makes out of his depositors; and to say that he should not be taxed to pay $250 out of that profit to protect his depositors seems to me to be absurd.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. HARDY. If the question propounded by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD] has any significance, does it not mean this, that if Congress should require a guaranty of deposits in the national banks that would result in driving the State banks out of existence? Would not that fact show that thereby national banks were made far superior to what they are now and, for the interest of the people, would it not be better if they lost the State banks and had their deposits protected?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is clearly right, but I do not think that would be the result.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would a prudent business man deposit in any State bank if the national banks were guaranteed by the Federal Government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman does not understand the proposition. It is not a proposition for the Federal Government to guarantee anything. The proposition is for the Federal Government to force these national banks that are created by the Federal Government to raise an insurance fund, deposited for safety in the hands of the Comptroller of the Currency, to guarantee the depositors against loss. There is no reason on earth why the State banks could not do the same thing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The State banks are transacting their business absolutely on the reserve required by law and are asking no aid.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know; and there is no reason why the same principle would not apply to the State banks as well as to the national banks. Instead of depositing the insurance money with the Comptroller of the Currency, they could deposit the fund with the treasurer of the State. There is no difference, and there is no reason to assume that it would not be done.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1907 shows that from 1865 to 1907 only 453 out of an average of 3,121 national banks in operation each year failed during that period. The number of failures is only 5 per cent of the total number of banks chartered in the forty-three years since the organization of the national banking system. The total amount of individual deposits in national banks has been $65,763,310,417, and the annual average deposits have been $1,529,339,311. The aggregate claims proved against insolvent national banks was $161,307,663. The loss to creditors amounted to $47,911,583. The annual average amount of claims proven against insolvent banks was $3,751,341, with an annual average loss to depositors of $1,114,223. The annual average per cent of loss, proportioned on the assets of the insolvent bank, was 29.70 per cent, and the annual average loss to depositors, based on the annual average deposits of all the active national banks, was 0.073 per cent. The greatest loss that has ever occurred to depositors of national banks in one year was $4,475,528, in 1893, and in only three other years in the history of these banks did the amount exceed $2,000,000. In 1902 it was only $1,113, all of which shows that the actual loss is very small indeed; that the real cause of runs on banks and bank panics is loss of confidence, which are as often caused by idle and false rumors as by actual conditions.

The bill which I have introduced for the better protection of depositors and creditors of national banks provides that a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent shall be levied against the national banks on their average deposits each year, to be held by the Secretary of the Treasury as a trust fund to pay losses to depositors and creditors.

The individual deposits in national banks for 1907 were $4,319,035,402. A tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent on this amount would produce about as much as the total loss in the most disastrous banking year on record, and four times as much as the average loss. In order that this tax may not become burdensome and accumulate in undue proportion, the bill provides that when the amount shall reach $10,000,000 the tax shall cease until the fund is depleted below that amount. This fund will be ample to meet all emergencies and will be self-adjusting, and not take from the banks more than is necessary to meet actual losses after the first fund has accumulated. The bill also provides that the Comptroller may pay the depositors the amounts due them as soon as the receiver takes charge of the bank.

Can anyone doubt that the passage of such a law will end all bank panics in the future? There would never be a run on a bank if the depositors knew that if the bank failed an agent of the United States Government, the day after the failure, would pay them the amount the bank owed them in full. Although the bill calls for a tax of 1 mill on the average deposits, one-half of this amount would be sufficient, and the tax would not be called for more than once in three or four years. Consider what a small burden this will be on the banks and what a great boon it will be to the depositors, the banks, and the country.

But there is a far greater reason for insuring bank deposits than the protection of the depositor.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1907 shows that the total stock of money in the United States on July 1 of last year was $3,115,600,000 and the amount of money held by national and other reporting banks of the United States at that time was $1,106,500,000, about one-third of that in actual circulation.

There can be no doubt that a considerable part of the money in the country and not in the banks, even in normal times, was in hiding; in fact, we know this to be true from common knowledge. Hardly a day passes that we do not see an account in the newspapers of some one's death and the discovery by the heirs of a large amount of money hidden away. The only motive that could cause a sane man to hide his money would be lack of confidence in the banks of the country. When we have an insurance fund guaranteeing the payment of deposits, millions of dollars would at once be deposited in the banks which are now withheld.

In times of panic a larger amount of money is needed than at any other times, but under our present banking laws those are the times when it is withdrawn from the banks. During the panic of the nineties, from 1892 to 1893, the volume of currency in circulation in the country actually increased $118,000,000, but the deposits in the banks of the country decreased $314,000,000, which demonstrates beyond a doubt that the fear of loss on the depositors' part contracts the currency in actual use in the country at the very times it is most required to meet the needs of the people.

There are other provisions in the bill I have introduced that, in my judgment, would restore confidence in our banking system and protect the depositors, but I will not attempt to go further into the details of the bill at this time.

There was no material cause for the panic of 1907—with bountiful crops, good prices, peace at home and abroad, labor in demand—the tidal wave of prosperity should have rolled on to the music of the thrashing machine and the cotton gin and the roar of the factory and hum of the spindle. Each recurring day should have proclaimed anew our industrial greatness and domestic prosperity. In a day the mighty pyramid of our industrial success was destroyed, a deluge of distrust and disaster was precipitated upon the nation, because we had a banking system that did not command the confidence of the people and was unable to sustain the credits of the country. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

A bill (H. R. 10547) for the better protection of depositors and creditors of national banks.

Be it enacted, etc., That a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum shall be levied upon the average amount of deposits of every character held by national banks, the amount derived from said tax so levied and collected to constitute a special fund to be held by the Treasurer of the United States for the better protection of depositors and creditors of national banks.

It shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency on July 1, 1908, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and annually thereafter, to ascertain the average amount of deposits held by each and every national bank reporting to him. This shall be ascertained by adding together the amounts shown by the five reports made to him in 1907 and each year thereafter and dividing such sum by five; when the amounts are thus arrived at, the Comptroller shall notify each bank of its liability under this act, estimating the amount of tax due on such average amount of deposits at one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum, and proceed to collect the same under regulations to be formulated by said Comptroller.

An accurate account of all sums of money collected under this act shall be kept by said Comptroller, and the funds shall be certified into the Treasury of the United States to be held as a separate and special fund.

If upon the failure of any national bank the amount realized from the collection of its assets and the assessment levied upon its stockholders shall not be sufficient to pay depositors and creditors in full of the face value of their claims against said bank, then the Comptroller of the Currency shall certify said amount of deficit as ascertained by him, and the Treasurer of the United States shall proceed to draw his warrant upon such fund for the amount so certified and payable to the receiver of said bank, to be used in settling the balance of said deposits or other proper claims: Provided, however, That the Comptroller of the Treasury shall, when such fund is sufficient to enable him to do so, immediately pay the depositors and other proper claims in full, the amount so paid to be returned to said fund from the collection of the bank's assets and the assessment levied upon its stockholders to the extent thereof.

When the fund created by the provisions of this act shall aggregate $10,000,000 the Comptroller shall cease to levy such tax until the amount of the fund shall, in his judgment, require further collections in order to maintain a minimum of such amount of $10,000,000.

Upon the liquidation of any bank contributing to the fund herein authorized the Comptroller shall ascertain if any portion of the fund contributed by said liquidating bank should be returned to said bank after ascertaining its proportion of losses sustained and expenses properly chargeable to said fund, and if any balance is due said bank he shall certify the amount to the Treasurer, who shall draw his warrant for the amount so certified in favor of parties to whom such amount is legally payable.

SEC. 2. That no association organized under the national-bank act shall pay interest on its deposits of any nature or description, except public funds of the United States, on which they are authorized to pay interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum: Provided, however, That said association may continue to pay interest on deposits heretofore made until the 1st day of July, 1909.

SEC. 3. That any national banking association now organized, or hereafter organized, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, upon a deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States, as now provided by law, is authorized to deposit lawful money, and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, withdraw a proportionate amount of the bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits.

SEC. 4. That the Comptroller of the Currency, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may authorize any national banking association, now required at all times to have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of the aggregate amount of its deposits in all respects, to reduce said amount of lawful money so held, for a time expressed in his order, not to exceed six months, to an amount not less than 12 per cent of its deposits; and any association now required at all times to have on hand in lawful money of the United States an equal amount to at least 15 per cent of its deposits in all respects, to reduce said amount of lawful money so held, for a time expressed in his order, not to exceed four months, to an amount not less than 7 per cent of its deposits.

SEC. 5. That the affairs of each national banking association shall be managed by not less than five nor more than fifteen directors, who shall be elected by the stockholders at a meeting to be held at any time before the association is authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business of banking; and afterwards at meetings to be held on such day in January of each year as shall be specified therefor in the articles of association. The directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and have qualified.

Every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States, and at least three-fourths of the directors must have resided in the State, Territory, or district in which the association is located for at least one year immediately preceding their election, and must be residents therein during their continuance in office.

No person shall be eligible as a director who shall be an officer or director in any other bank, trust company, insurance company, or financial or banking association. Every director must own in his own right at least twenty-five shares of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right at least ten shares of such capital stock. Any director who ceases to be the owner of the required number of shares of the capital stock, or who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his place.

SEC. 6. That no association organized under the national-bank act shall receive or accept deposits in excess of an amount equal to ten times the combined amount of its capital stock and surplus fund.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to make any formal speech. I do not think it necessary now to undertake to say anything in particular with reference to the urgent deficiency bill now before the Committee of the Whole. The chairman of the committee [Mr. TAWNEY] has made a very full and good statement in reference to it. I do not criticise anything in the bill. If it has any defects it consists of what is not in it, but of that later.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has undertaken to say that there is great danger of our appropriations for the future exceeding the revenues of the Government, and he has properly called the attention of the House and all of its committees to the importance of seeing to it that we keep as nearly as possible within the revenues. I differ with some of my colleagues on the committee, and doubtless with many of the Members of this House as to the mode of making appropriations. I have witnessed in the last Congress, and I see the same symptoms coming up here in this one, that which indicates that we are to adopt a policy that to my mind is utterly unbusinesslike and which will in the end lead us to make appropriations that will be largely valueless to the country in the long run, and yet be very great. The plan of appropriating a little here and a little there for various purposes and measures results always in our appropriating in the end large sums of money and in many instances not accomplishing anything of substantial value.

This applies to the appropriations made for our coast defenses, for fortifications, and for various other things. In passing I may say, speaking from memory, that we appropriated in the last Congress, in the river and harbor bill, something over eighty millions of dollars. A large part of it when expended will be distributed here and there over the country in attempting to improve places as waterways, many of which have been appropriated for from time to time in this country since 1806, and many of them have never produced anything that helped to build up water transportation or the commerce of the country. From time to time, if we look at the history of the river and harbor appropriations, we will find that certain rivers and certain inlets and harbors have had money appropriations to improve them and then they have been abandoned, and in the course of a few years we come back again and appropriate something more for their improvement, and the necessities are the same at the time of the last appropriation as they were at the first, and no good has resulted. We could save a very large amount of money if we would appropriate at once a sufficient amount for the places that would produce results and omit the unimportant places, and we might thus retrench in our appropriations. We also adopt the dribbling policy in the matter of coast defenses; notably we refuse to close the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay through a proper appropriation that would render unnecessary all appropriations for places inside the Chesapeake or on the Potomac about Norfolk, Washington, Baltimore, Annapolis, etc. The other policy would save us hundreds and hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars, and at the same time accomplish results that are not now accomplished. There is nothing now to prevent a foreign fleet, if we had war, from sailing into the Chesapeake, and the consequence would be that we would have to use our Navy within the Chesapeake to defend the country, and if we had the Chesapeake closed the Navy could go elsewhere for its service. I give this only as an illustration, and I might say that if we had appropriated a sum of money sufficient to fortify Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu, and perhaps Manila Bay, in the Philippines, we would not be talking so much and hear so much about a foreign war, and we would not have had to incur the expense, that will run into millons of dollars, of sending a fleet of sixteen battle ships around the Horn to the Pacific in order that we may show that we have some spirit left for war, if war should come. Had we made proper and timely appropriations there would have been no need to put up that sort of bluff. But this is enough, Mr. Chairman, for me to say on the subject of the mode or of our policy of making appropriations in peicemeal.

A little politics is attempted to be brought into the discussion here to-day in reference to a mode of increasing our revenues. It is said by some of the Democratic Members that the way to increase the revenues now is to cut down the tariff and thus force the people of this country to purchase foreign products—that is, to force our people to import and pay duties upon foreign manufactured articles and foreign products. The history and the experience of the past show that that result never happened through free trade. We are now and have been through the lifetime of the Dingley tariff bill importing more goods in value and raising more revenues than we ever did before or ever will when we throw our own people out of employment in order that we may buy the product of foreign people. I am not frightened at the Democratic threat that when they get into power they will so reduce the tariff as to compel our people to buy what they consume and what they need from abroad. This involves impoverishing this country, closing factories and shops, turning the skilled and unskilled laborers out of employment, stopping our mining, and generally stopping business in the country and bringing about disaster. When that comes we will have nothing with which to buy from abroad, and importations will not be so large and our revenues will be materially reduced. Now, I am about through with this line of discussion and I do not intend to dwell upon it here any further.

PANAMA CANAL.

My purpose, Mr. Chairman, when I arose was to say something relating to the appropriation made in this bill to enable the work of constructing the Isthmian Canal to continue as at present and on the scale it is now being prosecuted. This urgent deficiency bill carries an appropriation of $12,178,900 for that purpose, and wisely so. There are no deficiencies now in the existing appropriations for the construction of the Isthmian Canal, but this large sum will be necessary to enable those in charge to continue the work upon the line of this canal to the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1908. Unless we conclude that we want to reduce the working force on the line of the canal and delay its completion we are obliged to make this appropriation. If it be the purpose of the United States to hasten as fast as practicable the final completion of the canal it is necessary to make this deficiency appropriation.

The total expenditures and appropriations for and on account of the Isthmian Canal thus far, including the sum carried in the pending bill, are as follows:

Payment to France (1902)	$40,000,000.00
Payment to Panama (1904) for purchase of Zone	10,000,000.00
Appropriations for construction, etc. (1902)	10,000,000.00
Appropriations as deficiency (1906)	11,000,000.00
Appropriations as deficiency (1906)	5,990,786.00
Appropriations for fiscal year 1907	25,456,415.08
Appropriations for fiscal year 1908	27,161,367.50
Deficiency appropriations for fiscal year 1908	12,178,900.00
Total to end of fiscal year 1908	141,787,468.58

Of this total $91,787,468.58 may be called appropriations for construction, and much of this sum has been or will be expended for things not estimated for by the Board of Consulting-ing Engineers when it estimated the cost of the canal project, adopted by Congress, would be $139,705,200. This estimate of the Board was exclusive of sanitation, for which already about $8,000,000 (out of the appropriations above) have been expended. exclusive of expenses of the Zone government, and for waterworks, sewers, and paving in Panama and Colon (made necessary to secure improved health conditions), and for the reequipment of the Panama Railroad. Doubtless other items of necessary expense were omitted by the Board. A change in the size of the dams and in the width of the locks will add at least $5,000,000 to their cost.

It is not at all probable that the Board's estimated cost will prove to be high enough, even with due allowances for excluded items. For myself I wish we were engaged in building a sea-level canal. I believe such a canal is practicable and that its prime cost would not be so much greater than the one we are now building as to forbid its construction, and when built it would cost far less to maintain it, and the commerce of the world would then safely pass through it unobstructed. The cost of construction of all the locks of a width of 110 feet, it is estimated by Colonel Goethals, will be $56,000,000.

Beginning with February, 1913, the United States is to pay the Panama Government $250,000 annually further on account of the acquisition of the Zone and the perpetual right to occupy it.

The estimates for all purposes on account of the canal for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, amount to $33,183,143.60, and this amount will doubtless be needed in that year to enable the work to be prosecuted as it should be, as much work on the construction of the locks and dams should be done in that year.

The wisdom of the canal need not be discussed now. The United States has determined to build it, and it will be built. When it will be finished we can not tell. I may say that those engaged in the work believe that they can finish this canal ready for operation by at least January, 1915. There are some of these people who believe the period of completion will be of an earlier date than that. From the time that Balboa waded into the Bay of Panama on September 29, 1513, if I recollect my reading aright, and declared that he took possession of the Pacific Ocean and all its islands for the King of Spain (then called the King of Castile), up to the present there has been talk about an isthmian canal. For a long time after engineers had reported that it was practicable to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama the country of Europe that was in power and owned and controlled the Isthmus refused to do anything because it was decided by the ecclesiastic authorities that it would be against Divine Providence to attempt to build a channel across that isthmus where the Creator had decided in his creation that it was not necessary to have one.

But we have passed on to other things and other times, and we are going to build the canal. Why did not the French build the canal? They made a heroic effort to do it, an earnest effort to do it. They engaged the best skill of the world in the enterprise; they accomplished a good deal of work, but they failed, Mr. Chairman, because they had not proceeded far enough in scientific knowledge, not engineering alone, but in other things which were necessary to be taken into account before this canal could be built. The principal thing that caused the failure of the French was their inability to control tropical conditions, to overcome the tropical diseases which were prevalent on the Isthmus. The French were not slow about their efforts or sparing in their expenditures. They devoted, unsparingly, life and treasure to succeed. They built the best hospital ever built in a country like that in the world. They resorted to every effort, and we are now enjoying the use of many of their well-built and well-appointed hospitals, but they failed to recognize what is now recognized to be true, that a people can not be properly cared for while engaged in a great enterprise like this or when assembled in armies by merely building hospitals to care for the sick. A preventive policy must be pursued. Hospitals will take care of the sick and provide a way for many to die, but they alone will not keep up the ranks of those employed in large bodies.

We are called in our age to use all the means that advanced science and skill, experience, discovery, and learning, especially in the medical department, has brought out and attained to in the way of preventing disease and its spread. We have accomplished, Mr. Chairman, on the Isthmus that which was not possible ten years ago. I state this on the testimony of Colonel Gorgas and others. We have accomplished the matter of making that Zone a comparatively habitable and a healthful place in which to live and labor. Formerly there was deadly malarial fever all over the Isthmus. This is known by those who were familiar with that period when people used to cross the Isthmus in 1849 and later, attempting to get hastily to the gold mines of California, as "Chagres fever." Thousands then died from this virulent fever. We have now, in a large sense, gotten rid of that. It does not now originate there. There is some malaria there still, but very little, and now more malaria is taken in by people who go there to work than originates there. The anopheles or malarial mosquito that has white legs has been almost exterminated from the Zone and from the line of the canal.

We have also accomplished, Mr. Chairman, the total extermination of yellow fever from the Zone, which was almost continuous there for over one hundred years and up to about the year 1904. Practically there has been no yellow fever on the Zone since 1905. I think the testimony shows that two cases crept by the quarantine into the Zone on the Isthmus in 1905 and one sporadic case appeared in 1906, but there has been none there since; and it is impossible, in view of the conditions which have been brought about by Colonel Gorgas and those engaged with him in the sanitation, for yellow fever to appear there at all unless it is imported there.

We have literally exterminated flies also from the line of the Canal, as well as the anopheles mosquito, believed to be the medium through which malarial fevers are transmitted. We have absolutely exterminated all mosquitoes, of course, including the Stegomyia faciata variety that alone can communicate and transmit the disease of yellow fever. The culex, a big mosquito with a band around it, which is harmless, except to bite, has also been exterminated from the Zone.

I have twice, since the adjournment of the Fifty-ninth Congress, March 4 last, been to the Isthmus of Panama, and I have traveled back and forth each time over all parts of the line of the canal, and each time with a considerable party, and I have only found one man of all the party who heard a mosquito on the line of the canal or in the Canal Zone. I have seen none who said they ever saw one there. We were there night and day. In March we were there in the dry season, when there is no rain, or practically none. In November I was there during the rainy season, and it is always hot there, of course, but not a mosquito was to be found in either season. Through the discoveries which were made by Maj. Walter Reed and other distinguished Army surgeons associated with him in Cuba in 1900, and later where they worked out definite results through years of experimentation, it has been demonstrated that without a mosquito of the variety called Stegomyia fasciata it is impossible for yellow fever to be transmitted. There must be first a yellow-fever patient, and that patient must be bitten within the first three days of the disease by a mosquito of the variety just named, and the mosquito must then live for twelve or fourteen days before its bite will transmit the disease; and if there is no patient to be bitten, or if there is a patient to be bitten and no mosquito to bite him and transmit the disease, it is impossible to propagate the disease. So the Isthmus may be said now to be absolutely free from the deadly disease of yellow fever.

The French suffered greatly from yellow fever. They were forced to cut down their force to a few immunes, and their work on the canal consequently practically ceased. They kept no complete statistics of deaths from yellow fever or from any cause, but their imperfect records show that from 1881 to 1889 in Ancon Hospital alone there were 1,200 deaths from yellow fever, and these were among the white French employees. The negroes employed by the French were not liable to the disease.

I give here some extracts from the testimony given by Col. W. C. Gorgas in the hearings before Members who visited the Isthmus in November last.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAWNEY). How long has it been since there has been a case of yellow fever on the Zone, or in either of the two cities, Panama or Colon?

Colonel GORGAS. In May, 1906, the last case occurred in Colon. It was officially reported as yellow fever. There was considerable doubt about its being a case, but it was so officially reported. The case that I myself consider as a case of yellow fever occurred last in Colon in December, 1905; but we have to go on the official reports.

The CHAIRMAN. What diseases are peculiar to that particular climate? What diseases are epidemic there?

Colonel GORGAS. To this part of the country?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Colonel GORGAS. Well, yellow fever is about the only one. Of course we are liable to the bubonic plague. We have never had it, but it is epidemic on the coast above and below us. Yellow fever is the only one that has ever been extensive here.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Then, as I understand you, the fever would have to be imported?

Colonel GORGAS. It can not be started here now, under the present condition, unless a case comes in from the outside.

The CHAIRMAN. So that a strict quarantine or a lax quarantine will determine whether or not we will be able to exclude this disease from the Zone?

Colonel GORGAS. The only thing that would absolutely prevent the disease would be to stop commerce altogether. No quarantine could absolutely guarantee you against a case getting in. The incubation period of the disease is six days from the day a man is bitten until he develops the fever.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Are measures taken by the doctors of the Marine-Hospital Service? Is there any inspection whatever of people coming out of ports like Colon and Panama?

Colonel GORGAS. They are inspected just as they are in the States.

The CHAIRMAN. So that, as I understand you, the only possibility under the present conditions of introducing yellow fever into the Canal Zone or into the cities of Colon and Panama would be to come from some other place, and just as soon as you have any information of the existence of yellow fever in any of those South American ports they are quarantined against, and the passengers coming from there are detained until their condition is ascertained definitely?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes; that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. So there is nothing in the conditions here at present naturally to produce yellow fever?

Colonel GORGAS. There has to be that factor of infection introduced from the outside.

The CHAIRMAN. The infection has to be introduced from outside?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask you a question or two before going away from the question of yellow fever. It requires a genuine case of yellow fever and the Stegomyia in order to inoculate those who are nonimmune?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes; and the presence of a considerable number of nonimmunes.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it possible for the Stegomyia to be brought in infected, so that it might, in contact with a nonimmune, spread yellow fever?

Colonel GORGAS. It is entirely possible; but personally I do not look upon it as probable. You see, it is possible, but I do not believe yellow fever is conveyed in that way very often.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask you whether the Stegomyia, having bitten a yellow fever patient, after, say, a period of four days of the disease, would become so infected that it would spread the disease?

Colonel GORGAS. No: it is considered that the patient will not transmit the disease after the third day.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought it was the fourth.

Colonel GORGAS. No; the third.

Mr. KEIFER. Another question: After the mosquito has bitten the patient within three days, how soon after that is the mosquito in a condition to impart yellow fever to a nonimmune?

Colonel GORGAS. From twelve to twenty days, according to the season; more rapid in the summer than in the winter. If you had a case of yellow fever in, and it was going to spread, it would depend upon the number of nonimmunes.

Mr. KEIFER. Twelve days at least would have to elapse after the mosquito had bitten a patient, and that patient in the first three days of the disease?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, this question: How long would the mosquito continue to be in a condition to impart the disease after the twelve days had elapsed?

Colonel GORGAS. Indefinitely, probably. When we were vaccinating in Habana we had a mosquito that was sixty-five days between the last and first imparting of the disease that it gave.

Mr. KEIFER. Then it would be practically throughout its life?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. If you could screen a patient from the mosquito for the first three or four days there would be no danger?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes; but it is practically impossible to insure that.

Mr. KEIFER. But it does a great deal toward it?

Colonel GORGAS. Yes; but I do not think it is by any means the most important measure. The destruction of the breeding places of the Stegomyia is the most important measure.

Mr. KEIFER. Of course, if you have not the Stegomyia you will not have the disease at all.

Colonel GORGAS. That is the most practical step toward the destruction of the disease.

I think I will put in my remarks the conclusion that was reached by the board that made the experiments in Cuba. The conclusion reached by that board is this, and I quote it:

1. The specific agent in the causation of yellow fever exists in the blood of a patient for the first three days of his attack, after which time he ceases to be a menace to the health of others.

2. A mosquito of a single species, Stegomyia fasciata, ingesting the blood of a patient during this infective period is powerless to convey the disease to another person by its bite until about twelve days have elapsed, but can do so thereafter for an indefinite period, probably during the remainder of its life.

3. The disease can not in nature be spread in any other way than by the bite of the previously infected Stegomyia. Articles used and soiled by patients do not carry infection.

The members of that board should be canonized for what they did for humanity, for material progress, and for civilization. Their conclusion was questioned for a time, Mr. Chairman, by learned scientists and medical men of Europe. They sent out boards to experiment about the disease and to attempt to show that yellow fever could be transmitted in some other way and through some other medium than as stated in Major Reed's board, but all of them reached the conclusion that the statement that I have just read concluded the whole subject. But enough of that.

Sanitation is the important thing. It was the essential thing that made it possible for the United States to proceed to construct this great canal. Some of you will wonder how this great sanitation work was accomplished from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, in general a distance of about 50 miles, with a breadth of zone of about 10 miles, through which the canal is being constructed. I can describe it now only imperfectly. First, Colonel Gorgas instituted the policy of draining all places, such as mesas and the like on the mountain sides, that were possible to be drained dry, so that they would not be a nesting or breeding place for any kind of mosquitos. Mosquitos always lay their eggs and breed in stagnant fresh water, never in sea water. When these places were drained dry there were still places where there was stagnant fresh water and where the mosquito could lay its eggs and they would hatch. These places were all carefully covered with oil and kept covered, which had the effect of destroying or preventing the eggs from hatching, and this put an end to the breeding of the mosquito, and in a short time, comparatively, the mosquito disappeared.

It seemed to me at one time as if Colonel Gorgas and his force down there were a little overparticular, but I guess I was mistaken. I believe it is one of his rules to prohibit people who live in the lowlands or on level lands along the line of this canal from keeping cows, because when the rainy season is on they might walk around in the damp places and with their hoofs make holes in the ground that would hold water and later constitute breeding places for mosquitoes. So particular were all these things carried out that there was accomplished what is almost a miracle, as compared with the miracles of old. And now we can proceed to construct this canal in the ordinary way, free almost from deadly tropical diseases. The rate of deaths in the cities of Colon and Panama was at one time about sixty, and for a time among the French it ranged between thirty and fifty per thousand. Now, among the Americans the percentage from death is from three to four per thousand—a marvelous transformation. The sick rate among the employees in October last was twenty-six per thousand, which compares favorably with the sick rate of the Army and Navy, but in the previous calendar year the sick rate was about fifty per thousand. The present sick rate seems to be lower than the French death rate at one period.

There are large and excellent hospitals at both ends (Colon and Ancon) and smaller, or temporary, ones at principal places all along the line of the canal where those who get sick or suffer accidents are cared for, and so this place is better cared for, probably, in sanitation and in medical and surgical attention than any other place in the world, whether tropical or not, where great operations are going on. And this encourages us to go forward with this herculean work to its final completion. While I am speaking on this subject I may say that there are great hospitals located on the heights of Ancon Hill, near and overlooking the Pacific Ocean, extending from near Panama city westward toward and near La Boca, the southern mouth of the canal. These are beautifully situated. All of the appointments are good and everything that is desirable for the care of the sick and injured will be found there. The French erected most of the Ancon hospital buildings. In addition to these and a large hospital at Colon there are, as I have already stated, emergency hospitals or dispensaries at all the principal places along the line of the canal—at Empire, at Culebra, at Bas Obispo, and at other places, perhaps. The purpose of these latter is that when an employee falls sick or an accident overtakes him he may soon be in the care and custody of a physician and nurses and in a temporary hospital at least within an hour. There is hardly a place that an accident could happen to an employee where he would not be cared for comfortably, and just as comfortably as anywhere in the world, within an hour. And then there is a hospital car that passes, I believe, once a day, or oftener if necessary, from one ocean to the other and to the dispensaries or temporary hospitals to pick up those who should go to a permanent hospital. Those who only need temporary treatment are ministered to in these temporary hospitals and then set to work again. There is also on the island of Taboga, in the Pacific Ocean, about 12 miles from La Boca, a convalescent hospital, built by the French, but now owned and run by the United States. It is a charming and healthful island, and the hospital is finely maintained.

This much is stated to give a little hint of what the medical department has accomplished and is accomplishing. We may feel now that we are carrying on a humane work, furnishing free sanitation and free medical treatment to all who are employed in constructing the canal. We have taught the whole world a lesson in sanitation. I have dwelt rather longer on this point than I intended. I have given importance to Col. W. C. Gorgas, one of the Commission, and who has charge of the sanitation of the Zone, and wisely, under the law and the treaty concession, has charge of the sanitation and everything relating to quarantine and to health in the cities of Colon and Panama, both of which lay within the Zone, but neither of which are included, for all purposes, in the Zone, or belong to the United States. But in order to protect everything carefully the United States has charge of the sanitation, including the marine and everything else connected with the quarantine and health departments of the two cities.

The Isthmian Canal Commission is at work, most of the Commissioners being on the ground on the Isthmus actively and personally engaged, and they are doing what I deem, and what I think I may say my colleagues who were with me on both occasions believe, everything possible to hasten the construction and the final completion of the canal. The present Commission is not responsible for all the existing conditions, methods or plans, or policies still pursued in carrying on the work, but I believe it is doing the best it can in the interest of the United States, all the inherited and tropical conditions being taken into account.

Lieut. Col. George W. Goethals, United States Army, chairman of the Commission and the chief engineer and in charge, lives upon the ground (Culebra), and he is to be found daily inspecting the work and giving directions.

Maj. D. D. Gaillard, United States Army, also lives at Culebra, and has, I believe, charge of all excavation and dredging.

Maj. William L. Sibert, United States Army, resides at Culebra, and has charge of the construction of the locks and dams and perhaps other construction work. I will not and can not here undertake to define all the duties of the several Commissioners, and I speak of them because I met them, and saw them at work, and to some extent looked into their mode of handling and managing men.

I should also mention Mr. H. H. Rosseau, United States Navy, civil engineer, who also resides at Culebra, and has charge of the municipal engineering, motive power, and machinery and building.

I met on the Zone my old friend Hon. J. C. S. Blackburn, the governor of the Zone, at present here on some public duty connected with the canal, but his place is on the Zone, and he is soon to return there. He is discharging splendidly the duties of his important position as civil administrator in the interest of good order, peace, and harmony among the entire people down there.

Mr. Jackson Smith (Culebra), one of the Commission, is manager and in charge of labor, quarters, and subsistence.

Mr. Joseph B. Bishop is secretary of the Commission and has his main office at Ancon, and his duties are many and important. Under each of the Commissioners named there are many highly accomplished, skilled, and trained men in charge of important divisions and parts of the work. The work of all kinds is in successful progress all along the line of the canal.

Now, a word or two in reference to the care of the employees. It is very hard in one speech to describe what is being done in that regard. We furnish homes for everybody there. We furnish those who are called bachelors rooms in which to live, with some furniture, water, fuel, baths, and electric light. Men with families have family quarters, and they are likewise furnished these things. These quarters are well constructed on heights near to the canal, and they meet the requirements of the climate. We furnish to the laborers and common employees homes, and to certain of them food. We furnish free schools and free schoolbooks to all classes of employees who have children to be educated. We have built churches all along the line; also public halls for amusements and for meetings of all kinds. The Young Men's Christian Association is well organized at all principal places. There are laundries, bakeries, and eating places for the employees. I have personally eaten with the laborers at their usual eating places down there, and the men complain about as much, and no more, than you do at some hotels in this city, where you live until you have gotten tired of the food. The food furnished is wholesome, abundant, and all that. The water supply is pure and ample. We are doing these things for our employed people, and if there is any just criticism to be offered at all it is because we are doing rather too much than too little for them in addition to the wages that we pay all the several classes of laborers. Employees are paid on two rolls, a gold roll and a silver roll. Those on the silver roll are paid in Panamanian silver. I would prefer to have them paid in United States silver. There are but few from the United States on the silver roll. That roll is chiefly composed of Europeans and Jamaicans. The former receive 40 cents silver (equal to 20 cents gold) and the latter 20 cents silver per hour.

I want to say in general that I believe the present managing board of the Isthmian Canal, collectively and individually, are all working harmoniously, keeping up harmony and a good spirit among the employees, and, as a consequence, the great work is going on everywhere on the Isthmus better than ever before, and in saying this I cast no reflection on other or earlier administrations. For the present management I desire to say that there is no serious criticism which can be made as to them as far as I could discover, and if my colleagues discovered any objection to their management they did not disclose it, and I heard no objection to their methods of proceeding. This is encouraging, and it is some consolation for the large amount of money we have appropriated for this canal in the past, for the large deficiency we propose to cover in this bill, and the larger amounts that will have to be made for some years in the future.

Now, a word or two about the canal. I think, perhaps, I may profitably call your attention to the map before us, so that those of you who are not thoroughly familiar with the location of the canal by having gone down on the ground or from having studied its geography, topography, and other physical conditions, will understand a little better the explanations I am able to give than you could otherwise.

It is common to say that the canal when finished will be 50 miles in length, measured from deep water (50 feet) in Limon Bay on the Atlantic side, to deep water in the Pacific Ocean. More accurately speaking, the canal will be 49½ miles long.

In looking at that map, I wish to say that the right hand of the map is the north part. The map would represent, according to the usual way maps are made or placed, that the canal ran east and west across the Isthmus, but in fact it runs, in general, north and south.

It is common also to speak of the canal extending from Colon on the Atlantic to Panama on the Pacific Ocean, from east to west. This is inaccurate. Colon is not at the initial of the canal on the Atlantic side and Panama City is full 4 miles eastward from the mouth of the canal (La Boca) on the Pacific side. And the Pacific end of the canal will be about 20 miles east of the Atlantic end.

There is a common notion also, that the canal when finished will be principally a narrow channel between banks for the greater part of its length, and that its construction consists mainly in excavation work. This is also far from being the case. There will be but about 9½ miles of the whole length, when fully completed, that will have the appearance of a canal with adjacent banks.

From deep water on the Atlantic (Caribbean Sea) side to the Gatun locks, a distance of about 7½ miles, it will be sea level, and from deep water on the Pacific side to the locks at Miraflores, a distance of about 9 miles, it will be sea level also, and, of course, sea water. This will make about 16½ miles, or about one-third of the whole line of the canal, a sea-water channel, in the construction of which there will be but comparatively little actual excavation, though dredging will be required, much of which has been done, and in considerable part, by the French.

The intervening distance between Gatun, where the first locks are located on the Atlantic side, and the Miraflores locks on the Pacific side, is, approximately, 33 miles, including all locks. But of this distance the channel or line of the canal will be through two artificial lakes. The larger lake will be formed by the Gatun dam, the surface area of which lake will be equal to 165 square miles, though it will be far from regular in form. Its water will be supplied by the Chagres River that intersects the line of the canal at or near Bas Obispo (Bishop), a distance of 22 miles, or thereabouts, from Gatun. Bas Obispo is called the south end of Lake Gatun and the north end of the canal proper. Bas Obispo is distant from Pedro Miguel, on the south (where locks are located), 9½ miles, and comprises within its limits the great Culebra (Snake) Cut, and actually that part of the whole distance from near Colon to La Boca could technically be termed "canal."

From Pedro Miguel to Miraflores (at each of which there are to be locks) the distance, inclusive of locks, is about 4 miles, about 2 miles of which will be an artificial lake, supplied by the Pedro Miguel River and other small streams. This lake was formerly to be about 5 miles across, the whole distance from Pedro Miguel to La Boca, where the last locks on the Pacific side were to be located.

It will be seen from these facts that a ship passing through the whole line of the canal will pass, going south from the Atlantic to the Pacific side, through 7½ miles of sea-water channel; thence through the locks of Gatun and over the Gatun Lake and through the channel or bed of the Chagres River 22 miles to Bas Obispo (about 10 of this 22 miles will be lake proper); thence 9½ miles through the Culebra Cut and canal proper to Pedro Miguel; thence through the Pedro Miguel locks and through the smaller lake to Miraflores, about 2 miles, and thence through the Miraflores locks into the sea-water channel, and through it, passing La Boca, about 9 miles to deep water in the Pacific, a whole distance, including all the locks, of 49½ miles.

Any seeming inaccuracies in the several distances given is on account of the locks and the length occupied by each. I have no means of accurately estimating their aggregate length, but it will be considerable.

Now, as to the locks, a word and I will pass on or be through. The principal locks will be at Gatun. Wherever a lock is deemed necessary it will be put in in duplicate. That is to say, if they build one series of locks for one line of ship travel, they will build a twin one by the side of it, so that if any accident should happen to one another might be used, and possibly both might be used under some circumstances. It is therefore proper to use the word "locks" instead of the word "lock."

It is proper to say that in the cuts for the canal proper the bottom of the canal through the cut will be 40 feet above sea level, and the mean depth of water that is expected to be maintained and required in the canal will be 45 feet, making the distance from sea level to the top of the water in the canal 85 feet. These are the specific measurements that are given in the plans, but in practice it will be found that this depth of water must be exceeded, especially in so far as the depth of the water in the Gatun Lake is concerned. The dam at Gatun will create the great Gatun Lake. If the water is necessary to be kept in the canal 45 feet deep, as has been calculated by the engineers, it would seem that the water in the lake, in order to provide for what wastage there will be, must ordinarily be more than that, in order that it may keep up to the desired height through the dry season of the year.

There are between four and five months, of the twelve months of the year, of dry season, that is, a period when little or no rain falls on the Isthmus. The dry season extends usually from about December 15 to April 15. If the top of the water in the lake is only 85 feet above sea level at the end of the rainy season, it will be drawn on through the dry season for the water necessary to be used to supply the locks with water when the canal is in operation, and this will require considerable; and its depth would be reduced by leakage, and other wasteage perhaps, and very largely by evaporation and by other natural, if not artificial, causes, so that it will have to be maintained, in fact, more than 85 feet in depth above sea level in the greater lake. I think it is estimated that it should be maintained usually from 5 to 8 feet above the 85 feet to take care of these necessary things.

Now, the locks at Gatun will be in triplet series. The water in each lock will be about 1,000 feet in length for the holding of ships, etc., going or coming, whichever way they may be proceeding. And each lock of the series will be 30 feet in its lifting or lowering capacity.

Then, as each lock will lift the vessel 30 feet, the three in succession at Gatun will bring a ship up 90 feet and into the lake proceeding from the Pacific side. Inversely a ship will be lowered from this lake by the locks. We generally speak of having the locks to lift only 85 feet, but what I have said will explain the necessity of having each of the three locks at Gatun and of the two at Pedro Miguel and of the one at Miraflores 30 feet at least. Now, as I have before stated, these locks are in all cases in duplicate. There are these three successive locks in Gatun, and machinery will have to be provided to control them, with their gates, etc., but I will not go further into that here. I understand that it has recently been decided by the engineers, on recommendation of the Navy Department, to construct all the locks 110 feet wide instead of 100 feet, as was formerly agreed upon, and that this has the approval of President Roosevelt and of Secretary of War Taft. This increase in width from 100 feet, formerly agreed upon, seems necessary to secure the passage of the large modern battle ships, also freight and passenger vessels. At Pedro Miguel there will be two sets of locks to lock up or down 60 feet; each will be 30 feet, as I have just explained, and that will accomplish the object sought. On the south of the small lake at Miraflores there will be another lock of 30 feet, and that brings us down to sea level on the Pacific side. These locks are the difficult things to construct, with the necessary dams; and I may say from what I have gathered from conversations with engineers and from observations on the ground and from hearing the testimony of officials as to the conditions, that it is more than likely that we will be working on the dams and locks and their gates after we have finished the great Culebra Cut and the 9½ miles of canal proper.

The actual work on the dam has hardly commenced. On the locks it is not expected to commence until about January next. Great preparations, however, are being made to do this work, and it may go forward faster than some of us anticipate.

I have said this much as to the physical conditions in order to give some idea, as it appears to me, of the character of this canal when it is finished, and of its capacity to carry the commerce of the world that is soon to pass through it.

It is difficult, Mr. Chairman, to pursue this line of discussion much further with profit, or to give in detail all the information that perhaps the committee would like to have. There is much more that could be said. As I recollect the statements of the witnesses called before us, principally members of the Commission, there was employed in November last on this work of all classes, including the Panama Railroad employees, something like 31,000 men. That number was then on the pay rolls, at least. Perhaps some of them were absent on leave and some sick. There are what they call the "gold employees," principally Americans, in the administrative work. There was an incomplete list given us which shows there were of the American class 4,992, and that there were of the West Indian employees 15,702, and of European laborers 5,134. I can not give from memory the numbers of all employees. It was most encouraging to witness the cheerful spirt of all classes of persons engaged on the work. There are large machine shops for repair of machines, tools, etc., assembling and rebuilding of locomotives at Gorgona, Empire, and other points. We have a great equipment all along the whole line of the canal. I think that the last report which I have seen shows that there were on the line of the railroad and in use in connection with the construction work in November, 1907, 184 locomotives. Some of them were old French locomotives rebuilt, and a considerable number were new American locomotives—above three locomotives to every mile of the canal. I can not now speak of the Isthmian railroad, operated largely in conjunction with the construction work of the canal. It is a most potential and necessary factor. The number of shovels and dredges and all those things that go to make up the equipment for the work I can not give. I do not think it would be of great benefit to undertake to give in detail all this information, if I possessed it, but if any of the committee desires to understand more about this canal and the nature and progress of the work, the care of employees, etc., the hearings that were taken before the members that visited the canal in November last will be accessible, and complete information of all kinds will be found embodied there, chiefly in the testimony of members of the Commission.

I have no desire to prolong this discussion further. The map I have called attention to and which is before us shows the location of the canal, and it shows the latest location of locks, dams, lakes, and cuts along the line of the canal very well. I understand those maps are accessible if Members desire to get them. I thank the committee for its attention. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY].

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Chairman, on the first day of the present session of the Sixtieth Congress I introduced a bill (H. R. 536) "To aid in the temporary support of the common schools," a copy of which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read as a part of the remarks I desire to submit on this occasion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for eight years next after the passage of this act there shall be annually appropriated from the money in the Treasury the following sums, to wit: The first year the sum of $7,000,000, the second year the sum of $10,000,000, the third year the sum of $15,000,000, the fourth year the sum of $13,000,000, the fifth year the sum of $11,000,000, the sixth year the sum of $9,000,000, the seventh year the sum of $7,000,000, the eighth year the sum of $5,000,000; which several sums shall be expended to secure the benefits of common school education to all the children of the school age mentioned hereafter living in the United States.

SEC. 2. That such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Teritories in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of 10 years and over, can not write, bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States; such computation shall be made according to the census of 1880.

SEC. 3. That no State or Territory shall receive any benefits of this act until the governor thereof shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, showing the character of the common school system in force in such State or Territory; the amount of money expended therein during the last preceding school year in the support of common schools, not including expenditures for the rent, repair, or erection of schoolhouses; whether the common school facilities are afforded to the white and colored children therein, and, so far as is practicable, the sources from which revenues are derived; the manner in which the same were apportioned to the use of the common schools; the number of white and the number of colored common schools; the average attendance in each class, and the length of the school term. No money shall be paid out under this act to any State or Territory that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age, without distinction of race or color, either in the raising or distributing of school revenues or in the school facilities afforded: Provided, That separate schools for white and colored children shall not be considered a violation of this condition. The Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the names of the States and Territories which he finds to be entitled to share in the benefits of this act, and also the amount due to each.

SEC. 4. That the amount so apportioned to each State and Territory shall be drawn from the Treasury by warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the monthly estimates and requisitions of the Secretary of the Interior as the same may be needed, and shall be paid over to such officers as shall be authorized by the laws of the respective States and Territories to receive the same.

SEC. 5. That the instruction in the common schools wherein these moneys shall be expended shall include the art of reading, writing, and speaking the English language, arithmetic, geography, history of the United States, and such other branches of useful knowledge as may be taught under local laws.

SEC. 6. The money appropriated and apportioned under the provisions of this act to the use of any Territory shall be applied to the use of common and industrial schools therein by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 7. That the design of this act not being to establish an independent system of schools, but rather to aid for the time being in the development and maintenance of the school system established by local government, and which must eventually be wholly maintained by the States and Territories wherein they exist, it is hereby provided that no greater part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid out to any State or Territory in any one year than the sum expended out of its own revenues or out of moneys raised under its authority in the preceding year for the maintenance of common schools, not including the sums expended in the erection of school buildings.

SEC. 8. That a part of the money apportioned to each State or Territory, not exceeding one-tenth thereof, may yearly be applied to the education of teachers for the common schools therein, which sum may be expended in maintaining institutes or temporary training schools, or in extending opportunities for normal or other instruction to competent and suitable persons, who are without necessary means to qualify themselves for teaching, and who shall agree in writing to devote themselves exclusively, for at least one year after leaving such training schools, to teach in the common schools for such compensation as may be paid other teachers therein.

SEC. 9. That no part of the educational fund allotted to any State or Territory shall be used for the erection of schoolhouses or school buildings of any description, nor for rent of the same.

SEC. 10. That the moneys distributed under the provisions of this act shall be used only for common schools, not sectarian in character, in the school districts of the States and Territories, in such way as to provide, as near as may be, for the equalization of school privileges to all the children of the school age prescribed by the law of the State or Territory wherein the expenditure shall be made, thereby giving to each child an equal opportunity for education. The term "school district" shall include all cities, towns, parishes, and other territorial subdivisions for school purposes, and all corporations clothed by law with the power of maintaining common schools.

SEC. 11. That no second or subsequent allotment shall be made under this act to any State or Territory unless the governor of such State or Territory shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement, certified by him, giving a detailed account of the payments or disbursements made of the school fund apportioned to his State or Territory and received by the State or Territorial treasurer or officer under this act, and of the balance in the hands of such treasurer or officer withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid or unexpended, and also the amount expended in such State or Territory as required by section 8 of this act, and also of the number of public, common, and industrial schools, the number of teachers employed, the total number of children taught during the year and in what branches instructed, the average daily attendance, and the relative number of white and colored children, and the number of months in each year schools have been maintained in each school district. And if any State or Territory shall misapply or allow to be misapplied, or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed, or to report as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, and the other matters herein prescribed to be so reported, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made: Provided, That if the public schools in any State admit pupils not within the ages herein specified, it shall not be deemed a failure to comply with the conditions herein. If it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the funds received under this act for the preceding year by the State or Territory have been faithfully applied to the purposes contemplated by this act, and that the conditions thereof have been observed, then the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute the next year's appropriation as is hereinbefore provided. The Secretary of the Interior shall have power to hear and examine any complaints of misappropriation or unjust discrimination in the use of the funds herein provided, and shall report to Congress the results thereof.

SEC. 12. That on or about the 1st day of September of each year the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the President of the United States whether any State or Territory has forfeited its right to receive its apportionment under this act, and how forfeited, and whether he has withheld such allotment on account of such forfeiture; and each State and Territory from which such apportionment shall be withheld shall have the right to appeal from such decision of the Secretary of the Interior to Congress.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior shall be charged with the practical administration of this act in the Territories, through the Commissioner of Education, who shall report annually to Congress its practical operation, and briefly the condition of common and industrial education as affected thereby throughout the country, which report shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, accompanying the report of his Department. And the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

SEC. 14. That no State or Territory that does not distribute the moneys raised for common school purposes equally for the education of all the children shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this act.

Mr. WILEY. To explain briefly, this measure has been drafted carefully, with a view to place the school question beyond the realm of politics, out of the reach of designing men who might desire to manipulate it for selfish ends, and with a sincere purpose to avoid the slightest interference with the different States in their sovereign capacity; in short, to utilize simply the wondrous resources of this Republic, unequaled in the history of the human race, which God in His goodness has given us, in order to roll back the dark cloud of illiteracy, which hangs like a deadly pall over many sections of this fair land.

The object of the bill is to give Federal aid temporarily to the common States of the country. It appropriates $7,000,000 the first year, ten millions the second year, fifteen millions the third year, thirteen millions the fourth year, and so on in graduated amounts, to five millions the eighth year—in all $77,000,000. The money is to be distributed to the States in the proportion that the whole number of persons of 10 years of age and over in each State who can not write bears to the whole population of the United States, provided that no State is allowed to receive a greater sum than shall equal what is expended out of its treasury for the maintenance of the common schools, not including certain amounts spent in the erection of school buildings. No money shall be paid to any State that shall not have provided by law a system of free common schools for all of its children of school age; but separate schools for white and colored children are permitted when required. It is further provided that not exceeding one-tenth part of the amount apportioned to a State may be applied to the support of normal schools for the training of teachers. Failure to comply with the conditions of the act or misapplication of the money apportioned to the State shall forfeit all claim to later apportionments, until compliance is assured and money misapplied is paid back or replaced by the State.

There are many other provisions in the bill, all designed to carry into effect its declared purposes of aiding the common schools and at the same time protecting the Federal Treasury against neglect or fraud in the application of the money appropriated.

Congress is not even allowed to say how the money shall be applied, while all control of studies is left to the State.

The General Government can not assume any control whatever over, or interfere with, the management of the educational system of the States. The bill does not, in the slightest manner, propose to change or alter any State law, to abridge the reserved rights of the States, or to meddle in any wise with the domestic economy of the people themselves or their right of control or regulation in their respective States. The measure is simply designed, by aiding our common schools with Federal money, to improve thereby what is everywhere recognized to be insufficient and struggling systems.

Amongst those rights with which our Creator has endowed us and defined in the Declaration of Independence as "unalienable" are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; to secure which "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." The true aim and end of civilized government are not only to secure the citizen in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, property, and happiness, and to protect him at home and abroad, but also to uphold his character and honor, to preserve his health and safeguard his morals. To effectuate these beneficent purposes in this grand American Union we must build up and maintain throughout the country a splendid and adequate system of common schools. I may be pardoned for indulging the trite saying that the well-being of communities depends in a large degree upon the establishment of a thorough system of efficient public schools for the education of the youth of the land—of those who are to come after us, who are to take our places when we have gone away, and who are, therefore, the prop and support, the stay and hope, for the preservation of that civil liberty which was won by the valor of our Anglo-Saxon forefathers.

Under our theory of government, the people are the rulers. They are the source of all legislative, judicial, and executive power. From them all political authority emanates. For this reason in the enactment of laws we seek to protect the rights of the individual in his sovereign capacity. It concerns the general welfare of the nation to educate its own citizens, every one of whom is presumed to possess kingly attributes. This general welfare of the nation creates the duty to provide the means of education and gives to the cause "all its importance as an affair of public concernment." As has been well said: "It is, of human things, the highest interest of the State to put the means of obtaining a good school education within easy reach of the largest number of her children." It results that the man, or set of men, who opposes Federal aid in support of popular education is lacking in both judgment and sagacity.

To quote the eloquent words of another—

> The public school question is as big and far-reaching as all other questions of human activities combined. Without knowledge a man is a superstitious brute; with a one-sided development man is a bigot, a boodler, or a monster. And so the school question must be discussed in all its far-reaching and varied utilities as touching the individual and the masses, as touching church and state, as touching home and government. Our schools must become the living and vitalizing soul of every community. They are a great mill into which we pour every kind and condition of people and expect that superior grist, American citizenship. How varied and yet how steadfast must be the influences to accomplish this great work, and what fullness of time they should have therefor!

It is plain that universal suffrage must be supplemented by universal education. This irresistible conclusion prompted the illustrious Vest, Missouri's great orator-statesman-Senator, to proclaim in yonder Senate Chamber:

> Universal education is the only instrumentality that can exorcise the evils that attend free suffrage.

In different phraseology Governor Hughes, of New York, in a public address, recently gave utterance to the same thought:

> In order to maintain democratic ideals it is necessary, as a fundamental principle, to open the door of opportunity to all classes.

Edward Everett declared:

> Education has become, in this country at least, one of the public birthrights of freemen.
> Our system of free schools has opened a straight way from the threshold of every abode, however humble, in the village or in the city, to the high places of usefulness, influence, and honor.

The poet said: "States are not great except as men make them." If that be true, it is manifestly an important duty of government to assist in the education of its destitute children. A great philanthropist has wisely said:

> The ignorance and weakness of the poor can not stand against the greed of the wealthy; and so we have multiplied the millions of the rich and have filched the pennies from the poor until in our cities the squalor of poverty devours honor and manhood like Pharaoh's lean kine, until the multitude of children playing in the gutters—many of whom have a garbage pile for a table and a dry-goods box for a bed—with emaciated bodies and brains are an ever-present protest against their own existence.

Beholding the dark and angry flood of corruption which constantly sweeps over high and low places in political and business affairs, both in public and in private life, is it now time for this nation to pause in its scramble for wealth long enough to ask in what direction are we drifting, and whither shall we turn for relief from the evils which beset us?

We are told every day that there is corruption in politics, weakness in society, commercialism in the newspapers, and schism in the churches; but we know that many homes are crushed and embittered by ignorance, poverty, and vice. Who can save us from this "body of death," morally and intellectually? To this question the answer is easy—the public school system, sustained by every possible financial resource and fostered, encouraged, and blessed by Christian teachers, whose lives are consecrated to God and humanity. Such a system is our city of refuge from the brood of ills which are hatched from the egg of ignorance.

We may lay down as a safe rule of action, as a guide for life's duties, this plain proposition, to wit: The proper care, discipline, and instruction of the child means righteous conduct on the part of the man. "As the twig is bent the tree inclines." Give every child the right inclination by training and culture, by a systematic cultivation and development of his natural powers, by a wholesome direction of his feelings, tastes, habits, and manners, and the Government will have gone a long way toward the abolition of the social evil, the divorce problem, gambling, drinking, grafting—all of man's inhumanities to man, which make "countless millions mourn."

Let us examine the statistics for a moment. There are in the United States 23,028,148 children of school age.

We find that there are enrolled in the public schools of the several States 16,256,038 pupils, and an average daily attendance of 11,318,256; therefore it is evident there are 11,710,522 children of school age on an average absent daily from school, who are either engaged in gainful pursuits or in harmful idleness.

The lesson taught by these figures, in my humble judgment, imperatively requires that the National Government should make a speedy and efficacious effort to aid the cause of education, as above defined, by all reasonable pecuniary means.

To those who have given the subject disinterested and patriotic consideration there is no escape from the conclusion that the development of the child, as I have tried to explain, is the basic principle of all free government—its paramount concern. The education of our children in a practical way, mentally and morally, means necessarily the highest good, the summum bonum, in governmental operations. Our public schools have become, therefore, the nation's ark of safety. Why? Because if this Government permits our tender and pliant youth to grow to manhood or womanhood in ignorance, prejudice, and vice it follows, as the shadow the substance, that the nation itself will be weak and corrupt; but if their mental and moral characters are stimulated, disciplined, enlightened, and elevated it will then become necessarily strong, stable, upright, and honorable.

Already the politicians are saying this well-meant bill is unconstitutional. Assertion is not argument. Misrepresentation is not proof; but such contention may have the effect to create such opposition to the measure under consideration as to result in its defeat. In that event it will not even become an academic question for literary discussion in debating societies.

I do not hesitate to declare that the bill, if ever enacted into law, will be upheld as constitutional.

It is provided by the Constitution that Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the Union. How it shall provide for the common defense and general welfare is not specified. The Supreme Court of the United States decided the national-bank act to be constitutional on the ground that Congress alone was the judge of the necessity of such an act. Under this "general welfare" clause large powers are invested in Congress, and the constitutionality of laws are now sustained by the United States Supreme Court, where, in the judgment of a majority of Congress, they are deemed needful either for the common defense or the general welfare.

This is the question in a nutshell.

We have progressed, whether rightly or wrongfully I will not undertake to say, from a narrow to a liberal construction of the Federal Constitution.

There can be no doubt that for many years in the history of this Government one of the cardinal tenets of the Democratic party was opposition to governmental aid for purposes of internal improvement. The party to which I have the honor to belong was in favor of a strict construction of the Federal Constitution and was strenuously opposed to what is commonly termed "paternalism," no matter what guise it wore or from what quarter it came. It set its face like flint against legislation making appropriations for the purpose of constructing roads and canals and improving the navigation of our water courses. As an evidence of this policy, on March 3, 1817, President James Madison vetoed a measure entitled "An act to set apart and pledge certain funds for internal improvements;" in short, appropriating money for the construction of roads and canals and for the improvement of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce amongst the several States and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions of the common defense.

In his veto message to Congress he employed these words:

The legislative powers vested in Congress are specified and enumerated in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, and it does not appear that the power proposed to be exercised by the bill is among the enumerated powers or that it falls, by any just interpretation, within the power to make laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution those or other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States.

The power to regulate commerce among the several States can not include a power to construct roads and canals and to improve the navigation of water courses in order to facilitate, promote, and secure such a commerce without a latitude of construction departing from the ordinary import of the terms strengthened by the known inconveniences, which doubtless led to the grant of this remedial power of Congress.

To refer the power in question to the clause "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" would be contrary to the established and consistent rules of interpretation as rendering the special and careful enumeration of powers which follow the clause nugatory and improper. Such a view of the Constitution would have the effect of giving to Congress a general power of legislation instead of the defined and limited one hitherto understood to belong to them, the term "common defense and general welfare" embracing every object and act within the purview of a legislative trust.

I am not unaware of the great importance of roads and canals and the improved navigation of water courses, and that a power in the National Legislature to provide for them might be exercised with signal advantage to the general prosperity. But seeing that such a power is not expressly given by the Constitution, and believing that it can not be deduced from any part of it without an inadmissible latitude of construction and reliance on insufficient precedents; believing also that the permanent success of the Constitution depends on a definite partition of powers between the General and the State governments, I feel constrained to veto this measure.

Again on March 4, 1822, President James Monroe vetoed a bill for "the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road," declaring that, in his opinion, Congress did not possess the power to establish turnpikes, build post-roads, or engage in works of internal improvement.

The question here presented was well defined and clean cut.

There can be no doubt of the Democratic position eighty years ago, but that policy has now entirely changed.

The millions expended every year by the General Government in building forts, constructing post-roads, and in improving rivers and harbors, as well as the numerous bills now pending before Congress asking aid for public roads and highways, demonstrate that the logic of events, the progress and prosperity of the country, our material growth and national exaltation, the genius and civilization of the age in which we live, all require the adoption of a less restrictive policy than that which the Democratic party, prior to the late civil war, was wont to observe, particularly in view of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, as before stated, have put a broad interpretation upon the powers contained in the Constitution which Congress, for the most part, has recognized and adopted, because in practice, it can not be denied, Congress has been very liberal, yea, latitudinous, in the construction of its legislative functions. It not only supports the Army and Navy, but also the Military and Naval academies in which to educate young men especially for that character of martial service. It not only builds forts but improves rivers and harbors, so that they can be better navigated. It has enacted the oleomargarine law to prevent discrimination against pure butter, as well as other similar measures looking to the health and morals of the people, saying in many instances, what shall we eat, what shall we drink, and wherewithal we shall be clothed. It has made appropriations to establish fish hatcheries, to distribute seeds, to survey soils and preserve forests and waterfalls. It has indorsed, and continues to indorse, the notes of national banks in order to give them value to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars. It not only builds post-roads, but guarantees the bonds of railroad companies for vast sums to aid in constructing railways on the ground that they may be needed for carrying the mail and in transporting troops. It has given subsidies to ships and common carriers, as well as bounties to sugar made from both cane and beet; and, in recent years has made provision for irrigating arid lands in the far West. At this time the Government is engaged in the stupendous work of digging the Isthmian Canal to connect the two great oceans of the world.

A few years ago, upon the report of a failure of crops in Oklahoma, Congress voted rations for the needy boomers, while at the same time thousands of laborers were at work, under governmental pay, in throwing up proper defenses against future overflows of the Mississippi River. It has laid out and beautified magnificent national parks, maintains many Soldiers' Homes, and cares for the burying grounds of the gallant dead who followed the Stars and Stripes during the civil war. It has also made ample provision for marking the graves of Confederate soldiers and sailors whose lifeless bodies repose in the cemeteries of different Northern States.

It has passed bills to require railroads to use safety appliances for coupling cars; to tax State-bank money out of existence; to purchase lands, to build warehouses, stock and care for whisky; to purchase Alaska; to buy the Philippine Islands; to devote millions of acres of the public domain to corporations; to appropriate money for flood and fire sufferers; to send expeditions to the North Pole; to lend as well as donate money to industrial expositions and world fairs; to grant pensions to soldiers and their widows, and to make pecuniary outlays in many other instances where no provision is made therefor by express warrant in the Constitution.

The Fifty-ninth Congress enacted the national quarantine bill, the denatured alcohol bill, the pure-food bill, the meat-inspection bill, the Hepburn rate bill, the San Francisco earthquake bill, the cattle-tick bill, the boll-weevil bill, etc.

Not long since Senator BEVERIDGE, of Indiana, delivered an address under the auspices of the Forum at Yale University. His subject was, "The Meaning of the Times." I quote with approval the following true and forceful words which he employed on that interesting occasion, in defense of this last-mentioned legislation. He said:

When we stopped the robbery of the nation's forests, the robbers called it paternalism; when we stopped the sale of poisoned food and diseased meats, the sellers called it socialism; when we are trying to stop stock juggling, criminal rebates, and the like, the jugglers call it a raid on prosperity; when we try to stop government by graft and politics by purchase, those who grow rich by graft and get high places by purchase call our work interference with private affairs in the one case and assault upon respectability in the other case.

Let us not forget that, several years ago, Congress passed a bill making "a grant of land to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons;" also a bill "setting aside the net proceeds of the sales of public lands and the receipt from patents as an educational fund amongst the several States;" also the bill to aid the States in the establishment of agricultural and mechanical colleges, as well as the Hatch bill, under which experimental farm stations are established in each and every one of our "sovereign States."

Persons who oppose Federal aid to our common schools seem to find no inconsistency in the positions they occupy in upholding large appropriations to encourage and support agricultural and mechanical colleges, normal schools, and experimental stations, or to inspect meats, secure good food, and preserve the public health, or to exterminate cattle ticks, caterpillars, and cotton worms, or to care for the indigent insane, or to devote the proceeds of the sale of public lands to school purposes; but any endeavor, however feeble, to outstretch a helping hand in the way of applying tax money to aid in the temporary support of the common schools is regarded as nothing short of iniquitous, as glaringly unconstitutional. In the language of the late lamented Senator James L. Pugh (who ardently supported the Blair bill), "the man who comes as a friend with valuable gifts to your State for the education of your children, is denounced as a briber, a usurper, an enemy of your rights and liberties. His offer is spurned, and he himself is driven from your door as a public criminal."

I fail to perceive any difference between the power of Congress to appropriate land money, and the power of Congress to appropriate tax money, to aid temporarily in the support of common schools in the several States.

Nor am I alone in this construction of the powers of the Federal Constitution. Many eminent men, whose useful lives and distinguished services have ornamented the history of this Republic, have entertained the same opinion which Mr. Pugh himself expressed upon that subject in his able speech in advocacy of the Blair bill. In clear, ringing, and commanding words, in the use of which he had few equals and no superior, he declared:

I have no doubt Congress has as much power under the Constitution to appropriate revenue collected by taxation as Congress has to appropriate revenue collected from the sale of public lands and receipts from patents to the support of common schools in the several States.

Much of the legislation to which I have invited the attention of Members upon this floor has been predicated upon nothing more nor less than the implied powers of Congress, and was enacted under what is known as the general-welfare clause of the Constitution. Congress is the sole judge as to when and where and how these implied powers shall be invoked under this general-welfare clause. In short, almost any and every thing intended for the common defense and general welfare lies within the legislative province of Congress.

In the great case of McCullough v. The State of Maryland, reported in 4 Wheaton, page 316, the question was whether or not Congress had the power to incorporate a bank. And it was held that Congress had the constitutional authority to establish a banking corporation, not in the exercise of a distinct sovereign power or end of government, but as a means of carrying into effect other powers which are sovereign.

Chief Justice Marshall, in the magnificent opinion which he delivered in that case, declared, among other things, the following great truths, to wit:

The Government of the Union is a government of the people. It emanates from them; its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them and for their benefit.

While the powers not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, are reserved to the States or to the people, there is nothing in the Constitution which requires that everything granted shall be expressly and minutely described.

A constitution to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit and of all the means by which they may be carried into execution, would partake of the prolixity of a legal code, and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deducted from the nature of the objects themselves.

Provision is made in a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government should, in all future time, execute its powers would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and to give to it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide by immutable rules for exegencies, which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly and which can be best provided for as they occur.

What a grand and glorious judicial character was John Marshall, "the oracle of American law," not of Virginia alone, but the universal favorite and favored son of this splendid Republic of free, separate, independent, and sovereign States. With a mental vision as clear and strong as the eagle's brilliant eye while gazing upon the fierce splendors of the noonday sun, he foresaw and has outlined for all time to come, as no other man before or since his day has ever essayed to do, the dual yet distinct capabilities and potentialities of both State and Federal governments, acting together, jointly and severally, beautifully and harmoniously, without jar or friction, each seeking the greatest good to the greatest number, and neither abating one jot or tittle of the lawful authority belonging to the other or resulting legitimately from the combined action of both.

The extract which I have just read in the McCullough case from that eminent jurist demonstrates that it was an impossibility for the framers of the organic law of the nation to have incorporated into its provisions all the incidental powers of government, and hence that Congress in the exercise of its implied powers can rightfully enact almost any law which that body judges to be useful or necessary for the common defense or general welfare of the people in the broadest and most comprehensive sense or meaning that may be applied to these words.

In the light of these facts, in the presence of all this remarkable character of legislation (much of which I do not approve), surely no liberal-minded, patriotic gentleman, when he takes time to reflect, ought to object to a bill which proposes to give Federal aid, for a few years only, in support of our common school systems, for the education of the youth of the country, for the benefit of our tax-ridden people, for the good which is bound to redound to the general welfare, particularly where it is manifest that many of the States, like my own native Alabama, are not able at this time, singly and alone, to make adequate provision for their full, complete, thorough, and successful maintenance.

Edward Everett, the scholar and orator, gives us this definition of human knowledge:

It is the cultivation and improvement of the spiritual principle in man. By knowledge the wings of the intellect are spread; by ignorance they are closed and palsied, and the physical passions are left to gain the ascendency. Knowledge opens all the senses to the wonders of creation; ignorance seals them up and leaves the animal propensities unbalanced by reflection, enthusiasm, and taste.

The importance of education for all can not be controverted or underestimated, for there is nothing that makes the body or so much esteem in the eye of the Great Being who formed it as the fact that there is included within it an immortal spirit whose flames can never be quenched but by an almighty act. The mind is God's masterpiece, His crowning work.

Mental improvement and moral development stand, therefore, in the front rank of every other interest.

They vitalize the social, civil, religious, and political fabric. They constitute the philosopher's stone, which converts the base metal into pure gold. They kindle the bright fires of honor and cause high feelings to swell in the soul. They distinguish the noble from the base, and lift us victorious over toil, pain, and suffering. They curb the tyrant's power and stay the despot's arm. Nobility were nothing without them, while liberty finds her best bulwark, her strongest tower of defense, in their encouragement, cultivation, and fostering care.

An enthusiastic old Greek once grandly exclaimed: "The wealth of the mind is the only true wealth." The prejudices which depose, the superstitions which enslave, vanish before an educated mind. The wealth which knowledge gives fate can not lessen, reverse can not reach, the seasons can not blight, nor fraud steal away.

In the language of Job—

No mention shall be made of corals or of pearls; for the price of wisdom is above rubies. The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, neither shall it be valued with pure gold.

"Knowledge is the principal thing," saith Solomon.
Therefore, get knowledge, and
With all thy getting get understanding;
Exalt her and she shall promote thee!
She shall bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace her!
She shall give to thine head an ornament of grace,
A crown of glory shall she deliver thee!

Mr. Chairman, believing that Congress has the power to vote the appropriation which this bill calls for, in which the people of my State will receive a share and derive a substantial benefit, and believing also that there resides in Congress the duty and obligation to aid the struggling and tax-burdened States to carry on and maintain these common schools, I make this appeal in behalf of the poor boys and girls of Alabama.

I ask the people's Representatives from the other States, here and now, will you fail to come up to the full measure of your responsibilities? Will you refuse to heed the voice of your constituents in a matter so grave, so far-reaching in its consequences to them? Will you omit to do your duty in this respect? It remains to be seen. I hope not. I pray not. The cause is glorious. Here is a golden opportunity to accomplish some practical good for the "common masses of the common people." Will you avail yourselves of the chance thus offered? It remains to be seen. Let it be our boast that we inherit a land "of liberty and light." Let the schoolhouse and the church be our national landmarks. Let freedom and knowledge, morals and religion be our birthrights and the birthrights of our children forever. [Applause.]

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, in my short time on this earth I have had several hard things said about me, but I never was referred to before as "the gentleman from Arkansas," although it is a mighty goods State. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as this is the first time I have had occasion to address the House, it seems to me that it is proper and fitting that I should take advantage of the opportunity offered and on behalf of the people of the youngest and the greatest State in the Union to thank the Members of the House and Senate who, by their votes, struck from us the shackles of territorialism and clothed us in the vesture of American citizenship. While it is true that statehood was a long time coming to us, and while when it did come it was upon conditions such as were never before demanded of the people of any Territory as the price of admission into the Union, yet so anxious were we to be emancipated, for so long a time had we borne the burdens of a Territorial form of misgovernment, that when on that never-to-be-forgotten 16th day of June, 1906, the glorious news was flashed to us that Oklahoma, the "Land of the Fair God," was at last free, was at last given the rights which had for so long a time been denied us, a mighty shout of joy went up all over our new State.

Now, this is convincing to me at least, Mr. Chairman, that the people of Oklahoma are not in any event an ungrateful people, and is a further illustration of the truth of the old saying that "every rose has its thorn." I know and realize that the Members of this body are better informed concerning the conditions which prevail in Oklahoma than the rest of our citizens who reside without our borders, but since I have been here I have found and heard so many erroneous ideas prevailing in regard to my State and people that I trust I will be pardoned if I take up a few moments of the time allotted me and tell you something of what has been going on down there and something of the progress and the development that have taken place, something of the conditions with which we have had to contend, and of our needs at this time. I feel I am further justified in this because of the fact that this is the first time Oklahoma as a State has been represented in this body. Now, simply as an instance and to call to your mind the rapidity with which we have moved in Oklahoma, I want to cite to you a few facts. The part of our State known as "old Oklahoma," and which comprises but a small portion of our entire State, was only open to settlement eighteen years ago, and the north half of old Oklahoma, which is known as the "Strip," was opened only fourteen years ago. The southwestern portion of our State, the Kiowa and Comanche country, which my colleague from the Fifth District represents, was only opened six years ago. While it is true that the northwestern portion of our State was opened longer for settlement, yet, as a matter of fact, it was not settled until within the last four or five years. The eastern portion of our State, comprising as it does what was Indian Territory, and being composed entirely of Indian lands, and the restriction against the alienation of the same being so rigid, can scarcely be said even at this time to be open to settlement. Now, these conditions are not such as can be said to be an incentive to the upbuilding of a new State. In addition, we were hampered for the want of proper legislation. We were burdened by outrageously excessive freight rates and inadequate railway facilities. One-half of our people had no voice whatever in the enactment of their laws or in the selection of their public officials, and, in addition, were practically bound and gagged by a perfect maze of departmental rules and regulations, but in spite of all these conditions Oklahoma has steadily forged to the front and has in a few years outclassed, surpassed, and left far in the rear many of the older States.

I want to tax your patience for a moment to read you just a few statistics to show you how great has been the progress that has been going on. For instance, Oklahoma to-day among the States ranks first in the production of broom corn, and we produce all of our broom corn just in a small portion of the State. We rank sixth in the production of cotton, and it has only been within a few years since we first began to cultivate cotton in Oklahoma. She ranks seventh in the production of cattle, ninth in the production of corn, eleventh in the production of horses and mules, twelfth in the production of hogs, and twelfth in the lowest per cent of illiterate whites. That makes me think—I do not know that there is anything in it, but it is worth the noting—that our rank in the production of hogs and illiterates is just the same. [Laughter.] She ranks thirteenth in the production of wheat and the same in the amount of railway mileage, fourteenth in the value of farm machinery, fifteenth in the production of oats, twenty-third in population, etc. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, Oklahoma, although admitted as the forty-sixth State, yet the very moment she had an opportunity to compete and measure strength with her sister States immediately jumped to twenty-fourth place. I believe you may search the pages of history, but you will not find recorded there another instance of such remarkable growth and development. Now, if I should be asked to state the cause of this rapid progress my answer would have to be that it was twofold. First, our splendid, magnificent citizenship [applause], and, second, our wonderful natural resources. We have in Oklahoma to-day a million and a half of people, and I say right here that no State in the Union can show a better class of citizens or a higher class of citizenship.

These people come from almost every State in the Union. Every town, city, hamlet, and village has furnished its quota.

For instance, the State which furnishes our Presidents, the great State of Ohio, has sent 28,000 of her sons and daughters to the State of Oklahoma. And I might remark that it does not seem to have diminished her supply of presidential timber in the least. And I might further remark, as the thought comes to my mind, and I am not a prophet and I do not pose as one, yet it is possible that neither one of Ohio's illustrious sons will be our next President, and at the same time it is possible that Ohio will not be left out entirely in the cold, because it is within the realms of possibility that a former illustrious son of that State, but who is to-day an illustrious adopted son of the State of Oklahoma, and who occupies the highest office in the gift of the people of that State, may be our next President. [Applause.] But in any event, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the delegation in this House from Ohio should be interested in Oklahoma's welfare.

Then, another State which has furnished us with Presidents and who liked it so well wants to do so again, and which already has one avowed candidate for the Presidency—and I have not any doubt that many others who are hoping and daily praying that the Presidential lightning will strike them—is the State of Indiana. She has sent 34,000 of her people to Oklahoma. And another State which has Presidential aspirations and which would like to see her illustrious son promoted from the speakership of the greatest legislative assembly in the world to the White House, the State of Illinois, has increased Oklahoma's population by 57,000.

Take the rock-ribbed Republican State of Iowa, one of the finest States in the Union—my native State, and I am proud of it, and I hope she is, too—the State of Iowa has sent 63,000 of her people to Oklahoma. And she has done so without in any way diminishing her Republican majority. But as there is a silver lining to every cloud, so there is cause for rejoicing in this instance because of the fact that the Iowa contingent in Oklahoma, in addition to being mighty fine citizens, have, since they have located in the land of sunshine and of balmy breezes, seen the error of their former political ways and are to-day voting the Democratic ticket. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Take the State of Kansas, which has, as a matter of fact, more Democrats and Populists who regularly vote the Republican ticket than any other State in the Union, Kansas certainly must have a friendly feeling toward Oklahoma, because there are to-day 112,000 former Kansans living in the Land of the Fair God.

Some people may not understand why the grand old Commonwealth of Missouri took a backward step in 1904 when she cast her electoral vote for a Republican for President. My eloquent friend from Missouri [CHAMP CLARK] gave one reason why that was so here the other day, but I want to give another reason, and that is that 120,000 Missouri Democrats are to-day living in Oklahoma.

The grand old State of Texas, an empire so far as her territory is concerned, but the greatest democracy in our country so far as her laws and the sentiments of her people are concerned [applause on the Democratic side]—the grand old State of Texas heads the list, and has sent to Oklahoma 153,000 of her sturdy sons and beautiful daughters.

I have here the statistics showing the immigration from the various States to Oklahoma, computed from the last census, and as the same is too long to read I ask that it be incorporated with my remarks in the RECORD:

Ohio, 28,000.
Indiana, 34,000.
Illinois, 57,000.
Iowa, 63,000.
Kansas, 112,000.
Missouri, 128,000.
Texas, 153,000.
Kentucky, 32,000.
Louisiana, 5,100.
Maine, 600.
Maryland, 1,120.
Massachusetts, 800.
Michigan, 4,800.
Mississippi, 22,400.
Montana, 222.
Nebraska, 16,000.
Nevada, 48.
New Hampshire, 280.
New Jersey, 830.
New York, 7,100.
North Carolina, 8,132.
North Dakota, 430.
Oregon, 510.
Pennsylvania, 11,200.
Rhode Island, 115.
South Carolina, 3,200.
South Dakota, 880.
Tennessee, 48,000.
Utah, 140.
Virginia, 9,600.
Washington, 430.
West Virginia, 3,200.
Wisconsin, 4,900.
Wyoming, 200.
Alabama, 8,480.
Arizona, 400.
Arkansas, 99,200.
California, 1,150.
Colorado, 2,500.
Connecticut, 380.
District of Columbia, 112.
Florida, 575.
Georgia, 18,000.
Idaho, 160.

The great majority of those who have come and settled within our State are young people. They have gone there for the purpose of building for themselves the grandest institution in the world—an American home. We are absolutely a State not only of home builders but of home owners. There are more people living in Oklahoma to-day, according to the population, who own their own homes than in any State in the Union. And then another thing that comes to my mind. It will not be denied, I believe, but that the high type of citizenship which is peculiar to our country is due to a great extent to the infusion of blood that has taken place because of the immigration to our shores of the people of all nations, and the infusion of blood which will take place in Oklahoma is bound to produce a citizenship that will cause her to assume the first rank in the sisterhood of States.

Now, as to our resources, briefly. They in variety excel any other State. It has been said, and truly, too, that if a wall should be built along the borders of Oklahoma and so constructed as to absolutely shut off all ingress or egress, our people would not want a single article of convenience or comfort that we could not produce. Our farms produce in abundance everything that grows out of the ground. We pave our city streets with our own asphalt, and we have enough to supply the world. We build our public buildings and residences out of our own marble, granite, brick, and lumber, and cement them with our own cement, of which we have an inexhaustible supply. We cook our food, heat our homes, and run our factories with natural gas, which is supplied by a thousand wells. We have one of the greatest, if not the greatest, oil fields in the world to-day. We produce a fine quality of coal in abundance, and our coal industry, the same as our other industries, has scarcely begun to be developed. We have a large supply of iron and other ores. In fact, so wonderful are our resources, if I should proceed to give them in detail at greater length I fear I might establish a reputation for truth and veracity that might not be desirable.

We have heard it said that God, after the creation of man, looked upon his handiwork and said it was good, but not very good, and then, profiting by His experience, He created another being who in face, form, and beauty was far superior to his first creation, man; and this second being he called woman, because she came after man, and, incidentally speaking, I have heard it said that she has been after him ever since [laughter]; but, however that may be, Mr. Chairman, as I have viewed the wondrous glories of my State, I have often thought that our Creator after he had fashioned other portions of our country for the habitation of man and stored the warehouses of nature for his comfort and convenience had not been entirely satisfied with his handiwork, and desiring a perfect home for his children He bestowed all of his wisdom and power in the creation of that portion of our country now called Oklahoma [Applause], but which, on account of her wonderful beauty, surpassing, as she does, all other States as woman surpasses man, is now coming to be everywhere known as the "Land of the Fair God," as the greatest and grandest Commonwealth ever created of God to bless and prosper mankind.

Now, one more thought, and that is this. Oklahoma has attained to her position to-day practically without outside help or influence. One-half of our State until this session has never been represented on this floor in any way. The other half only by a Delegate, and consequently Oklahoma has not been the beneficiary of much-needed legislation and appropriations which other States have enjoyed. Oklahoma should have been a State ten years ago, and it was not her fault that she was not, either, and I believe many within the sound of my voice to-day will agree with me in this proposition. In any event, but for this fact she would have been enjoying all those advantages, and so I say justice and equity surely demand that she be not further denied her just claims and demands.

I apprehend that the most important legislation we will ask for at this session will be that the restriction against the sale of Indian lands be removed, and that we be allowed liberal appropriations for public buildings.

I do not intend at this time to enter into a discussion of either of these questions, as such discussion will be more proper before the committees or after bills have been reported. But I do want to say that in asking for the removal of restrictions we are asking it just as much in the interest of the Indian as of the white man. Anyone can readily understand that such legislation will be beneficial to our State, and those who are acquainted with the conditions which surround the Indians in Oklahoma must agree that such legislation will be beneficial to them. A child that has always been dependent on us for its care will never grow to the stature of a man. Any person, whether Indian or white man, who is always treated as a child will always be a child. There is no question possible but that the Indians of our country at times have not been treated as they should have been; but I firmly believe that they have received no treatment which has resulted in greater injury to them than this policy that they are but children and should be treated as such.

In addition, you can not rightfully place all Indians in one class and label them incompetent any more than you can all white men. I believe no one will say, for instance, that the senior Senator from Oklahoma, a man of splendid business ability, of classic education, and superior mental attainments, or my colleague from the Fourth District [Mr. CARTER], who is his equal in every respect, are incompetent to manage and transact their own business.

And yet they are so decreed to be, to a great extent, by the law of our land, and there are thousands of other Indians in Oklahoma fully as competent to transact their business who are denied their rights as citizens in this regard.

Now, all Oklahoma asks is that you consider this question from every standpoint; that you consider it from the standpoint of the white man, and also from the standpoint of the Indian, and if you do we are convinced that you will say that those of our citizens who went to Oklahoma at the opening and who by their energy, their industry, and their frugality have caused that old wilderness to blossom like the rose——

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. From the way the Indians have developed down there, I assume that a great many of them are not in tribal relations. I should like to know whether the great majority of them still live in tribal relations?

Mr. FULTON. I am unable to answer the question in the absolute figures. In the Five Civilized Tribes there are no tribal relations, and the majority of the Indians do not maintain tribal relations to-day. They are all citizens of the United States. They have exactly the same rights and powers as every other citizen, and it raises a very nice legal question which, however, I do not care to discuss at this time.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask another question?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are many of the members of these Five Civilized Tribes pure Indians, or are most of them mixed?

Mr. FULTON. I am not as well acquainted with the Five Civilized Tribes, because they are outside of my district, as I am with the others, but I should judge a majority of them are mixed.

Mr. DRISCOLL. We have in our county a tribe of Indians who are very largely pure Indians, and I have visited another tribe up in Canada, of whom I think none were pure Indians, but all were mixed or very largely mixed, and predominating in white blood. Is that true of the Five Tribes down there?

Mr. FULTON. I should say that the great majority of the members of the so-called "Five Civilized Tribes" are of mixed blood.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was speaking in the interest of the white citizens, that they should not be compelled, after having increased the value of the lands of their Indian brothers, to bear the entire burden of taxation. Then I think, on the other hand, if you will look into this question you will see that in justice to the Indian himself the swaddling clothes which have bound him in his youth, and which have so retarded his growth and development, should be removed, and that he should be permitted to show himself as he is, every inch of him a man.

Just one other point. Although my time is not quite up, I see that I have taken up too much time on Oklahoma; but there is one other thought that comes to my mind in regard to public buildings. I just want to give you an illustration, so that when these matters come up, although I know you are posted now, I may present some ideas that you have not heard of. I do not know as the committee has decided whether or not any public-building bills shall be passed, but I simply call your attention to the conditions as they exist in my own district. My district numbers fifteen counties, with a total population, as shown by the last census, taken in July or August of last year, of over 280,000, and there is not a single Federal building in the entire district. Oklahoma City, which is the metropolis, not only of the State but of the entire Southwest, is in this district. Now, we are all proud of Oklahoma City. There is not a person who lives in the State of Oklahoma but is ready and willing to bear witness to our wonderful city. She is wonderful in many respects. She bears the distinction of being the largest city in the world for her age, being only 18 years old and having a population of 40,000—that is, that was the population she had when I left there two months ago. She is growing at the rate of a thousand a month, and I think I am safe in saying that her population to-day is at least 42,000.

Now, she has other things to recommend her beside her mere size. She is not of a mushroom growth. She is solidly and substantially built. Our citizens have contributed millions of dollars in public improvements, and neither is she a boom city in any sense of the word. Her growth has been rapid, yet, as a matter of fact, it has not been as rapid as that of the surrounding country. So it is a conservative estimate that in the next eight or ten years, under ordinary conditions, and provided that the present brand of prosperity does not continue too long, the population of Oklahoma City will be from 125,000 to 150,000 people.

Now, I want to call your attention to a few figures in support of my statement that Oklahoma City has been substantially builded. We have 40 miles of paved streets, paved with asphalt; we have 150 miles of cement and brick sidewalk; we have 53 miles of sanitary sewers; we have 26 miles of storm sewers; we have 50 miles of water main. We have 36 miles of street railways and an interurban line in course of construction to Guthrie; we have a municipal waterworks system valued at $565,000, with a capacity of 12,000,000 gallons. We have an electric-light plant, furnishing power for 700 users and for 500 arcs and 35,000 incandescent lights. We have a telephone system, with 7,000 connections; we have 10 banks, with total resources of $8,573,195. We have the only packing house in the State and another one coming to us. Our flour mills have a capacity of 1,020,000 barrels. We have a $125,000 court-house and a $30,000 city hall and a $50,000 public library. We also have a convention hall with a seating capacity of 5,000, and I want to remark that we are fast becoming the convention city in the Southwest. We have 12 public school buildings, valued at $650,000, one university, two colleges, one business college, 26 churches, with property valued at $1,000,000. We have 89 manufacturing establishments, employing 3,405 laborers. We have 62 jobbing houses, employing 1,112 people. We have four trunk railways, reaching 75 per cent of the trade without transfer. We have 4 daily and 17 weekly and monthly papers. Our post-office receipts for 1907 were $181,234, a gain over 1906 of $39,725, and over 1900 of $150,589.

I might state, in addition, that the Federal court of the western district of Oklahoma sits at Oklahoma City, and that we are greatly in need of a building for court purposes. A site for a post-office and court building has been secured, so all that we now need is an appropriation for a building which, we trust, will be given us at this session.

Now, Oklahoma City is not the only city in my district which is in need of and entitled to appropriations for a public building.

El Reno is the next city in size in the district, having a population of over 6,000 and growing rapidly. El Reno is one of the division points of the Rock Island Railroad. The post-office receipts last year were $18,437.20, a gain of 16 per cent over 1906. The following are some of the industries of the city: A vitrified brick plant with capacity of 50,000 per day; an artificial stone plant; planing mill; washing-machine manufactory; china-ware plant costing $150,000; one iron foundry and two machine shops; one canning factory, with capacity of 40,000 cans per day; one automobile manufactory; cotton compress and cotton gin; flour mills having capacity of 2,000 barrels per day; electric-light plant costing $150,000. As evidence that the city is growing rapidly at this time there is now under construction, Masonic hall to cost $35,000; five-story hotel to cost $80,000; 5 miles of paved street; 6 miles of street railway; city hall to cost $25,000; factory for manufacture of porcelain ware to cost $100,000; extension of sewerage mains to cost $25,000.

Anadarko, Alva, and Woodward are three more cities which are rapidly assuming the proportions of real cities and which are greatly in need of better and more adequate post-office facilities. I do not have with me at this time the statistics relative to these cities, but do know them to be cities of solid and substantial growth. In fact, there are few, if any, of the cities in Oklahoma but which are behind instead of ahead of the country surrounding them. That each of these cities will have a population of at least 5,000 in the next two or three years can not be doubted.

Now, I hope Members will not forget these statistics I have quoted, and I trust when it comes to legislation that you are not going to forget those who only a short time ago were your constituents. I believe it is true that there is not a single district in our country to-day but has within its borders more than one person who is interested in Oklahoma's welfare because of a father or a son or a daughter or a brother or a sister or some loved one who is residing there; and so when I plead for Oklahoma I believe I can say in truth and in fact that I am only voicing the sentiments of the entire United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no one on this side of the House who has asked for time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the chairman of the committee that we rise at half past 4?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, at half past 4 I shall move that the committee rise. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to make any remarks on this occasion, but I am prompted to do so solely by the opening sentence of the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat. The Chairman, you will remember, made the singular mistake in recognizing the gentleman from Oklahoma as "the gentleman from Arkansas." Thereupon the gentleman from Oklahoma, with characteristic kindness and consideration, gave vent to the expression which I will attempt to quote, and if I do not quote it accurately, it is solely because of the astonishing announcement which amazed me for the time being. He said he had had many vicious things said about him since he had been on earth, but the worst thing ever said about him was that he was from Arkansas.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that we have just listened to a very remarkable speech booming Oklahoma, and I want to say to you now that the most remarkable feature of Oklahoma is the distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat. Mr. Chairman, since I became a Member of this body I have been gratified at that sense of friendship that exists among the Members from different parts of this country. My personal associations and friendships have not been limited to any section or immediate locality. They have extended into every part of the country. This is the first time that I have ever heard uttered on the floor of this House a sentiment that would intentionally belittle any State in this Union. Why, when the gentleman spoke to you about how great Oklahoma was he told what Kansas, Illinois, and other sister States had contributed to what I admit to be one of the most remarkable developments that has ever been witnessed in this country, but the gentleman did not tell you that Arkansas sent more citizens into Oklahoma than any other State in this Union. Of course it is true there are quite a number that sheriffs are still hunting for——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. May I interrupt the gentleman? Were you on the floor when reference was made to Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. I was.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I thought the gentleman from Oklahoma made that reference merely in a spirit of fun.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, there are two kinds of jokes. One of them everybody enjoys and the other nobody enjoys except the gentleman who perpetrates it. I want to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma and to this committee that while I am a Member of this body a reflection of that sort can not be made upon my State and my people without my rising in my seat to resent it in proper parliamentary language. [Applause.] If the time has come when the gentleman from Oklahoma or anyone else can reflect upon a great State, a great and brave people, and then hide behind the cover of a joke, well and good; let them do so. Sir, I want to tell him we have one of the greatest States in this Union, and everybody has come to know it except the gentleman from Oklahoma. Why, we can beat him any time when he talks about men, and, as to the ladies, everybody knows that we have got him beaten a whole city block. Why, Mr. Chairman, we produce the finest apples in the world, and our mines and our forests yield in remarkable abundance, and it is a well-known fact that her growth has been unparalleled during the last ten years. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am not angry with the gentleman from Oklahoma. When he tells the worst thing ever said about him was that he came from Arkansas, I want to tell him in reply, in the same spirit in which he uttered it, that about the worst thing ever said about Arkansas was that the gentleman from Oklahoma came from Arkansas. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes in which to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, when I contemplate the remarks made by the gentleman from Oklahoma I think of an instance that happened but a short time ago in the great political battle that came on down there. We from old Arkansas went over to help fight the gentleman's battle. I see men on the floor of this House who know that that statement is true, and in every issue in her progress and development Arkansas has gone side by side with the Indian Territory and with Oklahoma. [Applause.] When I approached the line of the State of Oklahoma recently, I saw a gigantic object looming up on the horizon. It flashed like the midday sun. I thought it must be a statue to liberty that the people of Oklahoma had erected since the adoption of their constitution, one of the greatest that has ever been adopted by any State in this Union. When I approached within about 20 miles of the State line, I was amazed and disappointed to find that great object was not a statue to liberty, it was only the gentleman from Oklahoma's opinion of himself strutting around the country over there. [Applause.] I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FULTON. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has taken occasion to express himself as he has. I can not help but feel convinced that every Member who was present knew and understood that I was trying to say what I did in the best fun in the world, and I simply——

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the gentleman think that would look in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD like a very funny joke?

Mr. FULTON. I think that the ordinary person who reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. BONYNGE. The whole thing is a joke. [Laughter.]

Mr. FULTON. But what I rose for, Mr. Chairman, was simply to say that I had no intention of hurting the feelings of any person. What I said was said in the utmost good humor; and inasmuch as it does not show in the RECORD that it was said in good humor, and without any intention of hurting the feelings of anyone, I say it now so that it shall appear in the RECORD. Why, I certainly would be an ingrate if I would say a word derogatory to people from Arkansas. I did not read it, because the list was so long, but I will say that we have nearly 100,000 people living in Oklahoma who came from that great State. I was not slandering anyone, and the gentleman knows that I am not the first person who has tried to be funny at the expense of Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the gentleman will be the last on the floor of this House to do so.

Mr. FULTON. That may be true. But, Mr. Chairman, I made my statement, and I am certain that all who were present here this afternoon understood it as I said it, and I think those who read it will so understand it. [Applause.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I had promised time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], but as I do not see him present, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present my views regarding the present financial crisis and discuss briefly some of the remedies suggested as a means of relief. I am not a member of the Finance Committee, neither do I pretend to be authority on the subject of finance, but I have had some experience in banking, and I believe I have considerable knowledge upon this question. While, as I stated, my business heretofore has been that of banking, I am not here as the representative of the banking interests, but as the representative of 300,000 of as intelligent, as progressive, and patriotic a people as can be found anywhere on the face of the earth. I live in a large agricultural and manufacturing district, where the success of the banks depend entirely upon the success of the farmer and manufacturer. I am therefore schooled in honest banking and know but little about the methods employed by the frenzied financiers who operate on Wall street. I have no patience with and shall lend no support to any bill the purpose of which is to give to the banks, either national, State, or private, any special privileges designed to aid and benefit the banks at the expense of the people.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I believe we should enact such legislation as will strengthen the banks and provide for the people safe depositories for their money. We must have banks. The business of the country could not be carried on without them; but the laws under which they operate should be so stringent that it would be impossible for a depositor to lose a single penny.

We are just now going through one of the worst panics in the history of our country. Business is practically suspended everywhere. The motive power behind the wheels of industry has been temporarily destroyed; factories are closed; millions of men out of employment; a feeling of uncertainty and despair is sweeping the country, and the people are looking to Congress for relief. Many bills are being presented in both the House and the Senate seeking to increase our circulating medium by Members who in 1896 contended that we needed no greater volume of money to transact the business of the country. Personally I do not believe any change in our financial system will be within itself sufficient to relieve the present financial condition. In my humble judgment, it will require legislation that will prevent a few Wall street gamblers from continually robbing and plundering the people through stock-gambling operations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before entering into a discussion of the merits of this question, let us seek and look into the causes of the present financial crisis. This panic came on us at a time of unprecedented prosperity. God had permitted the sunshine and the rain to fall upon us, and the earth had brought forth bountiful crops. The products of the farm brought extremely high prices. The agriculturists were more prosperous than they had ever been before. Improvements on the farms in the way of new houses, barns, and fences created and furnished a market for the products of the forests and factories. Our great mills and manufacturing establishments were running day and night, with orders six months in advance; labor was universally employed at moderate wages; the banks throughout the country were bursting with deposits; our splendid railroad system was unable to handle the freight offered for transportation; in fact, we were in the midst of the most universal prosperity the world had ever known.

We felt assured, Mr. Chairman, that a country so blessed by nature, a country that had already wrought so marvelously, could not halt for a moment in its forward movement. With the mountains of the South and the West bursting with mineral wealth; with a soil whose fertility can not be excelled, of every variety known, capable of doubling its entire output without an increase of cultivated acreage merely by the improved methods now being adopted; with the Great Lakes on the north, the Atlantic on the east, the Gulf on the south, and the Pacific on the west; with the great Mississippi and its tributaries draining the very heart of the richest valley of earth, looking to Europe on the one side and to Asia on the other, our land had before it the promise of an advancement so stupendous as to dwarf into insignificance all that had heretofore been accomplished. [Applause.]

With such a future before us, with not a cloud in the sky to throw a shadow over our magnificent prospects, at a time when all the blessings of nature seemed to smile upon us, we were hurled into the chasms of one of the worst panics our nation ever experienced. The first notice we had of an impending storm came from Wall street. It was reported that some speculative corner in copper stock had collapsed, and immediately a terrific storm of distrust and despair swept over the country. The holders of watered stocks were panic-stricken; depositors in banks and trust companies were frightened lest they could not get their money, and a general lack of confidence broke upon the land. Banks and trust companies of New York closed their doors in the face of their depositors and refused them their money.

Two of the leading financiers on Wall street committed suicide. In the meantime the Western banks rested easy, knowing they had large deposits, and also large reserves to meet the demands of their depositors. They said, let the gamblers of Wall street speculate and commit suicide if they like; that will not disturb us. We have our reserve deposited principally with Western reserve banks, and if we need our money we can get it. But the storm continued in New York, and finally the Western banks were notified by the correspondents in Western reserve cities that New York had tied up the currency, and they could not let them have a dollar of their own money. This was the climax that brought on the most unfortunate and the most disastrous financial panic our nation has ever experienced. There was no money to handle the business of the country, and the people looked with suspicion on checks and drafts issued in payment of obligations. The products of the farm decreased in value nearly 50 per cent, and it is already estimated that the loss to the agriculturists of the country has amounted to more than $10,000,000. The manufacturing industries were unable to procure money to pay labor, and more than a million men were out of employment in less than a month. Orders placed with our manufacturers were canceled, and this forced the factories to cancel orders for material, altogether resulting in general stagnation and suspension. Banks in many places were forced to make limited payment on accounts, fixing a sum of $10, $25, or $50 as the limit they would pay in any one day. This created fear and distrust among depositors, and made the life of bankers most miserable. In the larger cities bankers adopted and put in circulation what is known as "clearing-house certificates," a form of money authorized by no law in existence. It is estimated that during the month of December, 1907, there were in circulation more than $50,000,000 of clearing-house certificates. These certificates would circulate locally, but could not be used away from home. As usual, the Wall street bankers whispered in the ear of Mr. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury, and millions of Government money were dumped into New York banks to save them from everlasting ruin. This, however, was not sufficient to relieve the situation, and the Secretary of the Treasury, for the benefit of Wall street, gave notice that he would offer for sale $50,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds and $100,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness.

Notices referred to read as follows:

INVITING PROPOSALS FOR PANAMA CANAL BONDS.

1907. Department circular 68. Division of Loans and Currency.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 18, 1907.

The Secretary of the Treasury offers to the public $50,000,000 of the bonds of the Panama Canal loan authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 28, 1902, and supplemented by section 1 of the act of December 21, 1905. Both acts are quoted below.

The bonds will bear interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; will be dated August 1, 1906, and the interest will be paid quarterly on the 1st days of November, February, May, and August. They will be issued in denominations of $20, $100, and $1,000 of coupon bonds, and of $20, $100, $1,000, and $10,000 of registered bonds. They will be redeemable in United States gold coin, at the pleasure of the United States, after ten years from the date of their issue, and will be payable thirty years from such date. They will be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority. They will be available to national banks as security for circulating notes upon the same terms as the 2 per cent consols of 1930, to wit, the semiannual tax upon circulating notes, based upon the said bonds as security, will be one-fourth of 1 per cent. They will be receivable, like all other United States bonds, as security for public deposits in national banks.

The law forbids their sale at less than par and provides that all citizens of the United States shall have equal opportunity to subscribe therefor.

In pursuance of the above announcement the Secretary invites bids for the bonds heretofore described, which must be submitted to this Department on or before the 30th of November, 1907. Each bid should state the amount of bonds desired by the subscriber, whether coupon or registered, the price he is willing to pay, and the place where he desires to make payment—whether at the Treasury of the United States or at the office of some one of the assistant treasurers at New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans, or San Francisco. All bids should be addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, and the envelopes inclosing them should be plainly marked "Bids for Panama Canal bonds."

Upon the receipt and classification of the bids hereby invited, the successful bidders will be advised of the acceptance of their bids, and they will be instructed as to the date upon which payment is desired to be made at the Treasury or some subtreasury of the United States.

In considering bids, the bidders offering the highest prices will receive the first allotment. Of two or more bidders offering the same price, those asking for the smaller amounts of bonds will receive priority in allotment. The Department reserves the right to permit bidders offering the highest prices to increase the amount of their purchases.

For the sake of uniformity the bonds will be dated August 1, 1906, which is the date of the outstanding Panama Canal bonds, but interest on the bonds of this issue will begin November 1, 1907, and bidders will be required to pay accrued interest on their bonds from that date to the date of payment.

The Department also reserves the right to reject any or all bids, if deemed to be to the interests of the United States so to do.

The bonds will be ready for delivery upon receipt of payment therefor.

Prospective bidders desiring information not contained in this circular may address the Secretary of the Treasury, Division of Loans and Currency, Washington, D. C., the assistant treasurers at Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, or San Francisco.

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU, Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO 3 PER CENT CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS.

1907. Department circular 67. Division of Loans and Currency.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, November 18, 1907.

The Secretary of the Treasury offers to the public at par and accrued interest from November 20, 1907, $100,000,000 of the certificates of indebtedness authorized by section 32 of the act of June 13, 1898.

The certificates will be issued in denominations of $50. They will be payable to bearer, will be dated November 20, 1907, and will bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable with the principal sum on and after November 20, 1908, on presentation of the certificates for redemption at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, division of loans and currency.

Subscriptions will be received by the Secretary of the Treasury direct or through the Treasurer of the United States and the assistant treasurers located at New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and San Francisco, beginning on November 18 and continuing at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. In order that the certificates may be properly distributed throughout the country, $50,000,000 will be allotted by the Secretary in his discretion upon offers of subscriptions addressed to him, and the remaining $50,000,000 will be allotted through the several assistant treasurers authorized to receive subscriptions at the following points: San Francisco, New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and New York, and through the Treasurer of the United States at Washington.

Each subscriber to whom certificates have been allotted should pay in at the subtreasury nearest the point of subscription, on or before December 1, 1907, the face value of the amount of certificates named in the allotment, together with accrued interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum from November 20, 1907, to the date of payment.

Allotments will be made as rapidly as possible, and for such subscriptions as are made immediately the Secretary of the Treasury is prepared to deliver temporary receipts, bearing interest from November 20, 1907, pending the delivery of the $50 engraved certificates.

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU, Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make in connection with this transaction is, that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue and sale of these bonds and certificates is as questionable as the right of the New York banks to issue clearing-house certificates to be used for circulation. The law under which the Secretary of the Treasury proceeded to issue to sell Panama bonds reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of $130,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable thirty days from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold coin at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

Approved, June 28, 1902.

This, Mr. Chairman, was an act passed for the construction of the Panama Canal, and gave the Secretary of the Treasury authority to sell bonds to meet expenditures authorized by said act, but did not give the right to sell bonds for any other purpose. At the time of this issue and sale the proceeds derived from the sale of these bonds were not needed or used in the construction of the Panama Canal, but were used to increase the deposits of the New York banks, on which the Government received no interest.

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states that the Secretary of the Treasury sold $100,000,000 worth of 3 per cent bonds for the purpose of relieving the money market. Is not that a mistake?

Mr. ADAIR. I said that he advertised for sale a hundred million dollars of 3 per cent certificates.

Mr. FORNES. I beg the gentleman's pardon, then. I understood him to say that he sold them.

Mr. ADAIR. No; I did not say that he had sold them.

The law under which the Secretary of the Treasury issued and offered for sale the 3 per cent certificates can be found in "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898. Section 32 of that act reads as follows:

SEC. 32. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or some multiple of that sum; and each certificate so issued shall be payable, with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the amount of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed $100,000,000; and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness authorized by this act.

It is quite evident, Mr. Chairman, that in each of these authorizations to increase the public debt it is specifically provided that the money derived shall be used only for the purposes set out in the laws above quoted. Under section 32 of the act of June 13, 1898, the proceeds derived from the sale of the 3 per cent certificates could only be used to meet public expenditures. Yet at the time of this issue and sale our Treasury was filled with money and there was no necessity for the sale of $100,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates to meet public expenditures. Therefore I contend that the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell these bonds and certificates was as questionable as the right of the banks to issue and circulate clearing-house certificates. But, Mr. Chairman, the right of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds and certificates is not the question I arose to discuss, but I merely mention this to show what has already been done to relieve the present financial stringency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct my discussion directly to the causes of the present panic. We all admit and agree that confidence has fled, progress falters, want is heard, and prosperity paralyzed. Why this condition? Our store-houses were filled with grain, our banks with money, the fields had brought forth bountiful crops, the factories were running day and night, labor was employed, and there was absolutely no just reason why prosperity should have been interrupted. It was first urged that the present condition was brought on by an increased volume of business and an insufficient supply of actual money to meet increased demands. I do not accept this as the cause of the panic, and while I believe in a large per capita of circulation and an elastic system of currency, yet I also believe this panic would be upon us had our per capita of circulation been 50 per cent greater than it is now. In short, I do not believe our present financial crisis is due to our financial system, but can be traced to a lack of confidence in our business fabric, brought about by disclosures of dishonesty, corruption, and crookedness in many of our great corporations. We all remember the insurance investigation made not long ago, which disclosed extravagance, corruption, unlawfulness, and frenzied financiering never dreamed of. We have also been enlightened as to the methods of the Standard Oil Company, the steel trust, and other gigantic corporations, which have built up colossal fortunes off the sweat and toil of the plundered millions. We have all read of the methods employed in the overcapitalization of railroads, corporations, and industrial enterprises. Millions of stocks and bonds have been issued, representing more water than actual investment, and unloaded on innocent purchasers.

In many cases, through false entries and juggling of figures, these stocks were made to pay handsome dividends, when, in fact, the earnings did not warrant it. When these facts reached the ears of foreign investors who have large holdings in our railroad stocks and bonds they became alarmed. They immediately begun an investigation to ascertain the real value of their investments. They ask themselves: "What do we really know or not know about the property represented by our stocks and bonds? Suppose a commission is appointed and appraises the railroads which secure our investments at, say, $200,000,000, while it is stocked and bonded at $600,000,000, and on this amount has paid regular dividends and interest? In such a case it would be three times more than the Government would allow as a fair rate and would cut the dividends and interest down in proportion. How do we know whether our stocks and bonds are not of that class? And if so, what are our stocks and bonds worth?" During the past year millions of these stocks and bonds were sold in New York, and as the offerings continued the price went lower and lower until some were sold at 50 cents on the dollar. This, as a matter of course, drained our money supply. Instead of placing our railroad stocks and bonds with foreign investors, which had heretofore been readily done, at a reasonable rate of interest, we were compelled to depend entirely upon home investors, and even those held in Europe were sent here to be sold. This condition naturally embarrassed the railroads, as the large output of the farms and factories required enormous extension of lines and equipment. The railroads not being able to raise funds by the sale of stocks and bonds in many instances mortgaged their rolling stock, and, when this was not sufficient, they offered for sale short-time railroad notes bearing a high rate of interest.

I am reliably informed that over $400,000,000 worth of this class of securities were sold, and that practically all of these notes drew interest at the rate of 8 per cent. The fact that the strongest railroads in the country were paying this high rate of interest frightened and aroused the suspicion of bankers, capitalists, and depositors. They immediately began to inquire why it was that the most powerful railroad interests in the nation were unable to borrow money without offering such an unusual rate of interest. The banks, the capitalists, and the investors not only refused to buy any more railroad securities, but offered for sale on the market those they already held. The seriousness of the situation continued to grow and was augmented by suggestion and suspicion, until finally Heinze's copper corner bursted, which caused the Knickerbocker Trust Company to close its doors and other banks and trust companies to follow suit. Many of the banks on Wall street had loaned vast sums of money on watered stocks and bonds, and when their value decreased until they were no longer security for the money borrowed, the panic was on in earnest. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I contend that the financial panic was not caused by a shortage of money, but was the direct result of the dishonest methods employed by the stock gamblers of Wall street. Many Republicans are now blaming the President for bringing on this panic.

I do not believe he should be held directly responsible, although he has turned on the light showing the rottenness and crookedness of our railroad and trust corporations. The real responsibility resting on the Republican party lies in the fact that they have been in power during all these years, and have failed to enact laws making it impossible for the stock gamblers of Wall street to rob and plunder the people. I do not have any desire to inject politics into this discussion, for I believe now is the time for us to show our patriotism and loyalty to our country by discarding our politics and standing together in the enactment of such legislation as will restore confidence, start the wheels of industry, and prevent a recurrence of this most unfortunate panic. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, having stated my opinion as to the cause of the present financial crisis, I now desire to offer some suggestions as to the remedy. Numerous bills have been introduced by many Members of both the House and Senate, offering a panacea for the present situation by changing our financial system, some of which contain much merit, while others are intended to meet the demands and wishes of Wall street bankers. I shall not have time in the hour allowed me for this discussion to deal with all these bills, but I do want to view for a moment the provisions of Senate bill 3023, introduced by Mr. ALDRICH. I now hold in my hand a copy of the Aldrich bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks on this subject.

A bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Be it enacted, etc., That any national banking association which has circulating notes outstanding, secured by the deposit of United States bonds to an amount of not less than 50 per cent of its capital stock, and which has a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for authority to issue additional circulating notes to be secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States. The Comptroller of the Currency, if in his judgment business conditions demand such additional circulation and the condition of the association making the application warrants the issue, may approve such application, and shall determine the time of issue and shall fix the amount, within the limitations hereinafter imposed, of such additional circulating notes to be issued. Whenever after receiving notice of such approval any such association shall deposit with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States such of the bonds described in section 2 of this act as shall be approved in character and amount by the Treasurer of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be entitled to receive, upon the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to 75 per cent of the market value, as fixed by the Treasurer of the United States, of the bonds so deposited, such additional circulating notes to be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes: Provided, That the amount of such additional circulating notes delivered at any time to any association shall not in any case exceed the limit fixed for such issue by the Comptroller of the Currency: And provided further, That the total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, secured by United States bonds or otherwise, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus: And provided further, That there shall not be outstanding at any time circulating notes issued under the provisions of this act to an amount of more than $250,000,000: And provided further, That all acts and orders of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Treasurer of the United States authorized by this section shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That the Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may accept as security for the additional circulating notes provided for in the preceding sections, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any State of the United States, or any legally authorized bonds issued for municipal purposes by any city or county in the United States which has been in existence as a city or county for a period of fifteen years, and which for a period of ten years previous to such deposit has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it, and which has at such date more than 20,000 inhabitants as established by the last national census, and whose net indebtedness does not exceed 10 per cent of the valuation of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the last preceding valuation of property for the assessment of taxes; or the first-mortgage bonds of any railroad company, not including street-railway bonds, which has paid dividends of not less than 4 per cent per annum regularly and continuously on its entire capital stock for a period of not less than five years previous to the deposit of the bonds. The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may accept, for the purposes of this act, securities herein enumerated in such proportions as he may from time to time determine, and he may at any time require the deposit of additional securities, or require any association to change the character of the securities already on deposit.

SEC. 3. That all bonds deposited to secure circulating notes issued in accordance with the terms of this act shall be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the association depositing them, with a memorandum to that effect attached to or written or printed on each bond, and signed by the cashier or some other officer of the association making the deposit. A receipt shall be given to the association by the Comptroller of the Currency, or by a clerk appointed by him for that purpose, stating that such bond is held in trust for the association on whose behalf the transfer is made, and as security for the redemption and payment of any circulating notes that have been or may be delivered to such association. No assignment or transfer of any such bond by the Treasurer shall be deemed valid unless countersigned by the Comptroller of the Currency. The provisions of sections 5163, 5164, 5165, 5166, and 5167 of the Revised Statutes respecting United States bonds deposited to secure circulating notes shall, except as herein modified, be applicable to all bonds deposited under the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. That section 5214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5214. National banking associations having on deposit bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, including the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, under the provisions of section 8 of 'An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans,' approved June 28, 1902, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds; and such associations having on deposit bonds bearing interest at a rate higher than 2 per cent per annum shall pay a tax of one-half per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. National banking associations having on deposit bonds to secure their circulating notes other than bonds of the United States shall pay a monthly tax of one-half of 1 per cent upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. Every national banking association having outstanding circulating notes secured by a deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States shall make monthly returns, under oath of its president or cashier, to the Treasurer of the United States, in such form as the Treasurer may prescribe, of the average monthly amount of its notes so secured in circulation. The taxes received on circulating notes secured by bonds other than bonds of the United States shall be paid into the division of redemption of the Treasury and credited to the reserve fund held for the redemption of United States and other notes."

SEC. 5. That section 9 of the act approved July 12, 1882, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1907, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, secured by deposit of United States bonds in the manner provided in section 4 of the act approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized for that purpose to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits; and in like manner and effect any such association desiring to withdraw any of its circulating notes, secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States, may make such withdrawal at any time by the deposit of lawful money or national bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the bonds so deposited may be withdrawn: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to United States bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to withdrawal of circulating notes in consequence thereof."

SEC. 6. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantity of circulating notes in blank of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall state upon their face that they will be redeemed by the United States in lawful money upon presentation at the Treasury. This pledge shall be certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury. They shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the signature of the president or vice-president and cashier. Upon request of any national banking association, the Comptroller of the Currency, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall cause to be prepared circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned, as provided by law, to an amount equal to 50 per cent of the capital stock of such association; such notes to be deposited in the Treasury or the subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of the association making the request, and to be held for such association, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, for their delivery as provided by law."

SEC. 7. That circulating notes of national banking associations, when presented to the Treasury for redemption, as provided in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, shall be redeemed in lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 8. That national banking associations located outside of reserve or central reserve cities, which are now required by law to keep a reserve equal to 15 per cent of their deposit liabilities, shall hereafter hold at all times at least two-thirds of such reserve in lawful money. The provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, with reference to the reserves of national banking associations, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositaries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that, in my opinion, this bill was designed to aid, and will aid, no one except the Wall street gamblers. It provides that banks may deposit with the Treasury almost any kind of securities and receive 75 per cent of the market value in money, on which they are to pay a monthly tax of one-half of 1 per cent. Under the provisions of this bill Mr. Harriman would not only have a market for these bonds, but for any other securities or bonds he cared to unload on the Government. In other words, the Aldrich bill provides for an issue of circulating notes by the Treasury to the banks, said issue to be based on State, county, municipal, and railroad bonds. The issue is to be limited to $250,000,000 and is to be taxed 6 per cent. It seems to me that the real purpose of this bill is to limit the inflation to banks able to obtain a rate of interest higher than 6 per cent on currency. This, as a matter of course, includes only such banks as cater to stock gamblers and not business men, who can not afford to pay the call-loan rates now paid by the gamblers of Wall street. I therefore believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Aldrich bill was drawn with the view of conferring special privileges by forcing Government patronage of a favored class in a favored community. I shall use my vote and my influence in defeating this bill. I shall not have the time to take up and discuss the merits of other bills introduced in the House and Senate, many of which contain some excellent provisions, but none of which, in my judgment, are sufficiently meritorious to warrant their passage.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to submit to this House the remedy I would suggest to relieve the present financial panic and to prevent a recurrence. Believing, as I do, that this panic is the result of methods employed by our "captains of finance" in the overcapitalization and overissue of stocks and bonds by railroads, corporations, and industrial enterprises, I would first enact a law making it criminal, and prescribing a heavy penalty for its violation, for any corporation of any character to issue stock in excess of its actual investment. Believing this was the first and most important step, I introduced a bill in this House, known as H. R. 10498, which is now in the hands of the Committee on the Judiciary, and which is a bill to prevent and punish overissue of stock by combinations, consolidated companies, or trusts engaged in interstate commerce. This bill in substance provides that whenever two or more corporations engaged in interstate commerce shall enter into any lawful merger or consolidation whereby the two or more corporations shall become one or shall fall under one management in any manner, directly or indirectly, and said consolidated corporation or merger management thereof shall issue stock, common or preferred, the total volume of such stock shall not exceed the sum total of the actual market value of bona fide outstanding stock six months previous to the date of consolidation or merger in the several corporations so merged or consolidated. It also provides that if any corporation, corporations, or consolidated corporation shall violate the provisions of this act then each officer and each member of any board of directors or board of management or board of trustees of any such corporation participating by vote, act, or otherwise in such unlawful overissue of stock shall be guilty of the crime of public cheating, and shall, upon conviction in any circuit court of the United States, be fined not less than $1,000 and confined in a United States prison, with hard labor, for not less than twelve months.

Mr. Chairman, I honestly believe that if Congress will enact this bill into law, and the States will enact a similar law governing the issue of stock and bonds by corporations organized under State laws and not doing an interstate commerce business, that the leading and principal cause of financial panics will be eliminated. I also believe that Wall street has had the use of Government money long enough without paying interest to the Government for its use. Millions of the people's money, exacted by high tariff taxes and otherwise, have continually remained on deposit with New York banks, and have been used by said banks in all kinds of wild-cat speculation. Practically every State in the Union has depository laws providing that interest on public funds shall go to the public, and there is no plausible reason why the Government should not require and collect interest on Government funds deposited with national banks. By so doing the people would be at least partially relieved from an already burdensome taxation. I have introduced in the House a bill known as H. R. 11313, now in the hands of the Committee on Ways and Means, providing for the payment of interest on Government deposits, a copy of which I now hold in my hand and ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks upon the subject.

A bill (H. R. 11313) governing deposits by the Secretary of the Treasury with national and State banks, and requiring payment of interest on said deposits.

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st day of July, the 1st day of October, the 1st day of January, and the 1st day of April of each year, after thirty days' previous notice of his purpose, to receive and open sealed bids from national and State banks applying to receive deposits (on call) of surplus moneys in the United States Treasury, and to award deposits to said bidding banks as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That each bid to receive deposit of any of said funds shall state the amount of money applied for to be deposited with the bank making the bid, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall award deposits in amounts not greater than the amounts applied for to the banks offering the highest rate of interest in the order of the rates of their respective bids of interest. Where two or more banks offer the same rate of interest, that rate being higher than the rate offered by any other bank, and the amounts applied for by all banks exceed the total of surplus funds in the Treasury to be deposited, then proportionate deposits shall be awarded to each of said highest bidding banks in the proportion which the total amount of surplus funds in the Treasury bears to the total of amounts applied for by said highest-bidding banks: Provided, That no offer to take on deposit an amount less than $25,000 nor above the paid-up capital stock of any bank shall be considered by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his sound discretion and after giving thirty days' public notice of his intention, deposit funds on fixed time not to exceed four months, as well as "on call," subject, however, to the provisions governing deposits "on call" contained in this act and to other provisions of law for such cases made and provided and being not in conflict with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not make, authorize, nor permit any deposit of United States Government funds in any bank which shall not previously to said deposit have complied with the provisions of this act, as well as with all existing laws and lawful regulations governing security to be given for repayment of funds deposited with banks on demand, which provisions for security for repayment of deposits on demand are hereby made applicable to deposits on fixed time, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, deposits on fixed time are made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like for any gentleman on the floor of this House to state a single reason why this bill should not become a law. On the 10th day of January, 1908, the Government had on deposit with national banks Government funds amounting to the enormous sum of $253,238,765.11, upon which no interest is paid. Principally all of this vast sum is deposited with banks in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, and other large cities, and but a very small part of this fund ever reaches the rural districts. Just think for a moment; if the Government received interest at the rate of 2 per cent on this vast sum of money it would amount to the enormous sum of $5,064,775.30 each year. Therefore the people are contributing to a favored few, principally Wall street gamblers, more than $5,000,000 annually. This large sum of money absolutely given away each year to a special privileged class would be sufficient to increase the pension to at least $12 per month of every widow whose husband served in the civil war, and by reason of whose service you and I are permitted to enjoy this united country. Many of these widows are now drawing the measly sum of $8 per month, and since I have introduced a bill in this House providing that it be raised to $12 per month I have already heard objections to my bill, based upon the fact that it would require $5,000,000 to pay the increase, yet at this time we are annually giving away to the already rich more than this amount. [Applause.]

In the name of common sense, has not this special privilege continued long enough, and in the interest of justice will not the Republican side of this House join me in forever putting at an end this unholy privilege? The people who constitute this Government, and from whom these funds were collected by way of taxation, are entitled to interest on Government deposits, and, in my judgment, the man who opposes the passage of this bill thinks more of the almighty dollar than he does of the welfare of his country. [Applause.]

Another very important step to take to remove the possibility of future panics is through the enactment of a law making deposits in banks just as safe as a Government bond. This can easily be done by providing for an assessment of a very small per cent on the deposits of all national banks, thereby creating a fund out of which all losses can be paid. If you will examine the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency since the existence of national banks, you will find that an assessment of one-twentieth of 1 per cent on the total deposits of all national banks would have more than paid the losses sustained by depositors. Such an assessment would be so slight that no bank would feel it, and in addition would bring out of hiding large sums of money, which would find its way into national banks, thereby increasing their deposits and adding to their profits more than the amount of their assessment.

In support of this contention, I have introduced a bill in the House entitled, "A bill to secure depositors in national banks against loss," which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every national bank organized under the laws of the United States shall on or before the 1st day of January of each year after the passage of this act deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to one-tenth of 1 per cent of its average deposits for the six months preceding said 1st day of January. In case any such national bank shall fail to make such deposit, special notice of such failure shall be immediately given by the said Treasurer by mailing a statement of the fact to the cashier of the bank; and if such bank shall not deposit such amount within thirty days from the day on which such special notice is mailed, then such failure shall work a forfeiture of its charter and the Comptroller of the Currency shall at once take possession of said bank, as is now provided by law in cases of mismanagement or insolvency, and shall administer the affairs of such defaulting bank as is now provided by law in cases of mismanagement or insolvency: Provided, That whenever the Treasurer shall have on hand in the special fund raised by such tax the sum of $10,000,000 the Comptroller of the Currency shall, by order, suspend the tax until the amount of the special fund falls below the sum of $10,000,000.

SEC. 2. That whenever the Comptroller of the Currency shall be advised of the failure of any national bank he shall at once ascertain the amount due depositors and creditors of the bank (not including stockholders, officers, or directors) and from the special fund provided for in section 1 of this act shall, as soon as convenient, cause to be paid to such depositors and creditors (not including stockholders, officers, and directors) the amount due them.

SEC. 3. That the assets of such failing banks shall be turned into cash as now provided, and the amount realized shall be used, first, to satisfy all claims not provided for in section 2, and the amount remaining shall be paid into the special fund provided for in section 1 of this act: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the stockholders from the liability of 100 per cent of their stock in addition to their stock over the assets of such failing bank until all debts due from the bank have been paid and the special fund provided for in section 1 be reimbursed to the extent that it was drawn upon, as provided by section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the United States hereby assumes no liability to depositors of national banks, except as a trustee to depositors under the special fund in this act provided for, and the Comptroller of the Currency shall pay out the money in the order in which he receives notice of failure, paying all proper liabilities of one bank as aforesaid before any of the liabilities of a bank whose failure is subsequently announced.

SEC. 5. That to provide against a contraction of the currency by the holding of this special fund in trust the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby empowered and directed to pay and issue out, for the general expenses of the Government, United States Treasury notes, commonly known as greenbacks, like those authorized by the law approved February 25, 1862, equal to the amount held in special fund, and the Treasury notes shall have all the legal-tender qualities possessed by the Treasury notes issued under said act of February 25, 1862.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if Congress will enact this bill into law, thereby insuring depositors against possible loss, it will force the States to adopt similar laws for the protection of depositors in State banks, and will ultimately result in a system of banking the best the world has ever known. When this bill becomes a law runs on national banks will be a thing of the past and such flurries as the one which recently originated in New York, by the bursting of a corner on copper, will have no effect on the safety of banks and will not shake the confidence of the people. I confidently believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the suggestions I have made were carried out, and the bills I have introduced touching upon this subject were enacted into law, money panics would be a thing of the past. While I believe in an elastic currency and a large per capita of circulation, I also believe that what we need more than these is the confidence of the people, and that can only be gained through the enactment of laws which will reduce to a minimum dishonesty, corruption, unlawfulness, and the vicious villainy of commercial vampires. I have unbounded confidence in the American people, and believe their Representatives in Congress will be broad enough, and patriotic enough, to solve this problem in a way that will do justice to both the banks and the people. Let us lay aside our politics and work together, with the hope of bringing about a solution of this question that will win for the banking system of America the admiration of the world and forever put at end the possibility of a financial panic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was called out of the Chamber during the gentleman's speech and I want to get some information from him, and if he will give me a minute or two I can get it now. What are the deficiencies that occurred in this bill which were brought about by hauling of bonds and money and securities for the Government? I have been trying to get the information, and I think the gentleman has it.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the fiscal year 1907, $6,721.67.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For what?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is on account of contingent expenses, independent treasury. That is entirely for transportation of Government securities. For the transportation of silver dollars for the fiscal year 1907, $14,053.19. For the transportation of minor coins for the last fiscal year, $5,281.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, how much deficiency is there for carrying the moneys, bonds, and securities? Of course that would include silver.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would not include silver. Six thousand seven hundred and twenty-one dollars and sixty-seven cents on account of contingent expenses of independent treasuries, which is for transporting notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was the last appropriation to cover that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars for the current fiscal year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the regular appropriation for this transportation service?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the Department transportation service; that is, between the subtreasuries, for the transportation of public moneys, notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States—between United States subtreasuries.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you give me any information showing how much the Government pays annually for the transportation of all her moneys, bonds, and securities?

Mr. TAWNEY. Including silver dollars and fractional silver coin?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Last fiscal year; if the gentleman will take his pencil and a piece of paper he can figure it. In the current appropriation $240,000 for the transportation of public moneys, notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States; transportation for silver dollars, $50,000; transportation of fractional silver coin, $50,000——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not a pencil, but I will get the gentleman's figures in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). Transportation of minor coin, $18,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, can the gentleman inform me why it is that we have a deficiency every year for this transportation service?

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the first item it is a statutory service. The Treasury Department has no discretion whatever of the amount that is to be expended for the service. They must transport the money as it is demanded from time to time between the subtreasuries, and it is impossible to estimate in advance the exact amount of money that will be required.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How is this transportation done?

Mr. TAWNEY. By the United States Express Company. It has the transportation of the silver coin. For the transportation of silver dollars we have appropriated $50,000 and for fractional silver coin $50,000. That is governed entirely by the amount appropriated. There is no law authorizing it, and as the gentleman well knows, I have endeavored in the two last previous sessions of Congress to wipe out that service entirely.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know the gentleman is in favor of that. There is some opposition on this side, but I think a little more per capita on the other side.

Mr. TAWNEY. The South generally is against any such proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman a copy of the contract executed between the Government and this express company?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not, but if the gentleman will refer to the hearings of the last session on the legislative bill he will find a copy of that contract.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know the date?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is executed from time to time as appropriations are made.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I understand that contract is fourteen years old and that they have had the same contract for fourteen years. Does the gentleman know how much more the Government is hauling or transporting of these moneys, etc., now than ten years ago?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not, but I will endeavor to find out before we reach the items in the reading of the bill, and I will endeavor to give the gentleman any information in detail that I may obtain.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the Government is imposed upon very much in this transportation service.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it is very much imposed on by Congress authorizing and paying for the transportation of a great deal of this money for the benefit and at the request of the bankers, private corporations, and department stores.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that may be true. Will the gentleman allow me two or three minutes?

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee had agreed to rise in the absence of the gentleman from the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the Government is paying more for the transportation of this money than it ought to pay. I am trying to find out how much it has paid, when the contract was made, and how much is transported, etc.

Mr. TAWNEY. I respectfully call the gentleman's attention to the hearings on the legislative bill of the first session of the last Congress and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that session, where he will get all the data to be obtained.

I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. BOUTELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14766 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts in lieu of House resolution 157.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Hampshire submits a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs, during the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress, per diem compensation of $6, which shall equal in the aggregate the amount paid session clerks whose employment is provided for by law. The pay of said clerk shall commence from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it long?

Mr. CURRIER. It is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred H. Res. 157, have had the same under consideration and recommend in lieu thereof the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs during the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress per diem compensation of $6, which shall equal in the aggregate the amount paid session clerks whose employment is provided for by law. The pay of said clerk shall commence from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee."

It has been customary for many years to grant an additional session clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the resolution reported herewith conforms to the practice.

The Committee on Indian Affairs has jurisdiction of the Indian appropriation bill, besides a large number of other matters pertaining to Indian tribes and reservations. The work is such as to warrant, as in the past, the granting of the clerk authorized by the accompanying resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this resolution creates no new office, but simply continues an old one.

Mr. CURRIER. That is all. This office, for many years, has been provided for in this way.

Mr. GOULDEN. It creates no new office, and is a unanimous report.

Mr. CURRIER. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CURRIER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLERKS TO PACIFIC RAILROADS AND PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURRIER. I also present another report from the Committee on Accounts, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(In lieu of House resolutions 91 and 94.)

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of clerks to the Committees on Pacific Railroads and Private Land Claims, respectively, to serve during the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress, per diem compensation of $6, which shall in each case equal in the aggregate the amount paid session clerks whose employment is provided for by law. The pay of such clerks shall begin from the time they entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of said committees.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolutions Nos. 91 and 94, have had the same under consideration and recommend in lieu thereof the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of clerks to the Committees on Pacific Railroads and Private Land Claims, respectively, to serve during the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress, per diem compensation of $6, which shall in each case equal in the aggregate the amount paid session clerks whose employment is provided for by law. The pay of such clerks shall begin from the time they entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of said committees."

This resolution conforms to the practice of a number of past Congresses in allowing session clerks to the Committees on Pacific Railroads and Private Land Claims. The chairmen, respectively, of those committees appeared before the Committee on Accounts and stated that the same reasons exist now as in the past for the granting of this clerical assistance.

Your committee therefore report the accompanying resolution substantially in the form in which it was passed in the last Congress, and recommend its adoption.

Mr. CURRIER. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CURRIER, a motion to reconsider the last report was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES NATIONAL BANK OF AMERICA.

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of 1,000 copies of the bill H. R. 13845, providing for the establishment of the United States National Bank of America in the city of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the reprint of a bill, the title of which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reprint will be ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and a resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4064. An act to provide for a term of the United States circuit and district courts at Lander, Wyo.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 110. An act for the erection of an addition or extension to the post-office and court-house at Sioux Falls, S. Dak.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Senate concurrent resolution 20:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend the examination and survey of Cowlitz River, provided for in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, up to the head of navigation at Toledo, Wash.—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries be authorized to have printed such papers and documents in connection with subjects under consideration by the committee as may be deemed necessary to the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. PEARRE, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence until Tuesday next, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. TAWNEY (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of additional land for the post of Madison Barracks, Sacketts Harbor, N. Y.—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Lorain Harbor, Ohio—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of harbor at Rocky River, Ohio—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Guyandot River, West Virginia—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Dry

Straits, Alaska—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Lake Ponchartrain, Louisiana—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for entertainment of official guests at military posts of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, transmitting a schedule of papers and documents not needed in the public business—to the Joint Select Committee for the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting in response to the inquiry of the House, documents, letters, etc., relating to the appointment of Surg. Charles F. Stokes to command of the hospital ship Relief and the resignation of Willard H. Brownson, as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation—to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SITTING OF UNITED STATES CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN GAINESVILLE, FLA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14779) to transfer the county of Alachua, in the State of Florida, from the southern to the northern judicial district of that State and to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Florida at the city of Gainesville, in said district.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Alachua, in the State of Florida, which is now in the southern judicial district of said State, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to and made a part of the northern judicial district of said State.

SEC. 2. That all causes, civil and criminal, which arose in said county of Alachua and which are now pending in the courts of said southern judicial district of Florida shall remain and be disposed of in said courts, and all persons who have committed offenses against the United States in said county shall be prosecuted and tried as though this act had not been passed.

SEC. 3. That there shall be held at the city of Gainesville, in the said county of Alachua, terms of both circuit and district courts for said northern district of Florida on the first Monday in May and on the first Monday in December of each year.

SEC. 4. That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for holding said courts free of expense to the Government of the United States until such time as a Federal building shall be prepared for that purpose in said city of Gainesville, in the State of Florida.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask how many places there are in this district where they hold the United States court now?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Only two, one at Pensacola and the other at Tallahassee.

Mr. PAYNE. And those are in the western part of the district?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And this is in the eastern part?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3344. An act extending to the subport of Knights Key, in the State of Florida, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3344. An act extending to the subport of Knights Key, in the State of Florida, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Georgia asks for the regular order, and that would bring up pension bills.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar in order for to-day may be taken up on the next legislative day following the passage of the urgent deficiency bill under consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest to the gentleman from New Hampshire that his request ought not to interfere with District day.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Then I will modify my request by saying after Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the day following the completion of the urgent deficiency bill, unless it shall be District day, and then it shall be on the day following District day, be given to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF HOUSE DOCUMENT.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of House Document 352 at this session, which consists of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on the proposed consolidation of the pension agencies, written in response to a provision in the pension appropriation bill passed in the last Congress.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object to this, because there is a law that gives authority to the Clerk to order these documents where they are not more than 50 pages.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not so understood. I may say that this print is entirely exhausted now, and we want it for immediate work before the Appropriation Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota to object on the ground that the law now authorizes a reprint.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

RECEIVING MESSAGE FROM SENATE WHEN SENATE IS NOT IN SESSION.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of parliamentary inquiry and, incidentally, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has just sent a communication to the House, and I desire to inquire whether the House can receive the communication from the Senate when the Senate is not in session. I see by the RECORD this morning that the Senate yesterday adjourned over until Monday morning next, and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that to have the message from the Senate put upon the records and the Journals of the House when the Senate is not in session would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking, under parliamentary law, as adopted by the rules of the House, which include Jefferson's Manual, the message could not be received; but it was received, and the point of order was not made, and the Chair had no knowledge—and I don't know that the House had any knowledge—that the Senate had adjourned over.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The House had knowledge from the fact that it is printed in the RECORD of this morning.

The SPEAKER. Well, I suppose the RECORD might after all be accepted as evidence, though the Journal evidences the action of the Senate and of the House. Let that be as it may, it seems to the Chair that the point comes too late. While it is contrary to the rules of the House, yet so far as the Chair recollects or is advised, it is not so contrary that it would invalidate the proceedings of the House. It violates the rules, but not the law, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I understand the rule very well and the law that the proceedings of both houses are governed entirely by their Journals. If a question should arise in a court, no inquiry could go beyond the facts appearing upon the Journal of each House, and if any question should arise in any judicial inquiry which might be made to this bill—I do not know what it is—it will appear from the Journal of the Senate that the message from the Senate was sent to the House when the Senate was not in session, but after it had adjourned from yesterday over until Monday, so that any inquiry into the facts would be governed by the Journal and the Journal of the Senate would show the fact as I state.

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends that if the point had been made before the message was received, means could have been taken to ascertain about the adjournment of the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14766), the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, this bill making appropriations for urgent deficiencies in prior appropriation bills is the result, I have no doubt, of the careful, conscientious, and painstaking labor of the Committee on Appropriations. In general it has been fully explained by the distinguished chairman of that committee. But, nestled in its bosom, there is one provision which has not been explained, and concerning which I desire to make a few remarks at this time, as I may not be here when it is reached on the second reading under the five-minute rule. I refer to the last paragraph on page 8. First, I will call attention to the fact that in the act of June 30, 1906, the sundry civil appropriation bill, found on page 759 of volume 34, part 1, of the Statutes at Large, appears this provision:

> For the purchase from Prof. Francis N. Thorpe of the manuscript for a new edition of Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws of all the States, Territories, and colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, and any acts of Congress relating thereto, prepared by him, $10,000: Provided, That he shall prepare a complete index of the work and do all proof reading in connection with the preparation, printing, and publication thereof, and the Public Printer shall print and bind 6,000 copies of the work, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Thorpe has done that work and presented his bill for the payment of the $10,000, but objection has been made by some party having some claim or alleging some claim against Mr. Thorpe, and payment has been held up. Therefore a proceeding in the nature of mandamus was instituted by Mr. Thorpe in the proper court in the District of Columbia. The Secretary of the Treasury has put in his answer and it is now up to the court to decide the matter. The paragraph in this bill to which I refer is as follows:

Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws: The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to withhold payment of the sum of $10,000 appropriated by the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, for the purchase of the manuscript of a new edition of Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws pending the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, which is hereby authorized to pass upon the question of the completeness and accuracy of the work and to determine whether the manuscript submitted is the identical, specific manuscript which Congress agreed to buy and for whose purchase it appropriated $10,000.

In other words, here is a plain order that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not pay the money appropriated two years ago, in payment for the work which was thus authorized and which has been fully performed.

Now, in the first place it seems to me that this paragraph is not properly in this bill. It is not to supply any urgent deficiency, it is not to provide money under any appropriation whatever; on the contrary, it prohibits and forbids the payment of an appropriation heretofore made. But a very serious objection to this provision in my mind is that it is intended to usurp the function of the court, to take away from the court the right to decide a question now pending and at issue before it. That of itself ought to be a sufficient argument against this proposition. The House has no information as to the merits of it. Evidently the Committee on Appropriations has none, for I am unable to find in the printed report of the hearings before it that there was any hearing upon this question, and certainly if there was one the party most interested, Mr. Thorpe, was not present, not notified, and not heard. Mr. Thorpe is a prominent citizen of Pennsylvania, an expert of high standing, and a gentleman of undoubted integrity. His life work is practically bound up in this matter, and why it should not be paid for in accordance with the authorization of Congress contained in the act of 1906 is one of those things it is difficult to understand. Why should it be taken from the jurisdiction of the court to determine whether or not he has performed this work? Why should the Committee on the Library be substituted for the court? The Committee on the Library has no authority to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of books and papers. It has none of the functions of a court. It could not properly obtain the evidence upon which to decide this question. Why not allow it to be decided by the court to which it has been taken in due course and where it is now at issue and pending awaiting decision? There is another point, Mr. Chairman, to which I wish to call attention now, and that is that the provision is not properly in this bill, that it is here in violation of one of the most important and most useful rules of the House, namely, Rule XXI, clause 2, which provides that:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress—

Now this is the part to which I call your attention—

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill, or in any amendment thereto.

Can it be doubted that this changes existing law? The existing law requires the payment of this appropriation. This proposed bill forbids it. The existing law authorizes the court to decide it. It does not authorize the Committee on the Library to decide the question at issue. This provision takes from the court the jurisdiction that it possesses under existing law and gives to the Committee on the Library authority which it does not possess under existing law. This paragraph does not appropriate any money at all, although it appears in an appropriation bill. It is stated in the printed report of the committee to be a limitation, but it is not a limitation upon any appropriation contained in this act. It substantially alters and changes the law passed two years ago in addition to changing existing law in the other particulars to which I have referred. I am calling attention to this matter so that my views upon this point of order may be before the Chair at such time as this provision is reached upon the second reading. I expect to be called away from the Chamber before it is reached, and if I am not here I shall ask a friend to make the point of order for me, and I have no doubt the provision will be ruled out upon that point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very greatly obliged to my friend from Pennsylvania for bringing this subject to the attention of the House. This particular provision and the document to which it relates is one which is of personal interest to every Member of Congress. This document is to be a compilation of the charters, constitutions, and organic laws of all the States, Territories, and colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, and it is therefore of the deepest interest to every student of constitutional law that this document should be up to date, should be complete, and should be in every way a worthy publication. As the gentleman has said, in the sundry civil bill of last year an appropriation was made for the compilation of a new edition of these charters and constitutions. The only one which we now have is one prepared by Ben: Perley Poore some thirty years ago. That is now out of print and, besides, is incomplete on account of constitutional changes which have taken place since it was compiled and printed.

So the Congress of the United States provided for a new edition of charters and constitutions under this amendment in the sundry civil bill last year.

The manuscript which was submitted to the Public Printer in accordance with that provision was not a new edition of charters and constitutions, and most serious objections were made to its acceptance. This is shown by the fact that when the voucher in payment for that manuscript came to the Secretary of the Treasury he declined to pay the money under that appropriation, and in an official letter to Congress, which is embraced in Senate Document No. 85 of the present session, he stated to Congress that—

It appearing that questions of fact are involved which the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to determine, I have the honor to advise you that payment of the sum of $10,000, appropriated for the purchase of the manuscript for a new edition of Charters, Constitutions, and Organic Laws, from Prof. Francis N. Thorpe, will be withheld to await the approval of such committee, person, or persons as Congress may designate to pass upon the question of the completeness and accuracy of the work, if such approval shall be deemed necessary.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and as a matter of protection to this Government, and because it is to the interest of every Member of this House, that when that document is printed it shall be a complete and perfect document, the Committee on Appropriations, following the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, has placed this item in this bill. It is there purely for the protection of the Government. It is an urgent matter, it seems to me, and is in its proper place in this urgent deficiency bill.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has referred to the fact that the subject is now in the court. Alongside of the legal phase of this question it seems to me that this House ought to consider the practical phase of this question. How did it get into the court? It got into the court by an action brought by Professor Thrope to compel the Secretary of the Treasury, against his judgment, to pay this money to him for this manuscript. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in the light of the facts, this House ought to follow the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and withhold this payment until the merits of the publication are passed upon.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAWSON. Just a moment. This provision simply withholds the appropriation until a competent committee has had opportunity to pass upon the merits of the proposition. It is not a real change of exising law, in my judgment; it is simply a safeguard thrown around existing law, an interpretation of existing law that was left out when the law was passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. DAWSON. With pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman, if this matter is now in the courts, whether it would not be better to abide by the decision of the court, and let the court determine whether the man is entitled to the money or not?

Mr. DAWSON. I will say to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that I am not sure that the court has jurisdiction over the question of the worth of this manuscript under the phraseology of the appropriation made last year.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the question, then, that is pending in the court if that is not it?

Mr. DAWSON. Professor Thorpe began a mandamus proceeding against the Secretary of the Treasury to force him, against his judgment, to pay the $10,000 carried in that bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, when this question is in the court, or if he has complied with the contract made by virtue of the law passed by Congress, the Treasurer will be required by the court to pay it. If he has not complied, he will not be required to pay it, and ought that not to be really the question to be determined and upon which both sides ought to be bound?

Mr. DAWSON. No, I think not, Mr. Chairman. There is one question involved in this which, in my judgment, may not properly get before the court. By the phraseology of the appropriation which was made last year much was left to the good faith of the gentleman who was to prepare this manuscript. That is a question which can not be gone into in the court.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the gentleman who is preparing the manuscript is doing it in accordance with the law that we have passed, is he not?

Mr. DAWSON. I will say in addition, to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]——

Mr. NORRIS. If he is doing that, if the gentleman will pardon me, then the question before the court will be whether he has complied with his part of it, and we ought to be willing to submit that question to the court rather than to a legislative body.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] this question: Is it not clearly within the province of this House in matters of this sort to determine upon the question as to what Congress had in mind when it made the appropriation?

Mr. NORRIS. I presume so. I presume we can arbitrarily refuse to appropriate the money; but it seems to me that all laws passed by Congress are construed by the courts. The court will put a construction on the laws that we pass. It is to the courts that all people ought to be allowed to go, and Congress ought to be willing to submit to and abide by the court's decision, and not use its own arbitrary power to refuse to pay when the court says that it ought to pay.

Mr. DAWSON. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. As I understand, it is not a refusal to pay the money so much as a refusal of the committee to say that the work has been properly done.

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Therefore it is not for the courts to say, but for the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be a question before the courts.

Mr. DAWSON. The act as it was passed last year omitted, inadvertently no doubt, to designate any committee or person to pass upon that manuscript. That was an omission which perhaps should have been supplied, but inasmuch as it was not supplied it seems to me that it is only proper that the committee of the House should supply that omission, providing that the publication of this document shall not go forward until its accuracy is completely assured.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; but my friend must notice that before Congress supplied this omission a contract had been entered into with the person who has revised the work. Now, then, if we undertake, after this contract has been entered into, to ask him to do something which was not contemplated at the time we are doing some damage to the citizen when we undertake to prevent him from doing that which he had made the contract to do.

Mr. DAWSON. That is true, if it is an entire proceeding, and if he had gone along in good faith and carried out the conditions upon which the contract was based; but I want to say to my friend from Nebraska that the contract has not been carried out in good faith, and that the manuscript submitted in compliance with the provisions of the sundry civil bill was not the manuscript which was represented to the committees of Congress when the appropriation was made.

Mr. NORRIS. Let the courts decide on the question as to whether that is true. If it is true, the court will not give him the money.

Mr. DAWSON. But that is a phase of the matter which probably can not be developed and brought out in the court proceedings.

I have no desire for Congress to usurp the functions of any court, but this proposition can be stated in a nutshell: Congress intended to buy a certain manuscript, and appropriated money therefor. The manuscript submitted was not the manuscript which Congress intended to purchase. Furthermore, the manuscript submitted was incomplete and imperfect—in fact, at least three-fourths of the work consisted simply of leaves cut out of Poore's book, published thirty-eight years ago. Could that be called a new edition?

It seems to me that Congress is not only within its rights in seeking to protect the Government and that it is clearly our duty to do so. This provision in the bill seeks to do nothing more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman that the gist and pith of the matter is this: Congress made an appropriation of $10,000 for certain work to be done, and your committee has determined that that work was not done as Congress expected it to be done. The courts have no jurisdiction, and this House can determine whether the work was done or not according to the way it expected it to be done.

Mr. DAWSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. But we are not done with the gentleman from Georgia yet.

Mr. NORRIS. If he has complied with what he undertook to do in the contract under the law passed by us we ought to be the last to repudiate the contract.

Mr. DAWSON. But he has not complied.

Mr. NORRIS. The court will determine whether he has complied with the conditions.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I was not altogether surprised to find this clause in this appropriation bill. Some time ago a young lawyer who resided in my district and who was temporarily employed in the Library took it into his head to prepare a manuscript of the charters, constitutions, and organic laws of the different States and spent several years on that work—two or three—in gathering all the charters and all the constitutions of the several States and the amendments up to date. In addition to that, he annotated the work from beginning to end, showing where all the decisions of the courts could be found under every section of the different constitutions, and had that manuscript ready. He came to me and wanted to get an appropriation for the modest sum of $3,000 for that work that he had done.

Mr. OLMSTED. Everybody is modest in your district.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman expresses a fact that is generally recognized.

I made some inquiry in reference to this, and it brought out the fact that Professor Thorpe had a work, and it was described to me—as I have no doubt it was described to the Committee on Appropriations—as the most complete work that was ever done by any author taking up a given subject, covering everything, and representing the labor, I think, of eight or ten years—I do not remember how long, much longer than my young man had occupied in his work—and the result was that for two or three years one claim was played against the other until last year this amendment was put on in the Senate, and came over to the House, and got into an appropriation bill. Now, it seems to me that this manuscript, which was so highly commended at the time, should have been given the privilege of an opportunity for a competitive contest of the merits of the work, leaving the better one to prevail and get the appropriation, offsetting the modest appropriation of $3,000 against $10,000.

It seems, however, that my young friend was not represented in the Senate, on the Committee on Appropriations, and he was left. I had a suspicion then that the merits of the work were magnified in order to drive my friend out of the competition, and I am not surprised to find that when the claim is presented the law officer finds no difficulty in saying that the manuscript is not up to the recommendation. I hope that this matter will be investigated. I suppose my young friend is out of it, but whether he is or not I hope it will be investigated and that Congress will see that they are getting at least partially the worth of the money; that they are getting what was represented to them and what they agreed to pay the $10,000 for. I hope the clause will remain in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think we might well afford to waste this $10,000 in order to bring home to the Committee on Appropriations and the conference committees that these items have no business in an appropriation bill in the first place, and that the House ought never to have permitted this to go in? If we waste this $10,000, these items will probably stay out hereafter.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know. It would seem as though the Appropriations Committee had had a lesson in this very matter, and they are eating a good deal of humble pie when they come back and ask the House to correct this mistake which they have made. I do not think they would feel any worse about it if this clause remains in the bill. I think it is a warning to them in the future that is well worth the time that the House is occupying upon it. I hope the clause will remain in the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this clause in the bill does not provide for a comparison to determine who has made the better compilation.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand it does not, and I am looking at it in a disinterested way. I told the gentleman that I did not see that it helped my young man out any.

Mr. OLMSTED. No. But this calls for the determination of the single question whether the manuscript in question is the identical, specific manuscript which Congress agreed to buy. It does not have anything to do with the merits of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I think it does go to the merits of it. If it is not the manuscript they agreed to buy, it is not a first-class manuscript on that subject.

Mr. OLMSTED. They agreed to buy the manuscript prepared by Charles M. Thorpe. That is what the act appropriating the $10,000 said. Now, all that this attempts is to determine whether it is the manuscript that he prepared.

Mr. PAYNE. This gentleman made representations as to what that manuscript was.

Mr. OLMSTED. At any rate the court is fully competent to decide any question raised by this paragraph. The court is better qualified to decide it than any committee of the House, probably.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know about that. I think a committee of this House is a pretty competent tribunal for the determination of any question that comes before us. I think the lawyers of the House are quite competent to examine witnesses and reach conclusions from their testimony.

Mr. OLMSTED. They have no authority to summon witnesses, to procure their attendance, and to compel the production of books and papers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, having heard the representatives of the three interests involved in this matter, I now yield five minutes to my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] to address the House on another subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have read in my time a letter from the secretary of the Minnesota Association of the Deaf.

The Clerk read as follows:

MINNESOTA ASSOCIATION OF THE DEAF,
Faribault, Minn., January 20, 1908.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: According to a recent ruling of the Civil Service Commission the deaf are included among certain undesirable classes who are to be refused henceforth employment in the Government service.

At a national convention of the deaf held at Norfolk last summer an unanimous protest was made against this ruling as unjust and uncalled for, and it was determined to make an effort to secure its modification in the case of the deaf. Various State associations of the deaf are protesting against the ruling, and the deaf generally and their friends all over the country are giving voice to criticism of the ruling as unfair to this class.

There are quite a number of deaf people in Government employ, and the heads of the Departments wherein they are working will testify that their work is entirely satisfactory. There are many kinds of Government employment where deafness is no bar at all to efficiency, as in bookkeeping and other kinds of clerical work.

The deaf people of the country are endeavoring in spite of their handicap to demean themselves as good and useful citizens. They are engaging in all the occupations of their hearing brothers in which the sense of hearing is not absolutely essential.

This ruling of the Commission putting the stamp of Government condemnation upon the deaf for what is not their fault but their misfortune, is a cause of discouragement to them. There are Government employments, it is true, to which deafness is a bar, but it is equally true that there are many employments where a deaf man can do as good work as a hearing man.

To bar the deaf entirely from the Government service, when they can pass the examinations and are in every other way qualified to do good service, is not giving them a "square deal."

The deaf people of Minnesota, through the executive committee of their State association, respectfully request you to use your influence toward the revocation of the ruling of the Commission in so far as it affects the deaf and thus reestablish them in their right to serve the Government in positions where lack of hearing is no bar to efficient service.

Very respectfully, P. N. PETERSON.

Mr. STEENERSON. I also ask to have this resolution, which I introduced, read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution requesting information from the President of the United States relative to rules of the Civil Service Commission on the subject of employment of deaf persons in the civil service.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House information on the following subjects:

First. What, if any, rule, regulation, or practice has been prescribed or adopted by the Civil Service Commission relative to the appointment or employment of deaf persons in civil service of the Government.

Second. Whether under said rules and practice deaf persons, even when competent and where hearing is not requisite to efficiency, are barred from service.

Third. Whether it would not be practicable to so change said rules as to enlarge the opportunity for employment in the civil service of the Government of deaf persons without detriment to the efficiency of that service.

Mr. STEENERSON. All I desire to say on this matter is that pending the report of the proper committee I commend the case of these people to the favorable consideration and thought of the Members of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield one hour and thirty minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is recognized for one hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, on the first day of the present session of Congress I introduced in this House a bill having for its object the refunding to the persons who paid the same certain taxes, the levying and collection of which in my opinion was violative of the Constitution of the United States. I refer to what for some years past has been almost universally called the "illegal cotton tax." The bill which I introduced is H. R. 472, and with the permission of the committee I will print it in my remarks.

There was no objection, and the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proceeds of the tax on cotton illegally collected from the people of the several States of the Union by the Government of the United States during the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, under and by virtue of the acts of Congress which provided for the levy and collection of such tax, and which said tax acts were passed July 1, 1862; March 7, 1864; July 13, 1866, and March 2, 1867, respectively, shall be refunded to the rightful owners, their heirs, or legal representatives; and to this end the Court of Claims is hereby clothed with full and complete jurisdiction to hear, to try, and determine all claims that may be filed in this behalf, said court to prescribe the rules for some simple and expeditious procedure, that persons claiming as original owners, heirs, or legal representatives may have the matter of their claims speedily heard and adjudicated.

SEC. 2. That immediately upon this act becoming a law, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall compile a statement from the records of his office showing the amount of money collected from the people of each State on account of the tax on cotton for each of the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, respectively, and showing, where the same is possible, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations from whom collected, and the respective amounts, and shall certify, under the seal of his office, that the same is full, complete, and correct, and then file it with the clerk of the Court of Claims. This statement shall be accessible to all persons, and shall be accepted as an accurate statement of the amount due the people of each of the States by the United States on account of the illegal taxes so collected.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, at the same time he files with the clerk of the Court of Claims a certified statement as required in section 2 of this act, file a duplicate of such statement with the Treasurer of the United States, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to the total amount shown by said statement for the purpose of paying the same in full. Each judgment rendered by the Court of Claims shall be promptly paid the claimant by the Treasurer of the United States, on a warrant drawn on the Treasurer in favor of such claimant by the clerk of the Court of Claims.

SEC. 4. That claimants shall be allowed the period of five years from the time when this act becomes a law within which to file their claims, and all money remaining in the Treasury to the credit of the different States unclaimed, as shown by the certified statement of the internal-revenue collector, the judgments and pending claims deducted, shall, on the warrants of the respective governors of the different States, be paid by the Treasurer of the United States to said States, and become a part of the rural school fund of the respective States.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately upon its passage and approval of the President or upon its becoming a law without such approval.

Mr. Chairman, in order that the House and the country may know just what is meant by the "illegal cotton tax," or the "illegal cotton taxes," I feel that it will not be out of place to give a brief history of the legislation itself, and something of the various efforts that have been made from time to time to enact relief legislation along the lines proposed in my bill. The need for this has been strongly emphasized during the present session of Congress. Members of Congress sometimes go astray concerning measures which they advocate, and are not always infallible with relation to the subject-matter of bills which they themselves present for the consideration of the House. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] has likewise introduced a bill relating to the "illegal cotton tax," and so zealous was he in the cause that before the holidays, and just seventeen days after the gentleman took the oath of office as a Member, he obligingly gave us the benefit of the exhaustive research that he had made of this subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, it matters not how loath I am to differ from the gentleman from Georgia, the truth of history demands that I do so on this occasion. The gentleman from Georgia in his bill refers to certain "money constituting the cotton-tax fund now held in the Treasury of the United States of America and known as the cotton-tax fund." He, also, in the speech which he delivered in this House on that subject, and which he himself said was his "first speech in Congress," several times made the statement that there was an "illegal cotton-tax fund," when the fact is there is not now, nor has there ever been, in the Treasury of the United States an "illegal cotton-tax fund," or any other kind of cotton-tax fund. I knew that the taxes levied upon cotton under the several acts of Congress had been collected and had been used by the Government of the United States, as all other revenue had been used, but, in order that there might be no question whatever hereafter with relation to the subject, on the 24th day of December, 1907, I addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 24, 1907.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In 1862 Congress levied a tax of one-half of 1 cent per pound on cotton; in 1864 Congress levied a tax of 2 cents per pound on cotton; in 1866 Congress levied a tax of 3 cents per pound on cotton; in 1867 Congress levied a tax of 2½ cents per pound on cotton, and in 1868 Congress repealed all laws levying direct taxes on cotton. During the life of these respective tax acts, viz, from 1862 to 1868, the United States Government, as shown by the record in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, collected the sum of $68,072,389.99 from the owners of cotton.

My understanding is that the money arising from these cotton-tax acts was treated just the same as money arising from internal-revenue taxes; that is to say, it was collected by the Government and used by the Government for governmental purposes. I notice, however, that some persons refer to the "illegal cotton-tax fund" as though this money was never used by the Government, but that it has been held for all these years in a separate and distinct fund, known and described as "the illegal cotton-tax fund."

I will appreciate it if you will advise me as to the truth of the matter.

Yours respectfully, FRANK CLARK.

On the 27th day of December, 1907, Mr. Edwards, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, wrote in reply, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 27, 1907.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 24th instant, relative to the tax on cotton collected during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1863, to June 30, 1868, I have to state that the provision authorizing the levy and collection of said tax is found in the seventy-fifth section of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government and to pay interest on the public debt," approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., pp. 432–489), and that the moneys derived from the tax on cotton, together with all other taxes levied and collected under the said act, were deposited as receipts from internal revenue and applied to the support of the Government and payment of interest on the public debt.

No separate or distinct account known or described as "cotton-tax fund" was ever kept on the books of the Treasury Department.

Respectfully,

J. H. EDWARDS,
Acting Secretary.

Thus it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Georgia was mistaken, and that if this or any similar legislation be enacted the Government of the United States will not find a fund on hand out of which the people who originally paid these taxes may be reimbursed, but will necessarily be compelled to resort to the usual means of raising money to liquidate governmental indebtedness. If any of the constituents of the gentleman from Georgia are interested in this matter, I trust he will hasten to advise them of the real facts.

There were four different acts of Congress levying a tax upon raw cotton. One was the act of July 1, 1862, which levied a tax of one-half of 1 cent per pound. The next was the act of March 7, 1864, which levied a duty of 2 cents per pound. The third was that of July 13, 1866, which levied a tax of 3 cents per pound, and the last was the act of March 2, 1867, which levied a tax of 2½ cents per pound. On the 3d day of February, 1868, Congress passed an act liberating cotton from all taxes thereafter.

In order that we may fully understand the legislation in this behalf, I call the attention of the House to these different acts of Congress.

The several statutory provisions laying taxes on cotton are as follows:

Act of July 1, 1862:

"On and after the 1st day of October, 1862, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one-half of 1 cent per pound on all cotton held or owned by any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons; and such tax shall be a lien thereon in the possession of any person whomsoever. And further, if any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall remove, carry, or transport the same from the place of its production before said tax shall be paid, such person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall forfeit and pay to the United States double the amount of such tax, to be recovered in any court having jurisdiction thereof: Provided, however, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as he may deem proper for the payment of said tax at places different from that of the production of said cotton: And provided further, That all cotton owned and held by any manufacturer of cotton fabrics on the 1st day (of) October, 1862, and prior thereto, shall be exempt from the tax hereby imposed." (12 Stat. L., p. 465.)

Act of March 7, 1864:

"From and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties provided in the act referred to in the first section of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all cotton produced or sold and removed for consumption, and upon which no duty has been levied, paid, or collected, a duty of 2 cents per pound; and such duty shall be and remain a lien thereon until said duty shall have been paid, in the possession of any person whomsoever. And further, if any person or persons, corporation, or association of persons remove, carry, or transport the same, or procure any other party or parties to remove, carry, or transport the same from the place of its production, with the intent to evade the duty thereon, or to defraud the Government, before said duty shall have been paid, such person or persons, corporation, or association of persons shall forfeit and pay to the United States double the amount of said duty, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That all cotton sold by or on account of the Government of the United States shall be free and exempt from duty at the time of and after the sale thereof, and the same shall be marked free, and the purchaser furnished with such a bill of sale as shall clearly and accurately describe the same, which shall be deemed and taken to be a permit authorizing the sale or removal thereof." (13 Stat. L., p. 15.)

Act of July 13, 1866:

"There shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all cotton produced within the United States, and upon which no tax has been levied, paid, or collected, a tax of 3 cents per pound, as hereinafter provided * * * and such tax shall be and remain a lien thereon, in possession of any person whomsoever, from the time when this law takes effect, or such cotton is produced, as aforesaid, until the same shall have been paid." (14 Stat. L., p. 98.)

Act of March 2, 1867:

"On and after the 1st day of September, 1867, a tax of 2½ cents per pound only shall be levied, collected, and paid on any cotton produced within the United States." (14 Stat. L., p. 471.)

Act of February 3, 1868:

"All cotton grown in the United States after the year 1867 shall be exempt from internal tax; and cotton imported from foreign countries on and after November 1, 1868, shall be exempt from duty." (15 Stat. L., p. 34.)

When the tax of 1862 and that of 1864 was levied the country was in the throes of civil war, and there may be something in the idea sometimes advanced, that the exigencies of war demanded and justified the setting at naught of statutory laws and constitutional provisions. I do not subscribe to that doctrine, because I believe that in a republican government such as ours there can arise no circumstances, there can exist no conditions, there can be no emergencies which would justify the National Legislature in violating the solemnly enacted provisions of the organic law.

Be that as it may, there can be no sort of question but that the act of 1866 and the act of 1867 were both passed in a time of profound peace and therefore can not in any wise be regarded as "war measures," and if the gentlemen will examine the statement which I shall ask permission to incorporate in my remarks, they will find that the great bulk of the taxes levied and collected on raw cotton came from the acts of 1866 and 1867. The tabulated statement of the amounts annually collected in the different States in pursuance of these acts of Congress has been furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury and is as follows:

So far as I have been able to find, and I have made exhaustive research, only one case has ever been brought in the courts directly affecting these acts of Congress levying a tax on cotton, and that suit was brought to test the validity of the act of July 13, 1866.

On the second Monday in June, 1867, William M. Farrington commenced an action in the law court of Memphis, Tenn., against Rolfe S. Saunders, a collector of internal revenue, for damages for the seizure of 148 bales of cotton which had been assessed by an internal-revenue assessor for taxes amounting to $2,005.74. The case was removed to the United States circuit court for the sixth circuit by Saunders, and that court decided in his favor. Farrington appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on December 6, 1867, and the judgment of the court below was affirmed by the Supreme Court—a divided court, there being only eight justices who heard the case, and they stood four to four—February 20, 1871.

It can be found in only one volume, and that is a volume known as "Records of Briefs," volume 216.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption right there? Why was not that decision reported?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know. The fact is that it was not.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Were any written opinions given by the divided court either way?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No.

Mr. SIMS. There is no way, then, to get a written statement of the four justices who contended against the constitutionality of the act?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, sir; there is not. All that is contained in the volume that I referred to is copies of the pleadings and the argument of counsel on both sides, with a statement as to the court's finding. But the judgment was affirmed solely because of a divided court. Four were in favor of affirmance, and four were in favor of reversal, and that, of course, resulted in affirmance of the judgment of the court below.

The facts in the case appear in the following case agreed, which had been filed in the circuit court at the September term, 1867:

The plaintiff and defendant have agreed that the above cause, now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the district of west Tennessee, shall be tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, upon the following facts, which are submitted and agreed upon by both parties, to wit:

1. That on the 26th day of June, 1867, the plaintiff, William M. Farrington, was the holder and owner, in his own right, of 148 bales of cotton, of the net weight of 66,858 pounds. That said cotton was the growth of and produced within the United States.

2. That no internal revenue or other tax had been levied, paid, or collected upon said cotton.

3. That on the said 26th day of June, 1897, H. F. Cooper, assistant United States assessor for the eighth district of the State of Tennessee, within which said district said cotton then was, acting under the provisions of the act of Congress of the United States, approved 13th July, 1866, assessed a tax of 3 cents per pound upon said cotton, making in the aggregate the sum of $2,005.74, and returned said assessment on that day into the office of the defendant, who is the United States revenue collector for said district.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] one question. Does the statement show the issue raised in the case—that is, the grounds of the issue?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes, sir; fully and completely.

4. That the plaintiff on the same day protested against said assessment, for the reason that said assessment was without authority of law, said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, being contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States of America and void.

5. That on the 27th day of June, 1867, the defendant, who is the legally authorized United States internal-revenue collector for said district, the said cotton being then within said district, demanded said tax of 3 cents per pound on said cotton, amounting in the aggregate to the said sum of $2,005.74, from the plaintiff.

6. That the plaintiff then and there protested against said tax, and protested against the defendant's demand, and objected to pay the same for the reasons assigned in his protest against the assessment of said tax, and was removing said cotton from said district.

7. That the defendant then and there, on the day aforesaid, averred that he would, as internal-revenue collector, seize said cotton, and threatened the plaintiff then present that he would forthwith seize said cotton unless said tax was paid to him.

8. That the plaintiff thereupon and by reason of said threats paid to the defendant the said sum of $2,005.74, lawful money of the United States, that being the amount of said tax, under protest.

9. That on the same day the plaintiff demanded said money back from the defendant; that the defendant refused to refund it, and the plaintiff thereupon on the same day duly appealed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at Washington, according to the provisions of law in that regard and the regulation of the Secretary of the Treasury, established in pursuance thereof.

10. That the plaintiff's appeal, the same containing a properly certified record of the acts of the said assessor and the defendant, and the reasons of plaintiff's protest, were duly forwarded to and laid before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, who examined the plaintiff's claim for the refunding of said sum of $2,005.74, and rejected it, for the reason that he regarded the law imposing a duty of 3 cents per pound upon cotton as constitutional.

11. That the action of the Commissioner was on the 1st day of August, 1867, and within six months before the suing out of summons and commencement of the plaintiff's action in this cause.

12. That the plaintiff and defendant were forthwith notified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of his action in the premises, and on the 10th day of August, 1867, the plaintiff again, and after notice as above to the defendant, demanded to have said sum of $2,005.74 paid back to him, which the defendant refused.

13. That the amount in controversy in this cause is more than $2,000.

14. That the following tabular statement shows the growth and production of cotton within the United States from the year 1820–21 to the year 1866–67, inclusive, in bales:

1820–21	430,000	1831–32	987,417

1848–49	2,728,296	1861–62 (estimated)	1,000,000

1854–55	2,847,339

That of the above annual yield and product, three-fourths to five-sixths of the number of bales have been annually exported from the United States, except in the years 1865–66 and 1866–67, the exports for those years being about two-thirds to three-fourths, and that the returns received at the Statistical Bureau at Washington show that 667,137,870 pounds of cotton have been exported from the United States for the year ending June 30, 1867, of the value of $202,807,910.

Now, it is agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that this cause shall be tried by the court upon the foregoing facts admitted by both parties, and the court may draw all inferences and make all deductions from said facts that a jury might or could legally draw or make, and the questions at issue between the parties which the court is asked to adjudge and determine is as to the validity and constitutionality of the various acts of Congress imposing a tax upon cotton, and particularly to the act of Congress approved July 13, 1866, imposing a tax of 3 cents per pound upon cotton produced within the United States. And if upon the trial of the cause and argument of counsel the court should be of the opinion that said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, imposing said tax of 3 cents per pound upon cotton produced within the United States is constitutional and valid, then the judgment of the court shall be simply for the defendant and against the plaintiff and his security for the costs of the cause. But if the court shall be of the opinion that said act (of) Congress imposing said tax is unconstitutional and invalid, then the judgment of the court shall be for the plaintiff, that he recover of the defendant the said sum of $2,005.74, with interest from the 27th day of June, 1867, and the costs of the cause.

The right to appeal, or to take an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, or to prosecute a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, at Washington, or wherever the same shall be held, is reserved to both parties, to be taken by the losing party at his option, according to law and the rules of practice in the circuit and supreme courts of the United States regulating the practice in appeals and writs of error from the circuit court to the Supreme Court.

This 2d day of September, 1867.

WILLIAM M. FARRINGTON,
By WRIGHT & M'KISICK, Attorneys.
ROLFE S. SAUNDERS,
By MARLAND L. PERKINS,
Asst. United States Atty. District of West Tennessee.

Judgment.

Upon the foregoing case agreed, Judge Trigg rendered judgment as follows:

"And upon consideration of the same the court is of the opinion that the said act of Congress of the 13th of July, 1866, imposing an internal-revenue tax of 3 cents per pound upon cotton grown and produced within the United States is constitutional and valid, and that the law of the case upon the facts agreed is with the defendant. It is therefore considered by the court that the defendant go hence and recover of the plaintiff, and of T. A. Nelson, his security therefor, the costs of this suit, and that execution issue."

In the Supreme Court of the United States briefs were filed by P. Phillips, W. L. Sharkey, Albert Pike, James Hughes, Robertson Topp, J. A. Campbell, Robert W. Johnson and B. R. Curtis, for Farrington; and by Attorney-General Akerman, Assistant Attorney-General C. H. Hill, and, later, by Attorney-General E. R. Hoar, and Assistant Attorney-General W. A. Field, for Saunders.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Did either one of the justices file any opinion in the case?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, sir; they did not.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then your remarks embrace not the opinion, but only the findings of fact?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is all.

Counsel for Farrington contended that the acts laying the tax on cotton violated all the provisions of the Constitution of the United States delegating the right to levy and collect taxes.

Counsel for Saunders controverted this position, and relied mainly upon the case of Hylton v. United States (3 Dallas, 171). Their contention was summarized in the brief of Attorney-General Hoar as follows:

If the cotton tax imposed by the act of 1866 was a direct tax, then, inasmuch as it was not laid by the rule of apportionment, it must be pronounced unconstitutional. It must also be pronounced unconstitutional if it was an export tax. But if, on the other hand, the tax was an indirect one simply, it is submitted that there was no conflict between the provision referred to and the Constitution, and its validity should be affirmed. He also contended that "the tax on cotton of 1866 is not a direct tax, being neither a tax on land nor a tax on slaves or other capitation tax.

I desire to call the attention of the House especially to the admission made by Attorney-General Hoar in his brief in the Farrington case that—

If the cotton tax imposed by the act of 1866 was a direct tax, then inasmuch as it was not laid by the rule of appropriation it must be pronounced unconstitutional.

Was it a direct tax? Let us now examine the constitutional provisions applicable to this tax. What are they? Upon an examination of the Constitution it will be found that it contains only four provisions respecting Federal taxation, and they are as follows:

1. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. (Art I, sec. 2, clause 3.)

The fourteenth amendment modified this provision so that the whole number of persons in each State should be counted, "Indians not taxed" excluded.

2. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. (Art. I, sec. 8, clause 1.)

3. No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken. (Art. I, sec. 9, clause 4.)

4. No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State. (Art. I, sec. 9, clause 5.)

In the light of these constitutional provisions, I desire to call attention briefly to the objections which lie to the levy and collection of all these taxes. First, my insistence is that each and every one of the acts referred to levied a direct tax upon raw cotton, which was violative of that provision of the Constitution which prohibits the levy of a direct tax, except it be done by the rule of apportionment; that Congress has the power to levy direct taxes is not now and never has been questioned since the Constitution itself was adopted. The Constitution says, in Article I, section 2, clause 3, that "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers."

Gentlemen will search the four enactments of Congress in this behalf in vain for any provision levying the tax in accordance with that requirement of the organic law.

Again in Article I, section 9, clause 4, we have this provision:

No capitation or other direct tax shall be levied unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

In none of these statutory enactments will you find any provision that these taxes are to be laid "in proportion to the census," as is positively required.

I desire also at this place to call the attention of this House to the historical fact that so great was the fear of members of the Constitutional Convention that Congress might have the power to levy direct taxes without regard to the rule of apportionment, or the population of the different States, as shown by the census, that the Constitution itself would never have been adopted by the people of the different States if they had not been solemnly assured by the leading statesmen of that day that it would never result in oppressive taxation, or violate in that respect the principle of equality. [Applause.] That this is true I apprehend no one will deny, and I cite those who desire to investigate the subject further to "The Federalist," No. 36.

In the argument of Mr. Phillips, of counsel for Farrington, who was plaintiff in error in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Farrington v. Saunders, in referring to these constitutional provisions we find this strong language:

By these restrictions the States supposed that they had protected themselves against partial or corrupt legislation. For indirect taxation they established uniformity; for direct they secured apportionment according to the census.

In the history of this Government Congress has several times resorted to the levying of direct taxes for the purposes of the Government. But in each and every case, with very few exceptions (and in those exceptions the money was subsequently refunded), Congress has always laid the tax by the rule of apportionment. [Applause.]

Perry on Political Economy, page 443, defines a direct tax as follows:

A direct tax is levied on the very persons who are themselves expected to pay it; an indirect tax is demanded from one person in the expectation that he will pay it provisionally, but will indemnify himself in the higher price he will receive from the ultimate consumer. Thus the income tax is direct, while duties laid on imported goods are indirect.

There can, I think, be no question but that these taxes come squarely within the definition of a direct tax given by Perry. There has never been any argument worthy of the name to the contrary.

I suppose that the best defense that has ever been made for the levy of these cotton taxes was made in a letter to Hon. George S. Boutwell, then Secretary of the Treasury, by the Hon. Israel Kimball, at that time Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The opinion of Mr. Kimball can be found in Executive Document No. 181, Forty-second Congress, third session. It is covered in a letter from the Hon. George S. Boutwell, Secretary of the Treasury, under date of February 4, 1873, and directed to the Hon. James G. Blaine, at that time Speaker of the House of Representatives. Mr. Kimball consumes some fourteen pages undertaking to bolster up the right of the Government to insist upon these taxes. But when his entire argument is sifted and brought down to its last analysis, the one main reason that he gives to support his contention that these taxes were indirect and not direct in his statement, unsupported in reason or by fact that the producer did not in fact pay the tax; that the tax was added to the selling price and the consumer paid it. With all due respect to Mr. Kimball, this contention in the minds of those who know the present situation, and who have been familiar with conditions in the cotton-growing section of our country for the past thirty-five or forty years, is simply absurd, impossible, and ridiculous. No man who ever lived on a farm, South, North, East, or West, but who knows that the farmer has no more to do with fixing a price for his products than has "the man in the moon." When a farmer has anything to sell he is forced to accept whatever may be offered him by those who buy. When the farmer desires to buy he is forced to pay the price put on the goods by the seller. It is notorious in the South that the price of cotton has always been fixed in the market at Liverpool.

Messrs. Hughes and Sharkey, of counsel for Farrington, have, however, answered this contention so much better than I can that I shall adopt their argument, which, with reference to Mr. Kimball's contention, is as follows:

Is it (this tax) levied on the person who pays it, or does some other person ultimately pay it? Can the planter add this to the price of the cotton when he sells it? The court must assume this; otherwise it is a direct tax. Can the court assume it in the face of the facts? Liverpool is the great cotton mart of the world and controls the price of cotton. Can the planter who ships his cotton to Liverpool add this tax to the price? If the Southern States had entire control of the market, or a monopoly, perhaps he might, but there the cotton of the United States comes in competition with the cotton of about twelve or fifteen other countries, and the planter's price must conform to the standard there fixed. Consequently he is not remunerated to the value of a farthing a bale. The whole loss falls on him. He is the person who pays it.

If gentlemen will investigate the debates had in the Constitutional Convention on this subject of taxation, they will readily see that the contention which I make here and which was made by the planter's attorneys in the Farrington case is absolutely correct. Gentlemen upon that investigation will find that as the taxing power was originally introduced in the report of the Committee of Detail it stood—

The legislature of the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. (See Madison's debates, p. 378.)

If this clause had stood as the Committee of Detail originally reported it, it would have given to Congress unlimited power of taxation, which might have been used to the advantage of some States and to the prejudice of others, and for this reason, which was conceded by all, when this taxation matter came before the convention itself for adoption, it was amended by adding thereto these words:

"But all such duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

And right here is the provision of the organic law under which it is sought to justify the levy of these taxes. The insistence of those who support the legality of the tax levy is that the tax is laid by the rule of uniformity, as it is stated in the act that the tax is to be levied on "all cotton produced within the United States."

This clause is quoted and gentlemen say that as the tax is laid upon all cotton in the United States it is necessarily uniform and fully complies with the constitutional requirement. If cotton were grown in all the States of the Union this contention would be eminently correct, but when it is known to the courts and known to the Congress and known to every one that at the time of the levy of these taxes cotton could not be grown in any but eleven States, and that while the act levied the tax upon all cotton grown within the United States, it would not cost some States one penny and would extort from the pockets of the people in other States millions of dollars, the plea of uniformity vanishes into thin air. [Applause.]

The case relied on by the advocates of the legality of these acts is the case of Hylton v. the United States, to be found in 3 Dallas, page 171. This was a case of an act of Congress levying a tax upon carriages, and an investigation of it will show that the court sustained the constitutionality of the act largely and, in fact, I might say wholly, upon the ground that it was a tax on the consumer of an article. The three learned judges in that case, who delivered written opinions, concurred in intimating (they say expressly that they do not give a judicial opinion) that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution are only two, to wit: the capitation tax and the tax on land. Even if the intimation of these judges were correct, and that direct taxes as referred to in the Constitution were limited to two, and that those two were the capitation tax and the tax on land, then the contention which I here make would be sound. I assert this because the courts and the law writers of approved authority all concur in the holding that the product of land, whether it be in rentals or whether it be in crops, stands upon exactly the same footing as the land itself. In other words, if the levy of a tax upon land would be a direct tax, and it should be required that the tax be levied by the rule of apportionment, then cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco or other raw product of the land itself would likewise be considered as land and the rule of apportionment would necessarily have to be complied with.

I desire also to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States, when it delivered the opinion in the Hylton case, was denied access to the debates in the Federal Convention. It is recognized in all courts that one of the very best rules of statutory or constitutional construction is the will or the meaning of the legislator as contained in the debate leading up to the adoption of the particular enactment. The debates in the Federal Convention were secret. No copies were allowed, and when the convention adjourned the journals were placed in charge of the President and they were not laid before Congress, or the country, or published, until after the decision in the Hylton case was made. This statement I get from the argument of Mr. Robertson Topp, of counsel for appellant in the Farrington Saunders case, and Mr. Topp, after making this statement, says:

Thus it will be seen that the court was deprived of one of the best means of determining the real meaning of the Constitution, viz, the reasons given by those who made it.

Referring to this fear that some of the States would be in the power of the others and that grave injustice would be done the weaker ones in the matter of taxation, Mr. Madison, in the convention, said:

It is represented to be oppressive that the States which have slaves and tobacco should pay taxes on these for Federal wants when other States who have them not would escape. But does the Constitution on the table admit of this? On the contrary, there is a proportion to be laid on each State according to its population.

Mr. Topp, in his argument in the Farrington case, submits some figures taken from the Census of 1860, which strike me as being a powerful exposition of what might occur and of the injustice that might be perpetrated, and which, in fact, was perpetrated in the levy of these cotton taxes. I desire to call attention to the table referred to:

By referring to the Census of 1860 it will be seen that the total population of the United States was	31, 445, 089
By the same table the population of the 11 cotton-producing States was	9, 103, 333
By the same table the value of the real and personal property of the United States in 1860 was	$16, 159, 616, 068
Of the 11 cotton-producing States	$5, 402, 165, 107
By referring to the agricultural report of 1867, page 90, it will be seen the corn crop of that year was worth	$610, 948, 390
The wheat crop	$421, 796, 460
The oat crop	$172, 472, 970
The hay crop	$372, 864, 670
The cotton crop	$201, 470, 495
And that including rye, barley, buckwheat, potatoes, and tobacco, the whole crop of 1867 was worth	$2, 007, 462, 231

By referring to the Census of 1860 it will be seen that the cotton crop, except 100 bales raised in Missouri and 6 bales in Illinois, was entirely raised in the 11 cotton States, and such has been the case since the existence of those States and since cotton was produced for export.

By referring to the tax laws of the United States it will be seen that cotton and sugar were the only crude products of the soil taxed—that corn, which grew in every State from Maine to Texas, worth treble, wheat worth double, hay worth nearly double the cotton crop; that in fact the whole crop of every character and description, passes free, whilst cotton, less than one-tenth in value, is singled out and made to bear ruinous burdens—1867, 33⅓ per cent of the gross value—whilst more than two-thirds of the people escape the tax.

Is this fair? Is this just? Is this uniform?

The attorneys for the Government in the Farrington case, in addition to the contention that these taxes on cotton were not direct taxes, took the further position that the tax on cotton was an excise and therefore the rule of apportionment did not apply. Let us examine this contention under the light of the Constitution.

The Encyclopedia Britannica under the article excise defines an excise to be—

A term used in finance to signify the duty charged in a country upon articles produced in it before they are permitted to get into the possession of the public.

Judge Storey says:

An excise is an inland imposition or duty; a duty or tax laid on certain articles produced or consumed at home.

Accepting these definitions as being correct, how stand the cotton taxes with relation to clause 1, section 8, Article I of the Constitution of the United States? That clause reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Were these taxes uniform throughout the United States? That is the gist of the whole question, and upon the correct answer to that question must stand or fall the cotton taxes.

We are permitted in the discussion of a question like this, whether that discussion take place in the court room or in the legislative halls, to take notice of the physical conditions of the country. We are permitted to consider those things which are matters of common information. Acting upon this rule, the Congress must have known that when these taxes were levied cotton was grown in only eleven of the States of the Union. Outside of those eleven States I believe that no cotton was grown in the United States except about one hundred bales in the State of Missouri and about six bales in the southern part of the State of Illinois. This being true—and no one will question its correctness—can it be contended that these acts were uniform throughout the United States?

In order that the Congress may see and know and understand just how uniform these acts were in their practical operation, if they will turn to the table that I have incorporated in my remarks they will see that under these four acts of Congress levying taxes upon raw cotton the State of Georgia paid into the Treasury of the United States $11,897,094.98, while the State of Kansas, with a population almost as large, only paid into the Treasury of the country $286.15. And so in many other cases these figures are of themselves fully sufficient to show the injustice and gross inequality of these cotton taxes. But I have discovered in the act of August 5, 1861 (12 Statutes at Large, pp. 294–295), some figures which by comparison with those of the table referred to will make the inequality still more impressive from another point of view. That act laid a direct tax of twenty millions of dollars upon the United States and apportioned the same among the several States according to population. It was a constitutional act, and it is highly instructive to compare the amounts apportioned under it to the several cotton States with the amounts actually collected under the operation of the unconstitutional cotton-tax acts. I have done this in a tabular statement which I now present:

Table showing direct taxes apportioned to the several cotton-growing States by act of August 5, 1861, and amounts collected in same States under the cotton-tax acts.

Name of State.	Apportionment under act of 1861.	Collected under cotton-tax acts.
Georgia	$584,367	$11,897,094
Alabama	529,313	10,388,972
Mississippi	413,081	8,742,995
Louisiana	385,888	10,098,501
Florida	77,522	918,944
Arkansas	281,883	2,555,638
Tennessee	669,498	7,873,480
North Carolina	576,194	1,959,704
South Carolina	363,579	4,172,430

It would be hard to find in the history of the world a more grievous, oppressive, or unjustifiable exercise of arbitrary power than that illustrated by this table. But that is not all. The direct taxes laid by the act of 1861, in conformity with the Constitution have been refunded to the States from which they were collected; while these illegal and unconstitutional cotton taxes have been covered into the Treasury, and used for the benefit of the United States, and no restitution made. It is an unusual case.

Suppose the acts of Congress imposing these taxes had provided that eleven States, naming them, should pay these taxes and that the remaining States should be exempt therefrom. Would it be contended for a moment that this was a compliance with the constitutional provision which required that such taxes should be uniform throughout the United States? Certainly not. Can Congress by simply placing the words "all cotton produced in the United States" evade this provision when Congress knew, or must have known, that the whole burden would fall upon eleven States and would not and could not be made uniform in its operation throughout the United States? Such a contention would merely be a juggling with words, and a prostitution of a solemnly enacted provision of our organic law unworthy of the merest tyro in constitutional law. If our Constitution can be distorted and emasculated by such legislative legerdemain, then the right to live, the right to be free, and the right to pursue happiness, for which our fathers fought and died in the Revolution, are not protected by our sacred bond of union. Not in anger, but in a broad spirit of brotherly love and patriotic devotion to our beloved country, let me appeal to the majority to right this most grievous wrong to constitutional government.

I also take the position, Mr. Chairman, that these taxes are obnoxious to another provision of the Constitution. Clause 5 of section 9, Article I, provides:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

That cotton, when these different acts were passed by Congress, was an article of export was well known. Practically every pound of cotton grown in the Southern States during the period from 1862 to 1868 was grown expressly for export, and export to foreign countries. The courts and the law writers of approved authority agree that the clause of the Constitution to which I have just called attention applies as well to articles exported from one State in the Union to another State in the Union as it does from one of our States to foreign countries.

It is said that the cotton crop of 1867 was 2,240,282 bales, of which 1,657,015 bales were shipped to foreign parts, leaving for home consumption 553,267 bales, of which it is estimated that about 60,000 bales were manufactured in the cotton-growing States. In other words, 60,000 bales out of a total of 2,240,282 bales, remained in the States where the cotton was grown, thus showing that the great bulk of the crop was exported and establishing raw cotton as an export beyond all question.

That this constitutional provision applies to the exporting of goods from one State to another in the Union, I desire to call attention to the definition of the word "export" given by Webster. He says that exporting means—

To carry out, to convey, or transport any traffic, produce, or goods, from one country to another, or from one State or jurisdiction to another, either by water or land. We export wares and merchandise from the United States to Europe. The Northern States export manufactures to South Carolina and Georgia.

In the case of Almy v. California, the court decided that articles of export from one State to another could not be taxed. No court in this country has ever rendered an opinion, not even excepting the Hylton case, that is contrary to the contention which I make for the refunding of this money wrongfully exacted from the people of these different States.

We are standing in this demand squarely upon the law as it has been declared, and upon our rights under the Constitution, as those rights have always been conceded. In the case of Pacific Insurance Company v. Soule, the learned judge who rendered the opinion in that case said:

The taxing power is given in the most comprehensive terms. The only limitations imposed are that direct taxes, including the capitation tax, shall be apportioned; that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform, and that no duty shall be imposed on articles exported from any State. With these exceptions the exercise of the power is in all respects unfettered. (7 Wallace, p. 446.)

In asking the passage of this bill, and insisting upon this measure of retarded justice, I stand squarely upon the law as laid down by the court in the case of Soule. This Government ought to have the right to tax anything and everything when the necessities of the Government require it. But this Government in the exercise of that right should comply strictly with every provision of the Constitution, else constitutional government is a failure. Every man who loves his country and who honors the flag must agree in preserving without variance each and every clause of our organic law as framed and handed down to us by the patriots who planted the seeds of liberty in the friendly soil of this western world.

Since I have referred to the direct tax act of 1861, it may be well, in this place, to refer to other acts amendatory of it, and to certain decisions of the courts construing the same. The acts of June 7, 1862, 12 Stat. L., 422; January 6, 1863, 12 Stat. L., 640; March 3, 1865, 13 Stat. L., 501, and the resolution of February 25, 1867, 14 Stat. L., 568, made provisions for the assessment and collection of this tax.

All these acts were construed by the Court of Claims in the case of Seabrook v. United States (21 Court of Claims Reports, 39), Harrison's Case (20 id., 176), and Thompson's Case (20 id., 270). In all these cases it was held that where a tax has been illegally collected, the money should be refunded. And in Miles v. Johnson (59 Fed. Rep., 38, 40) it was held that the word "tax" includes taxes which have been illegally levied, as well as those which have been illegally collected, though legally levied. In nearly all jurisdictions provision is made by statute for the refunding of taxes illegally exacted (27 American and English Encyclopedia of Law (2d ed.) 756–757). And the word "exacted" includes the levy as well as the collection.

The act of June 8, 1872 (17 Stat. L., 339), restored to the former legal owners all lands then held by the United States under the direct tax acts, upon payment of taxes, interest, expenses, etc., and released the title of the United States to the said lands. And subsequent statutes have, as I have said, refunded the entire amount collected under the act of 1861 and the acts amendatory of it, to the several States. See the act of March 2, 1891, "to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861." (26 Stat. L., 822.) By this act it was enacted that "it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to credit to each State and Territory of the United States and to the District of Columbia a sum equal to all collections by set-off or otherwise made from said States and Territories and the District of Columbia, or from any of the citizens or inhabitants thereof, or other persons, under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the amendatory acts thereto," and "that all moneys due to the United States on the quota of direct tax apportioned by section 8 of said act are hereby remitted and relinquished." And an appropriation was made of "a sum sufficient to pay all money found due to them under the provisions of this act." In almost every general deficiency bill which has passed this House within twenty years, there has been an appropriation for refunding taxes illegally collected. I will cite only two instances out of many—the act of April 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 547), appropriated $31,156.43 "for the refunding of taxes illegally collected." The act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 891), appropriated $12,317.42 for the same purpose. Section 3689 of the Revised Statutes contains a general provision requiring all such taxes to be refunded upon application of the party aggrieved.

Now, I claim that the cotton taxes were not only illegally collected, but illegally levied; because, in addition to the violation of the rule of apportionment, Congress, in laying these taxes, also violated the constitutional provision against laying duties on exports from any State, and those provisions relating to due process of law. But a literal compliance with the mandatory provisions of the Constitution, whether affirmative or negative, is a condition precedent to the validity of any law laying taxes on the property of the people. Nor does it matter, therefore, whether this cotton tax was a war tax, as the gentleman from Georgia says it was, or not; for the taxing power is restricted and qualified in respect to all taxation, by all the general limitations which are imposed upon its authority by the Constitution. (Wilkes Co. v. Coler, 180 U. S., 506, 525.) The gentleman from Georgia is, however, again mistaken, unquestionably, as to the two last acts, and, in my opinion, the first two also.

Furthermore, these acts violate the fundamental principle of all taxation. We are inclined on any and all occasions to boast that under our beneficent form of government "all men are equal before the law." The rich and the poor, the great and the small, the strong and the weak, we have always been taught, must, in proportion to ability, aid in bearing the burdens of government while permitted to share its blessings.

That principle, which is as fully applicable to the action of the Federal Government as to that of any State, county, or municipal government, was stated by Judge Cooley in the case of The People v. Town of Salem (20 Mich., 452, 474), as follows:

> The tax must be laid according to some rule of apportionment, not arbitrarily or by caprice, but so that the burden may be made to fall with something like impartiality upon the persons or property upon which it justly and equitably should rest. A State burden is not to be imposed upon any territory smaller than the whole State, nor a county burden upon any territory smaller or greater than the county. Equality in the imposition of the burden is of the very essence of the power itself, and though absolute equality and absolute justice are never attainable, the adoption of some rule tending to that end is indispensable.

Under this legislation the Government of the United States collected, mainly from the people of the Southern States, who had no voice in laying these taxes, the sum of $68,072,388.99, and disposed of that sum as it did of legitimate revenue. Every man, no matter from what State he hails, or what may be his politics, should support this measure as an act of simple justice to the people who were wronged. In all fairness, that sum should be refunded to those from whom it was extorted, and I believe that the bill I have introduced to that end should have the support of every fair-minded man in Congress.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if that included all the taxes collected on cotton from 1861 to 1868?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That included all the money under the four acts of Congress collected and accounted for.

Mr. SIMS. That includes all that went into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. But a great deal was collected that never went into the Treasury, and I do not understand that this makes the Government liable for that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; only for the principal collected and accounted for by being paid into the Treasury of the United States. No interest is asked, simply the principal.

Surely, those who were compelled to pay these unconstitutional taxes should not be treated worse than those persons who, acting under the provisions of the sugar-bounty law, spent money in improvements and machinery needed for the production of sugar. When the sugar bounty was declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia (Miles Planting Co. v. Carlisle, 5 D. C., App. 138), Congress refunded to them, by the act of 1895, the money which they had expended in accordance with the act of 1890, known as the "McKinley bill." In construing the act of 1895, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the celebrated Sugar Bounty Case (United States v. Realty Co., 163 U. S., 442–443), said:

> Among the latest examples of payments that are not of a right or of any legal claim, but which are in the nature of a gratuity depending upon equitable considerations, are the cases just decided by this court of Blagge v. Balch, Brooks v. Codman, and Foote v. Women's Board of Missions, reported as one case in 162 U. S., 439. The claims in those cases are what have been known as the "French spoliation claims," being based upon depredations of French cruisers upon our commerce prior to July, 1801. An appropriation for their payment was made by Congress in 1891 upon the conditions and to the class of persons named in the act. Questions arose as to the proper interpretation of the act and as to the character of the payments provided for therein. This court held the payments were purposely brought by Congress within the category of payments that are not of right, but which are in the nature of a gratuity and as an act of grace, though founded upon a prior moral or honorable obligation to pay to some one who might be said in some way to represent the original sufferers. No question of the power of Congress to make such appropriation was raised by anyone.
> The power to provide for claims upon the State founded in equity and justice has also been recognized as existing in the State governments. For example, in Guilford v. Chenango County (13 N. Y., 143), it was held by the New York court of appeals that the legislature was not confined in its appropriation of public moneys to sums to be raised by taxation in favor of individuals to cases in which legal demands existed against the State, but that it could recognize claims founded in equity and justice in the largest sense of these terms or in gratitude or in charity.
> Of course, the difference between the powers of the State legislatures and that of the Congress of the United States is not lost sight of, but it is believed that in relation to the power to recognize and to pay obligations resting only upon moral considerations or upon the general principles of right and justice, the Federal Congress stands upon a level with the State legislature.
> In truth, the general proposition that Congress can direct the payment of debts which have only a strong moral and honorable obligation for their support is not, as we understand it, denied by the learned counsel for the United States.

No one can deny that the claim of the cotton planters is altogether as valid as the "sugar-bounty claims" or the "French spoliation claims." The cotton planters acted under the guaranty of the Constitution of the United States, that their products should not be taken from them without just compensation or due process of law, unless by means of direct taxes apportioned among the several States according to numbers. This guaranty was violated by the Federal Government. Under the guise of taxation, the Government compelled them to contribute a large portion of their property to public uses. In the "Income tax cases" it was clearly demonstrated that any law of this kind was invalid. What, then, is the legal consequence? Is it not clear that the Government assumed the responsibility of refunding to those from whom it took the money in question every cent so taken? But for the prevalence of sectional ill-feeling, these claims would have been paid thirty-three years ago. In the Forty-third Congress bills were introduced, with that end in view, by Mr. McKee of Mississippi, by Mr. White of Alabama on behalf of Mr. Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia, by Mr. Blount of Georgia, and also by Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Cook. In the Forty-fourth Congress a similar bill was introduced by Mr. Roger Q. Mills of Texas. These bills, respectively, were: H. R. 2250, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund certain taxes collected by the Government of the United States on raw cotton during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, introduced March 2, 1874, by Mr. McKee; H. R. 2338, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund the cotton tax, introduced by Mr. White, on behalf of Mr. Stephens, who was absent on account of sickness; H. R. 1076, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund taxes collected by the United States on raw cotton during the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, introduced by Mr. Cook; H. R. 1632, Forty-third Congress, first session, to extend the time for collecting the cotton tax and reviving such claims as are now barred, introduced by Mr. Blount; H. R. 3448, Forty-third Congress, first session, to refund the cotton tax, introduced by Mr. Sheldon; H. R. 982, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, refunding the cotton tax to the producer of the cotton, introduced by

Mr. Mills. All of these bills except Mr. Blount's were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, but were never reported back. The men who prepared them were among the best lawyers then in Congress; but the animosities engendered by the late war were still too strong to secure for them a respectful hearing.

Another reason and a very cogent one and one which should appeal strongly to the conscience of Congress, is the fact that when these taxes were levied, when these acts of Congress were enacted, the eleven States affected by them and which had to bear the burden of over sixty millions of dollars of taxation, had no representatives in either branch of this Congress; no representative in this House and no Senator at the other end of the Capitol was here to raise his voice or to cast his vote on these questions which so vitally affected the impoverished people of the eleven cotton-growing States.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, that provision of the Constitution with reference to representation and taxation was violated. It seems to me that this objection to the validity of the taxes in question ought to appeal more strongly, if possible, to the conscience of Congress than even the other clauses which were violated by these different acts. The Constitution says:

Representation and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers.

'It has been said that—representation constitutes the genius of this Government, and to impose taxes or burdens without it is to change its character, but for taxation without representation the Government itself would never have existed.

The stamp act, the act placing a duty on tea, and other acts of the British Parliament brought on the Revolution on the ground pure and simple that it was legislation without representation. [Applause.] This government had its origin in the protest of the fathers against taxation without representation. In 1766 on the question of the repeal of the stamp act in the British Parliament Lord Camden, formerly Chief Justice Pratt, said:

My proposition is this:
"I repeat it and will maintain it to the last hour. Taxation and representation are inseparable. Opposition is founded in the law of nature. For whatsoever is a man's own, it is absolutely his own. No man has the right to take it from him without his consent. Whoever attempts to do it does him an injury. Whoever does it commits a robbery." (See 5 Bancroft's History, pp. 446–48.)

In discussing the question of the right of Parliament to tax America, William Pitt in the House of Commons said:

I will only speak to one point—the point which seems not to have been generally understood. I mean the right some gentlemen seem to have considered it a point of honor. If gentlemen consider it in that light they leave all measures of right and wrong to follow a delusion that may lead to destruction. It is my point that this kingdom has no right to lay a tax on the colonies. At the same time, I assert the authority of this kingdom over the colonies to be sovereign and supreme in every circumstance of government and legislation whatsoever. They are the subjects of this kingdom, entitled with yourselves to all the rights of mankind and the peculiar privileges of Englishmen, equally bound by its laws and equally participating in the constitution of this free country. The Americans are the sons of England. Taxation is no part of the governing or legislative power. The taxes are a voluntary gift and grant.

Mr. Pitt took this position solely on the ground that the colonies were not represented, and it must be remembered that taxation without representation was the great rallying cry of the colonists and their chief cause of complaint when they severed their relations with the mother country.

James Burgh, the celebrated Scotchman, in discussing this same question, said:

No pretext can justify taxing them (the colonies) so long as they continue unrepresented.

The States affected by the cotton taxes were not only not represented when these several tax acts were enacted, but they were positively denied representation in both the Senate and House of Representatives by solemn resolution of both bodies.

In December, 1865, the House of Representatives passed a resolution to this effect:

That all papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called Confederate States of America, or either of them, shall be referred to the joint committee of fifteen without debate, and no members shall be admitted from either of said so-called States, until Congress shall declare said States, or either of them, entitled to representation.

On February 20, 1866, the House passed, and on March 2, 1866, the Senate passed, this resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in order to close agitation on the question which seems likely to disturb the action of the Government, as well as to kill the uncertainty which is agitating the minds of the people of the eleven States which have been declared to be in insurrection, no Senator or Representatives shall be admitted into either branch of Congress from any of said States until Congress shall have declared such State entitled to representation.

As it has been repeatedly held by the Federal courts, and by all the departments of government, that these States were never out of the Union, you have here a Congress denying them representation and at the same time exacting taxes from them. "Taxation without representation is robbery." The remarkable spectacle was presented to the world of eleven States of this Republic solemnly declared by the different departments of government to be States in the Federal Union, yet by solemn resolution denied representation in the law-making body, and that law-making body exacting taxes from them on their principal product of over sixty millions of dollars. Surely now that the clouds of civil war have vanished and sectional hate, we are told, lies buried never to be resurrected, in this day of national unity and general good feeling and brotherly love, you will refund to us these moneys that have been wrongfully, unjustly, unconstitutionally, and illegally exacted.

In 1868 Congress repealed the tax on raw cotton. Why should this tax have been repealed? If the tax were just and constitutional and right, why repeal it? If it was constitutional and proper in 1862, 1864, 1866, and 1867, why was it not constitutional and right in 1868? And if it were constitutional why not retain it?

But, Mr. Chairman, we are not left to these old decisions for comfort. The Supreme Court of the United States has more recently passed upon this question in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. As reported in United States Supreme Court Reports, vol. 158, at page 601, the Supreme Court of the United States has squarely and fairly declared these taxes to be illegal and unconstitutional. In the case stated, Hylton v. The United States (3 Dallas, p. 171), is further considered, and in view of the historical evidence cited, shown to have only decided that the "tax on carriages involved was an excise and was an indirect tax."

Chief Justice Fuller in rendering the opinion in that case, said:

In distributing the power of taxation the Constitution retained to the States the absolute power of direct taxation, but granted to the Federal Government the power of the same taxation upon condition that in its exercise such taxes should be apportioned among the several States according to numbers, and this was done in order to protect the States which were surrendering to the Federal Government so many sources of income, the power of direct taxation which was their principal remaining resource.

The Chief Justice further said:

Taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the lands or incomes of real estate are clearly direct taxes.

Again he said:

Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes.

The Chief Justice further in the decision uses this language:

The tax imposed by sections 27 to 37, inclusive, of the act of 1894, so far as it applies to the income of real estate and of personal property, being a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution and therefore unconstitutional and void because not apportioned according to representation of those sections constituting one entire scheme of taxation, is necessarily invalid.

These were the "income tax cases," and it will be remembered that the Chief Justice and four of his associates concurred in the opinion rendered by the majority of the court. It is true that four Associate Justices—namely, Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Brown, Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice Jackson—dissented from the opinion, Mr. Justice Harlan using this language:

The recent civil war involving the very existence of the nation, was brought to a successful end, and the authority of the nation restored in part by the use of vast amounts of money raised under statutes imposing duties on income derived from every kind of property, real and personal, not by the unequal rule of apportionment among the States on the basis of numbers, but by the rule of uniformity operating upon individuals and corporations in all the States, and we are now asked to declare, and the judgment this day rendered in effect declares, that the enormous sums thus taken from the people and so used were taken in violation of the supreme law of the land.

There can be no possible question in view of the decision of the court in the "income tax cases" that it is the duty of Congress to refund the moneys collected by virtue of these tax statutes. [Applause.] It is said by some that Congress can not afford to do it because it involves such a large amount of money, more than sixty-eight millions of dollars. But when gentlemen view the case from that standpoint they must remember that the Government has had the use of this sixty-eight million dollars for forty years and more; that it was originally wrung from the lean purses of people who were impoverished by four years of cruel, ceaseless war; that it was wrung from the lean purses of people whose homes had been laid in ashes, and whose every household was in mourning. They must remember that this money was taken from people who had no voice in the levying of it; that it was taken from a people who could least afford to bear the burden, and that now, after this rich, powerful government has had the use of it without interest for more than forty years, these people are simply asking that the principal be refunded. The Supreme Court of the United States has said, in effect, that it ought to be refunded; has said, in effect, that it would not be honest on the part of the Government to retain it. [Applause.]

And just here, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that my attention was called to this matter by a venerable statesman of this country, who gave most of his years in the service of his country in this House and as a soldier in the Union Army. The Hon. Charles H. Grosvenor, who was a member of the last Congress, and who for more than twenty years represented his district in this House, first called my attention to this matter and urged that we, who were primarily interested in behalf of our constituents, should make an effort to have the Government act justly toward our people.

On the 9th of the present month I addressed a letter to General Grosvenor, a copy of which I shall read.

And I want to say here, Mr. Chairman, before I read it, that being the son of a Confederate soldier, living all my life in the South, imbued and filled with every sentiment that ever nerved and actuated that people, I am glad to know that men like this man who at times in my life I have thought were unnecessarily bitter—I am glad to know that in these latter days he, and people like him, of the North, commanding in their influence, loyal to their country, loyal to their States, loyal to every interest of this great Republic, are disposed to wipe out the last remaining differences between us, and treat us as citizens of the United States in very truth.

[Applause.]

JANUARY 9, 1908.

Hon. CHAS. H. GROSVENOR,
Athens, Ohio.

MY DEAR GENERAL: On the first day of the present session of Congress I introduced a bill to refund the taxes collected under the several acts of Congress levying a direct tax on raw cotton. I was inspired to introduce and undertake to pass this bill by remarks which you made to me during a conversation we had during the last days of the Fifty-ninth Congress. I intend before many days to address the House in support of my bill, and desire to quote you on the subject, but as what you said to me was in course of an informal private conversation, I do not care to quote you without your consent. Again, I might, in just relying on my memory, misrepresent you, and of course I do not desire to do that.

My recollection is that you said to me substantially while we were discussing what is called the illegal cotton tax, that the levy and collection of these taxes were wrong, illegal, and unconstitutional, that the Supreme Court had so decided, and that there was no valid reason on earth why the money collected should not be refunded to the rightful owners, or to the States.

Am I right as to this? I will certainly appreciate it very much if you will write me fully upon this subject, and give me permission to use your letter in connection with my speech. I will also appreciate it if you will cite me to the decision of the Supreme Court you referred to wherein these tax acts were held to be unconstitutional.

Thanking you in advance for your kind attention to this matter and with best wishes,

I am yours, most truly,

FRANK CLARK.

A few days since I received this reply:

ATHENS, OHIO, January 13, 1908.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of January 9th. My recollection of our conversation is substantially the same as related by you. I understood myself then, as I understand now, that the practical effect of the Supreme Court decisions had been to hold the cotton tax unconstitutional. It is possible that I may be wrong, but you are at entire liberty to quote me if it is of the smallest benefit to you.

With kind regards, yours truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

[Applause.]

I desire now to ask permission to print in the RECORD an abstract of the history of efforts that have been made in the past looking to a refund of these taxes. In doing this I shall incorporate a brief statement of each bill introduced at different times by different Members of Congress some years back. I do not pretend to give them all, nor do I give them in chronological order, but I present these to show that our people can not be charged with laches in this matter.

Those that I have been able to find are as follows:

[H. R. 2354, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Enloe.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury issue to the governors of the several States in which cotton taxes were paid United States bonds in amounts specified for each State and equal to the amount of taxes collected within the State. These bonds to be held by said States, to be refunded and distributed to the parties who paid the tax. In case of a surplus remaining, the funds to be devoted to the school fund.

(There was no report on this bill.)

[H. R. 281, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Money.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury issue noninterest-bearing Treasury notes in such denominations as may be deemed expedient to the several States in amounts equal to the cotton taxes collected therein, as indicated by the internal-revenue report. That the sum so paid shall be held in trust by the several States for the benefit of the cotton producers, to be paid to them under such provisions as each State may deem it proper to make. In case the producer can not be reimbursed, the sum not distributed shall become the property of the State. The claims must be filed with each State within two years after the passage of an act by such State providing for the distribution of the money refunded. That these notes shall become legal tender and shall not be canceled by the United States when received at the Treasury, but used as other money.

(No report.)

[H. R. 2356, Fifty-third Congress, first session, is same as 2354.]

[H. R. 196, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Wheeler.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay money equal to the amount collected in cotton taxes to each State, said State to designate who shall be custodian of the fund. In case the tax was paid by the person to whom the cotton was shipped residing in another State, the State where said cotton was grown shall be the recipient.

[H. R. 138, Fifty-third Congress, first session. By Mr. Oates.]

In the case of the Supreme Court holding the law under which cotton taxes were collected unconstitutional, any citizen who had paid the tax shall be permitted to bring suit for its recovery in the Court of Claims. Within 60 days after judgment, either the petitioner or the United States shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, and when such appeal shall have been taken the court shall not try any case until the appeal case has been decided. The Court of Claims shall decide all suits which are brought within one year of the Supreme Court's holding the original tax law to be unconstitutional.

[H. R. 124, first session, Fifty-third Congress. By Mr. McRae.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to each State a sum equal to the cotton taxes collected therein. The said States to pay to such producers as shall make claim within two years after the passage of this act. The remainder, if any, shall be used as a permanent school fund. In no case shall payment be made to any assignee of such claim.

(No report.)

[H. R. 2640, first session, Fifty-second Congress, is same as 124, first session, Fifty-third Congress. No report.]

[H. R. 2607, same as H. R. 196, first session, Fifty-third Congress. No report.]

[H. R. 650, first session, Fifty-second Congress, same as 2354, first session, Fifty-third Congress. No report.]

[H. R. 8365, first session, Fifty-second Congress. By Mr. Oates.]

This bill is same as introduced by Mr. Oates in Fifty-third Congress. The House report is 2528, first session, Fifty-second Congress.

[H. R. 8366, first session, Fifty-second Congress. By Mr. Oates.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to each State an amount equal to the cotton tax collected within said State, to be disposed of by such State as their next legislatures shall direct.

(No report.)

[H. R. 700, second session, Forty-second Congress. By Mr. Golladay.]

That the Secretary of the Treasury refund to all persons the cotton tax collected by the United States, and that he shall make such rules as he may deem necessary in connection therewith.

[H. R. 1592, second session, Forty-second Congress. By Mr. McKee.]

That restitution shall be made of all moneys collected as cotton taxes. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue bonds of $500 and $1,000 denomination and Treasury notes to cover amounts less than that. That a commission shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate which shall adjudicate all claims. That such commission shall sit for two years and all claims must be filed within that time. (The rest of this long bill prescribes the manner of taking testimony and the duties and powers of the commission.)

(No report.)

And also I shall attach to my remarks and print in the RECORD copious extracts from the opinion of the court, as well as from the dissenting opinion of the justices in the "income tax cases." It will be seen by these extracts, I am quite sure, that every contention which I have made is amply sustained by the highest court in the land—the most exalted judicial tribunal in all the world:

[Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. U. S. Supreme Court Reps., vol. 157, page 429.]

Chief Justice Fuller:

"The men who framed and adopted that instrument (the Constitution) had just emerged from the struggle for independence, whose rallying cry had been that 'taxation and representation go together.'"

* * * * * * *

"The mother country had taught the colonists in the contests waged to establish that taxes could not be imposed by the sovereign except as they were granted by the representatives of the realm, that self-taxation constituted the main security against oppression."

* * * * * * *

"Thus, in the matter of taxation, the Constitution recognizes the two great classes of direct and indirect taxes, and lays down two rules by which their imposition must be governed, namely, the rule of apportionment as to direct taxes, and the rule of uniformity as to duties, imposts, and excises."

* * * * * * *

"And this view was expressed by Mr. Chief Justice Chase in The License Tax Cases, 5 Wall., 464–471, when he said: 'It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion.'"

* * * * * * *

"Ordinarily all taxes paid primarily by persons who can shift the burden upon some one else, or who are under no legal compulsion to pay them, are considered indirect taxes; but a tax upon property holders in respect of their estates, whether real or personal, or of the income yielded by such estates, and the payment of which can not be avoided, are direct taxes."

* * * * * * *

"In the Convention of Massachusetts by which the Constitution was ratified, the second section of Article I being under consideration, Mr. King said: 'It is a principle of this Constitution that representation and taxation should go hand in hand.'"

* * * * * * *

"And John Adams, Davis, Sumner, King, and Sedgwick all agreed that a direct tax would be the last source of revenue resorted to by Congress.

* * * * * * *

"In Virginia, Mr. John Marshall said: 'The objects of direct taxes are well understood; they are but few; what are they? Lands, slaves, stock of all kinds, and a few other articles of domestic property.'"

* * * * * * *

Mr. Randolph said:

"But in this new Constitution there is a more just and equitable rule fixed—a limitation beyond which they cannot go. Representatives and taxes go hand in hand; according to the one will the other be regulated. The number of representatives is determined by the number of inhabitants; they have nothing to do but to lay taxes accordingly."

* * * * * * *

In discussing the case of Hylton v. United States (carriage-tax case), the Chief Justice says: "It will be perceived that each of the justices, while suggesting doubt whether anything but a capitation or a land tax was a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, distinctly avoided expressing an opinion upon that question or laying down a comprehensive definition, but confined his opinion to the case before the court."

* * * * * * *

"By the act of July 14, 1798, when a war with France was supposed to be impending, a direct tax of two millions of dollars was apportioned to the States, respectively," etc.

* * * * * * *

"By the act of August 2, 1813, a direct tax of three millions of dollars was laid and apportioned to the States."

* * * * * * *

"The act of January 9, 1815, laid a direct tax of six millions of dollars, which was apportioned, assessed," etc.

* * * * * * *

These acts are attributable to the war of 1812.

* * * * * * *

The act of August 5, 1861 (12 Stat., 292–294, C. 45), imposed a tax of twenty millions of dollars, which was apportioned and to be levied wholly on real estate, and also levied taxes on incomes whether derived from property or profession, trade or vocation (12 Stat. L., 309), and this was followed by the acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. L., 432, 473, C. 119); Mar. 3, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 713, 723, C. 74); June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. L., 223, 281, C. 173); Mar. 3, 1865 (13 Stat. L., 469, 479, C. 78); Mar. 10, 1866 (14 Stat. L., 4, C. 15); July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. 98, 137, C. 184); Mar. 2, 1867 (14 Stat. 471, 477, C. 169), and July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 256, C. 255).

He finds:

1st, That the distinction between direct and indirect taxation was well understood by the framers of the Constitution and those who adopted it.

2d, That under the State systems of taxation all taxes on real estate or personal property or the rents or income thereof were regarded as direct taxes.

3d, That the rules of apportionment and of uniformity were adopted in view of that distinction and those systems.

4th, That whether the tax on carriages was direct or indirect was disputed, but the tax was sustained as a tax on the use and an excise.

5th, That the original expectation was that the power of direct taxation would be exercised only in extraordinary exigencies, and down to August 15, 1894, this expectation has been realized.

In Pacific Insurance Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall., 433, the validity of a tax which was described as "upon the business of an insurance company" was sustained on the ground that it was "a duty or excise," and came within the decision in Hylton's case.

* * * * * * *

"In Veazie Bank v. Tenno (8 Wall., 533, 544, 546) a tax was laid on the circulation of State banks or national banks paying out the notes of individuals or State banks, and it was held that it might well be classed under the head of duties, and as falling within the same category as Soule's case, 8 Wall., 547."

"And, in respect of the opinions in Hylton's case, the Chief Justice (Chase) said:

"It may further be taken as established upon the testimony of Paterson, that the words direct taxes, as used in the Constitution, comprehended only capitation taxes and taxes on land, and perhaps taxes on personal property by general valuation and assessment of the various descriptions possessed within the several States."

* * * * * * *

"Scholey v. Rew (23 Wall., 331) was the case of a succession tax which the court held to be "plainly an excise tax or duty" upon the devolution of the estate or the right to become beneficially entitled to the same, or the income thereof, in possession or expectancy."

* * * * * * *

"In Railroad Company v. Collector (100 U. S., 595, 596) the validity of a tax collected of a corporation upon the interest paid by it upon its bonds was held to be 'essentially an excise on the business of the class of corporations mentioned in the statute.'"

The case of "Springer v. United States (102 U. S., 586, 602), chiefly relied on and urged upon us as decisive.

"That was an action of ejectment brought on a tax deed issued to the United States on sale of defendant's real estate for income taxes. The defendant contended that the deed was void because the tax was a direct tax, not levied in accordance with the Constitution. Unless the tax were wholly invalid, the defense failed."

The opinion thus concludes:

"Our conclusions are, that direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution, are only capitation taxes, as expressed in that instrument, and taxes on real estate; and that the tax of which the plaintiff in error complains is within the category of an excise or duty."

While (says Chief Justice Fuller) this language is broad enough to cover the interest as well as the professional earnings, the case would have been more significent as a precedent if the distinction had been brought out in the report and commented on in arriving at judgment, for a tax on professional receipts might be treated as an excise or duty, and therefore indirect, when a tax on the income of personalty might be held to be direct.

Be this as it may, it is conceded in all these cases, from that of Hylton to that of Springer, that taxes on land are direct taxes, and in none of them is it determined that taxes on rents or income derived from land are not taxes on land.

* * * * * * *

The requirement of the Constitution is that no direct tax shall be laid otherwise than by apportionment—the prohibition is not against direct taxes on land, from which the implication is sought to be drawn that indirect taxes on land would be constitutional, but it is against all direct taxes—and it is admitted that a tax on real estate is a direct tax. Unless, therefore, a tax upon rents or income issuing out of lands is intrinsically so different from a tax on the land itself that it belongs to a wholly different class of taxes, such taxes must be regarded as falling within the same category as a tax on real estate eo nomine. The name of the tax is unimportant. The real question is, is there any basis upon which to rest the contention that real estate belongs to one of the two great classes of taxes, and the rent or income which is the incident of its ownership belongs to the other? We are unable to perceive any ground for the alleged distinction. An annual tax upon the annual value or annual user of real estate appears to us the same in substance as an annual tax on the real estate, which would be paid out of the rent or income. This law taxes the income received from land and the growth or produce of the land. Mr. Justice Paterson observed in Hylton's case, "Land, independently of its produce, is of no value;" and certainly had no thought that direct taxes were confined to unproductive land.

* * * * * * *

Nothing can be clearer than that what the Constitution intended to guard against was the exercise by the General Government of the power of directly taxing persons and property within any State through a majority made up from the others States. It is true that the effect of requiring direct taxes to be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population is necessarily that the amount of taxes on the individual taxpayer in a State having the taxable subject-matter to a larger extent in proportion to its population than another State has would be less than in such other State, but this inequality must be held to have been contemplated, and was manifestly designed to operate to restrain the exercise of the power of direct taxation to extraordinary emergencies, and to prevent an attack upon accumulated property by mere force of numbers.

* * * * * * *

But the acceptance of the rule of apportionment was one of the compromises which made the adoption of the Constitution possible, and secured the creation of that dual form of government, so elastic and so strong, which has thus far survived in unabated vigor. If, by calling a tax indirect when it is essentially direct, the rule of proportion could be frittered away, one of the great landmarks defining the boundary between the nation and the States of which it is composed would have disappeared, and with it one of the bulwarks of private rights and private property.

* * * * * * *

We are of opinion that the law in question, so far as it levies a tax on the rents or income of real estate, is in violation of the Constitution, and is invalid.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Justice Field:

"First calls attention to the debates in the 'convention' and particularly to the unwillingness of the coast States to relinquish their right to levy duties upon imports, and of the small interior States to confer upon the General Government the right to levy direct taxes, and says: 'It was feared at times that the effort to form a new government would fail. But happily a compromise was effected by an agreement that direct taxes should be laid by Congress by apportioning them among the States according to their representation. In return for this concession by some of the States, the other States bordering on navigable waters consented to relinquish to the new government the control of duties, imposts, and excises, and the regulation of commerce, with the condition that the duties, imposts, and excises should be uniform throughout the United States; so that on the one hand, anything like oppression or undue advantage of any one State over the others would be prevented by the apportionment of the direct taxes among the States according to their representation, and, on the other hand, anything like oppression or hardship in the levying of duties, imposts and excises would be avoided by the provision that they should be uniform throughout the United States. This compromise was essential to the continued union and harmony of the States. It protected every State from being controlled in its taxation by the superior numbers of one or more other States.'"

* * * * * * *

"If the court sanctions the power of discriminating taxation and nullifies the uniformity mandate of the Constitution," as said by one who has been all his life a student of our institutions, "it will mark the hour when the sure decadence of our present Government will commence."

* * * * * * *

"There is no safety in allowing the limitation to be adjusted except in strict compliance with the mandates of the Constitution, which require its taxation, if imposed by direct taxes, to be apportioned among the States according to their representation, and if imposed by indirect taxes, to be uniform in operation and, so far as practicable, in proportion to their property, equal upon all citizens."

I also ask permission to print in the RECORD and as a part of my remarks Report No. 2528, made in the Fifty-second Congress at the second session by Mr. Oates, a Member of Congress from the State of Alabama, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

[House Report No. 2528, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8365) entitled "A bill to provide for refunding the tax laid and collected on raw cotton in the event that the Supreme Court holds the law under which the same was collected to have been unconstitutional," make to the House the following report:

By act of Congress approved July 1, 1862, and subsequent amendatory acts, a tax was imposed on raw cotton, under which collections were made and the money paid into the Treasury of the United States, aggregating $68,072,388.99. This money was collected in the years 1863 to 1868, both inclusive.

At the beginning of the late war a large part of the crop of 1860 was held by brokers and factors in the Northern States for the benefit of the producers. A large part of the crop of 1861 in the border States, also, went into the hands of Northern factors, which accounts for the fact that a considerable amount of this tax was collected in New York, Philadelphia, and other points in the Northern States, but all of the cotton upon which the tax was thus collected was grown exclusively in the Southern States. This tax was enforced and collected upon all these cottons as well as those grown subsequent to its enactment; $64,935,121.56 of this tax was collected in the Southern States, either directly or indirectly, from the producers.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution empowers Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises for three general purposes, viz, first, to pay the debts of the United States; second, to provide for the common defense of the United States, and, third, to provide for the general welfare of the United States. The latter part of that section contains the following restriction upon this exercise of power: "But all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Subdivisions 4 and 5 of section 9 are as follows: "No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken;" and "no tax or duties shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

The original act taxing cotton read as follows:

"There shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all cotton produced within the United States, * * * a tax of two cents per pound," etc. The last one of the amendatory acts in relation to said tax was approved July 13, 1866, entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation," etc., but in fact it increased the tax imposed upon cotton from 2 to 3 cents per pound. Under this latter amendment three-fourths of the total amount of the tax was collected. It will therefore be observed that it was not a war tax, but enacted more than a year after the peace. It is yet an open question as to whether these acts were constitutional. If the tax laid was a direct one, then it is unquestionably unconstitutional for want of uniformity in apportionment. If the tax laid on raw cotton was indirect, it was constitutional, unless it was a tax upon exports, in which latter event it was unconstitutional.

The question of the constitutionality of the laws laying this tax was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Sanders, from Tennessee, and very ably argued upon both sides before that tribunal. Eight of the justices sat in the case. Chief Justice Chase being indisposed did not sit in the case, and after full consideration the court was found to be equally divided, four justices maintaining that the acts were unconstitutional and four maintaining that they were constitutional. Before the question could be again presented the law was repealed, after which a case could not be made. If this tax was imposed by a constitutional law, however oppressive its operation upon the people of the Southern or cotton-growing States, there is no legal ground or claim for refunding the tax. On the other hand, if the law imposing the tax was unconstitutional, the money was wrongfully collected and there is an implied promise upon the part of the Government to refund it; or, in other words, it is a debt against the United States which should be paid.

A great many people, and among them many of the very best lawyers in the country, believe that the law was unconstitutional. The argument of ex-Justice John A. Campbell before the Supreme Court is very convincing. The Government of the United States is one which proceeds in all of its civil operations according to law, and it never was intended to be administered in any of its Departments otherwise. Your committee think the question of sufficient importance to provide a means by which the Supreme Court may determine the question of constitutionality and thereby forever set at rest the question as to whether this large sum collected as taxes was rightfully or wrongfully collected. The bill provides for opening the Court of Claims to those who paid the tax, until a case is made and appealed to the Supreme Court, and then for a stay of proceedings until that court decides the question; and should the court hold the acts to be unconstitutional, it allows one year thereafter to all persons interested to bring their suits in said Court of Claims. On the contrary, if the law is sustained, that would put an end to all these claims.

Your committee, therefore, believing it just, report said bill favorably to the House and recommend its passage.

Mr. Chairman, I have placed in the RECORD as part of my remarks an abstract statement with reference to several bills that have heretofore been introduced in relation to this matter. They were introduced years ago when the feeling of humanity and broherly love between the sections was not such as it is now, and, of course, no relief was expected. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], I believe, deserves credit for renewing interest in this matter, because he introduced a bill looking to the refunding of this money in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS] has also introduced a bill looking to that same result. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has likewise introduced one; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] has likewise introduced a bill of the same character, and various other gentlemen have introduced bills of like character. I want to say now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, that I, as a Southern man and the son of a Southern soldier, am opposed absolutely to the bill of the gentleman from Alabama to pension Confederate soldiers by the United States Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would lie to ask the gentleman to whom he refers, what gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HOBSON. I am opposed to it because as a Representative upon this floor I do not believe it is right. I do not believe it is a proper charge against the Government of the United States. I am opposed to it in the second place because our own States will take care of these veterans of the "lost cause." We will tax ourselves to care for them, and we will cheerfully aid in caring for Union veterans besides. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No, Mr. Chairman, I will never be found upon this floor asking this Congress for charity to the people whom I represent. I am asking in this bill that this Congress be just to those people; that this Congress pay them the money that is their due, and that has been wrongfully, unconstitutionally, and illegally taken from their pockets. No charity is asked, and never will be; all that we ask is simple, naked, even-handed justice under the Constitution of our country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I have listened, Mr. Chairman, with a great deal of interest to the very eloquent speech of the gentleman from Florida, which is perhaps the most exhaustive discussion of this question we have ever had. I perhaps was not attentive at the time, but I want to ask the gentleman from Florida if a considerable portion of these taxes if refunded would not go to the States of the North?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. About eight millions of dollars would go north and about sixty million dollars south.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman this further question. I understood from his argument, and that is my understanding of the decisions of the Supreme Court, that in the case of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company the court reverses the former decision of the Supreme Court and holds substantially that this tax was an unconstitutional tax.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely. The dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan admits that. He distinctly calls attention to the fact that under the decision of the court vast sums of money must be returned to the people.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I was given ten minutes for general debate by the chairman of the committee, and if it does not conflict I would like to use it now.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Chairman, that there has been more time consumed this morning than I anticipated would be when I stated to the gentleman that I would yield him time; but no time has been used on the other side, and I felt that I was under obligation to let the gentleman representing the minority use some of their time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The length of general debate has not been fixed and there will be plenty of opportunity. I want to get in myself.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether we shall begin to read the bill to-day?

Mr. TAWNEY. If we can close general debate. When we went into Committee of the Whole my colleague, Mr. LIVINGSTON, and myself had requests for two hours' time. We thought that after the two hours we could close general debate, but since that time there have been requests for time, and in all probability we shall continue the greater part of the day.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman knows that it is a great convenience for Members to be out of the Hall occasionally.

Mr. TAWNEY. We shall not be able to commence the reading of the bill before 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that we probably will not be able to commence the reading of the bill until Monday.

Mr. MANN. Then I think we ought to have that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has been recognized.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman from Maine for five or ten minutes, providing I have the floor at the expiration of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized, the time to be taken out of that of the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I noticed in reading the RECORD this morning a statement made by the chairman of the committee in a colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] in relation to the sinking fund, in connection with which I think the chairman is inadvertently in error in at least two important particulars. My judgment is that if any statement is to be made in relation to the sinking fund and the manner in which it has been used, and the statute under which it is appropriated and under which it ought to be used, it perhaps had better be stated with perfect accuracy.

The colloquy to which I refer reads as follows:

Mr. BOUTELL. Before you pass to the consideration of the bill, I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill whether his estimate of expenditures includes the total amount of the sinking-fund item.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does.

Mr. BOUTELL. Ought not that to be deducted from your expenditures, because we have never complied with it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, yes; we are complying with it. It is a statutory obligation, and the application of $58,000,000 to the sinking fund, or any part of it, is within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTELL. Absolutely?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; absolutely. It is not mandatory upon him to do it; but it is there for the purpose of reducing the bonded indebtedness of the United States.

Now, as I have stated, Mr. Chairman, I think the chairman of the committee is entirely mistaken with reference, first, to the manner in which the fund has been used, and second, with reference to the provisions of the statute under which it is used. I have from the Secretary of the Treasury the following figures:

First, the amount of appropriation for 1903 for the sinking fund was $54,000,000; the amount used for that purpose that year was $29,511,323. The amount of the sinking-fund appropriation for 1904 was $56,000,000; the amount used for that purpose in 1904 was $24,402,964. In 1905 the amount appropriated was $56,000,000; the amount used was only $3,808,411. In 1906 the amount appropriated for the sinking fund was $56,000,000; the amount used was only $1,651,611. The amount appropriated in 1907 for the sinking fund was $57,000,000; the amount used was $30,590,388; making an aggregate appropriation for the sinking fund for the five years of $280,000,000. The amount of this appropriation actually used for the purpose for which it was appropriated was only $89,965,197, and there was left unused of the amount appropriated $190,340,803. If this sum had been used for the purpose for which it was appropriated annually, instead of having, as we now have, an available cash balance of $264,974,990.25, we would only have an available cash balance of $74,940,187, very vigorously emphasizing the point made by the chairman of the committee as to our existing financial condition.

Now, with reference to the question of whether or not it is mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to use the money thus appropriated for the sinking fund, I have to say:

I have taken occasion to examine the law upon this subject with great care during the last two or three years, and I have never been able to find any provision of the statute that vests in the Secretary of the Treasury any discretion. It is true that not only during the last five years, but during the last twenty-five years, the Secretaries of the Treasury have exercised a discretion in the application of these sinking-fund appropriations, but I never have been able to find anybody with official responsibility who has ever been able to point me to the provision of the statute that vests in the Secretary of the Treasury any such discretion. So far as I have been able to ascertain, the law is absolutely mandatory, and he is required to use the fund appropriated for that purpose for the reduction of the public debt through the medium of the sinking fund, and I simply make this statement in order that the record may show just exactly what the actual conditions are, and these suggestions, as may well be perceived, very vigorously emphasizes the suggestions very properly made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], of the necessity of reducing all the way around appropriations, because in my judgment there is no question about the accuracy of these statements. I fully well know that the general impression has been that the provisions of this statute were of such a character that they vested a discretion in the Secretary, but such, in my judgment, is not the fact.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the gentleman's investigations he has ascertained it to be a fact, has he not, that for twenty-five years or more several Secretaries of the Treasury have uniformly exercised this discretion?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is perfectly true; yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Assuming they were doing it upon their construction of the law, and also upon the statements that have been made to me, and the statement which I made yesterday in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], although I had not personally investigated the law, I supposed from the uniform practice that it was discretionary, and that otherwise the Secretaries of the Treasury would not exercise the discretion that they have.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I find the facts to be exactly as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], that the Secretaries have exercised this discretion during a long period of time; and while there are times when in the exercise of that discretion they have not used the full amount appropriated, there have been other times when they have used more than the amount appropriated, and I can fully well understand how the gentleman from Minnesota, in perfect good faith and with the belief that he was stating the law as it stands, made the statement he did yesterday on the spur of the moment in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL]. In the course of my investigation I never have been able to find any legislation or any authority that in any way gives to the Secretary of the Treasury this discretion which has been thus exercised.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I understand it, in 1906, out of the $56,000,000 appropriated to the sinking fund to reduce the national debt, there was used $1,056,611, and the previous year, instead of using $56,000,000, in round numbers, only $4,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that out of $112,000,000 that should have been used to reduce the public debt there was used only $8,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There was used about $5,000,000 only.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; five millions, so that the surplus that we have boasted of during those years was a myth instead of an actuality.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Perhaps not altogether a myth. The $264,974,990.25 which is now carried as available cash balance is what is known as the surplus. If the sums appropriated for the sinking fund had been carried to the sinking fund, that surplus or cash balance would be reduced, so that there would be now on hand only $74,940,187, or a surplus of that amount.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, in the temporary absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I am authorized to represent him, and in that capacity I desire now to yield one hour to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the question to which I shall address myself this morning is that of protection of bank deposits. This I believe to be one of the great questions before the American people to-day. James A. Garfield said:

Whoever controls the volume of money in any country is absolute master of all industry and commerce.

John A. Logan said:

The cause of every depression is money famine and nothing else.

When our national banking system was established, in 1863, the purpose was not so much the establishment of a safe and efficient system of banking as the providing of a market for the bonds that had to be issued in order to enable the nation to carry on the war. With a few changes we have retained the system for forty-four years. Perhaps the most striking difference between the national banks thus provided for and the State banks formerly existing was the absolute safety of the note issue of the new banks. This safety is secured by the deposit of United States bonds with the Treasurer of the United States.

During the forty-four years that have passed since the passage of the national-bank act we have had both good times and hard times. The causes of these hard times recurring at greater or less intervals it is rather difficult to determine. The blame can not be laid entirely on our banking and currency systems. In many of these panics industrial causes have entered in as well. But, on the other hand, we have had lesser panics, times of money stringency, when it would seem that the main trouble, if not the sole one, was to be found in our system of currency and banking. The industrial condition of the country at present appears to be sound and to have been so last October, yet we had a financial depression that was felt throughout the country. It has been maintained that this must be charged up against the inelasticity of our currency, and that if the banks had the power of issuing additional currency in time of need we should have no money stringency. It is admitted that we need more currency at one time than at another, and it is evident that if there is no means by which the additional supply can be secured a money stringency will result; but it is also evident that the mere fact of scarcity of money will not cause a panic. People do not make a run on a bank because money is scarce, but because they fear that their deposits are not safe. Last fall showed that not only did not the people have confidence in the banks, but that also the banks mistrusted each other, and each bank determined that it would not be caught in a "run" because of trusting its funds to another institution. Banks hoarded their money as well as private individuals. Country banks maintained reserves of 50 to 60 per cent in order to be prepared for a possible "run." As these banks were losing the profits which they would have made if they had kept this money in circulation, they would manifestly not have withdrawn this money from circulation unless they had felt that it was necessary for them to do so in order to protect themselves. Now, if every bank were assured that there would be no "run" made on it it would have no incentive to withdraw money from circulation and hoard it; and if every depositor were assured that his deposits were absolutely safe, no intelligent person would withdraw his deposits simply in order to hoard his savings.

Such assurance can be given to the bank and such assurance can be given to the depositor by guaranteeing every dollar placed on deposit in our banks.

Before I go further I want to read an article from the Daily Mail and Empire of Toronto, Canada.

This refers to a matter of very recent occurrence, and it seems to me to be a matter of very vital importance. I read it simply to show what confidence does for a banking institution as well as any other institution. It refers to the liquidation of the Sovereign Bank of Canada last Saturday, January 18, 1908, upon the most improved plan of guaranteeing deposits and closing a bank without inconvenience or alarm to depositors.

The bank had for its capital $3,000,000. It had notes outstanding of $2,009,350. It had a balance due agents of $3,474,108.23. It had on deposit more than $14,000,000, and there were owing to sundry creditors $37,000. It had total liabilities of $22,522,168.11. Though this large institution with its eighty branches was forced to liquidate, it and nearly all the branches remained open as usual on the day of liquidation, and the first that the public knew of the failure was the following statement by its president:

For some time past there has been a constant strain upon the bank's resources, caused chiefly by the unnatural conditions which have obtained during the last three or four months, which have created a still greater drain upon the deposits and made it correspondingly difficult to liquidate the loans. These conditions, which in many ways have been far more stringent than have been experienced in the memory of this generation, could not possibly have been foreseen, and they were rapidly bringing about a state of affairs under which the business if continued would not have been sufficiently profitable.

When this conclusion was reached we at once conferred with the leading bankers of the country and asked them to verify our statements. These bankers have expressed their opinion that the assets of the Sovereign Bank of Canada are sufficient to pay all the liabilities, and an agreement has been made with a number of banks by which nearly all of the branches of the bank will open this morning as branches of other banks. This arrangement will entail no loss of any kind to the bank's depositors or customers. They can withdraw their deposits if they please, or they can allow them to remain with the bank to which they have been transferred. The Sovereign Bank of Canada pass books can be surrendered and the pass books of the new banks obtained. Borrowing customers will, of course, have to make other banking arrangements as soon as possible.

You can see from this that a number of the larger banks of Canada, twelve or thirteen of them, have simply guaranteed to the people who had deposits in this bank that no one would lose a dollar, and upon that guaranty I want to show you how the depositors of the bank took it. The dates of these newspapers are January 18 and 20. They show how this sensible mode of liquidation is viewed by Americans who were in Toronto at the time:

A remarkable tribute to the coolness and capacity of the banking men of Toronto was the passing of the Sovereign Bank on Saturday without even a ripple of excitement in the money market or even among the small depositors, who are generally the first to take alarm. It was about as devoid of dramatic incident as the separation of Norway and Sweden. The calmness with which the notification of the suspension of the bank was received bore strong witness to the confidence of the people in its financial institutions, and this side of the matter appealed strongly to American visitors in the city. Reading in the morning papers that a prominent downtown bank had gone into liquidation, many Americans were on the street early, anticipating all the interesting scenes incidental to a run on the bank and a panic among small investors. The actual event was very much of a surprise, as they were unable to see any appreciable change in the way business was carried on, and could not understand the situation.

"Why, if this were in New York or Chicago," said one, "there would be a line halfway up the street, crowding and fighting for position, and not only that, but there would be crowds in front of all the other banks. I don't know how you do it, but you've certainly got us beat."

The list of twelve banks which are guaranteeing the depositors of the Sovereign Bank and who took over the branches on Saturday was increased to thirteen on Saturday by the accession of the Eastern Townships Bank.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. From what paper are you reading?

Mr. GRONNA. This is the Daily Mail and Empire, of Toronto.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to say a friend of mine, returning from Toronto at that time, gave me the same facts in connection with the case just about the time we had a line, not halfway up the street but three or four blocks long, waiting for opportunity to get in and take out their money, showing that Canadian people have more confidence in their institutions than the American people have.

Mr. GRONNA. If the gentleman will permit me, does he think they also have a better banking system?

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would not like to admit that they have a better banking system, because I do not believe there is anything better than we have in the United States along all lines.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, I will say to the committee that it simply goes to show that if the people are satisfied that no loss will be sustained they are always reasonable; they will not demand their money if they are absolutely sure that some time in the future they will be paid their deposits.

If a fund were created with the Treasurer of the United States out of which any losses to depositors in banks that became insolvent would be paid, such a measure would have four obvious results:

1. It would protect depositors against losses.
2. It would protect banks against runs on their deposits.
3. It would prevent, or at least alleviate, stringency in the money market by preventing hoarding.
4. It would bring into circulation a large amount of currency at present unaccounted for, but presumably hoarded.

This last result may be more important than many people believe. The total stock of money in the United States July 1, 1907, was $3,115,600,000, of which $1,106,500,000 was in banks and $342,000,000 was held in the Treasury as assets. This leaves $1,666,500,000, or 53½ per cent of the total stock of money unaccounted for. In other words, $20 per capita is unaccounted for. Part of this, of course, is carried in people's pockets as change, but does every man, woman, and child carry $20 in his or her pocket continuously? Does every family of five have $100 lying around loose all the time? The conclusion seems inevitable that a large amount of this money is hoarded and is thus deprived of its most important function, that of serving as a medium of exchange.

A very small annual tax on the deposits of each bank would be sufficient to create and maintain the proposed fund. The average annual loss to creditors of insolvent national banks from 1865 to 1903, inclusive, was about $851,000. The average annual deposits for the same period amounted to $1,281,447,136. The ratio of loss to the deposits was about one-sixteenth of 1 per cent. If we take a period of ten years from 1894 to 1903, inclusive, we find that the ratio is about one-thirtieth of 1 per cent. The estimates of the losses are not exact, for the reason that some of the banks are still in the hands of receivers, but they are accurate enough to give some idea of how large a tax it would be necessary to impose for the purpose of establishing a guaranty fund. With the stricter inspection and more conservative banking of recent years the annual loss has decreased, while the deposits have shown a great increase. The amount of deposits in national banks October 31, 1907, was $4,319,035,402. A tax of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent on this amount would bring $1,439,678, which would be more than the amount of the annual loss. In my opinion, a tax of one-fiftieth of 1 per cent, or 20 cents per $1,000, would be sufficient for the establishment and maintenance of a guaranty fund.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to suggest, while I am a hearty supporter of that proposition, that the assessment of one-thirtieth of 1 per cent, or a sufficient amount to pay the loss as it arises from one year to another, would not leave the fund large enough to pay in cash the depositors in case of the failure of one bank, for instance. Your assessment would have to be large enough so as to have a fund sufficiently large to pay money due the depositors in case of failure, and it would be quite a while before the bank could be settled up, and in the meantime some other bank might fail, and the result would be the fund would be too small. I think you would not dare base it on the amount that is the real percentage of loss. For instance, the last statement made by the Comptroller in regard to one of the banks in New York City was something over $99,000,000 of deposits subject to check.

Mr. GRONNA. The City Bank has $107,000,000 on deposit.

Mr. NORRIS. If that bank or a bank like that should fail, or two or three small banks, the fund ought to be large enough to pay them all.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Nebraska that I agree with him that the percentage of tax should be perhaps larger, but I care nothing about the details of it; what I want to show is the amount of loss—that is, the amount that is actually required. It is the principle of the guaranty fund that I am speaking about.

Mr. HINSHAW. If the gentleman will permit, the proposition made by Mr. NORRIS is correct except this: The fund would be reimbursed from the recovered assets of the now solvent bank in the course of two, three, or five years, and the fund would come back to such shape a small tax would be sufficient to keep it in running order against any failure that would occur.

Mr. NORRIS. But it would take a good many years before that fund would be large enough to do that. If you start it out to have any benefit immediately, it would have to be large enough to do so.

Mr. HINSHAW. But I think this will solve the proposition. Let the tax be large enough so that it will raise a sufficient fund to pay off all these losses, and let the tax be suspended if at such time the aggregate fund reaches a certain number of million of dollars and is no longer needed to meet the losses of insolvent banks.

Mr. GRONNA. The gentleman is correct in that, and the bill which I propose to read in a few minutes will meet it.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Does the gentleman know if any of the States have passed legislation with reference to State banks of this character?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir; the State of Oklahoma has.

Mr. STERLING. That is in their constitution, the gentleman tells me. Have any other States adopted it?

Mr. GRONNA. I know of no other State than Oklahoma.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state this: That I was reading in the New York Evening Post, I think, two or three evenings ago where the people in Oklahoma were bringing their money back from Kansas and Missouri in order to put it in the Oklahoma banks, because this law goes into operation, I believe, in February, and the Kansas governor has called his legislature together in order to pass a law similar to the Oklahoma law.

Mr. STERLING. If States do that will not something of this kind have to be done?

Mr. GRONNA. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] I will say, that while I know of no State except Oklahoma that has passed this law, I believe I am safe in saying that States bordering Oklahoma will be compelled to pass the same law in order to do business with the people of their States.

Mr. STERLING. I think there is a proposition before the legislature of Illinois to that effect. I do not know whether there is any prospect of its becoming a law or not.

Mr. HARDY. My understanding, borne out by the most conservative newspapers in the State of Texas, is that Texas is urging now the calling of a special session of the legislature to pass a State law for the guarantee of deposits, and that it is claimed by those newspapers that the existence of this law in Oklahoma, as soon as it goes into effect, will have a tendency to draw the deposits from Texas and surrounding States to Oklahoma banks because of the confidence that depositors will have in the safety of their deposits.

Mr. GRONNA. That is presumably true, and I hope that not only Texas, but all other States will pass the same kind of a law.

Mr. HARDY. For the information of the gentleman I wish to say, in addition to that, that the national bank authorities in the State of Oklahoma are to-day appealing to the national bank authorities and the Comptroller of the Currency for permission to unite themselves with the State system of the Oklahoma law, because they say that without that union they themselves will be left barren of deposits, which shows that there is a confidence even in the State guaranty law.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know if I understand the last part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HARDY. That the national banks of Oklahoma are seeking to have the permission of the Comptroller of the Currency to come in under the terms of the provisions of the Oklahoma State law. Otherwise, when that law goes into effect, they anticipate all their banks will be left without depositors and the State banks will have all the deposits.

Mr. GRONNA. While the gentleman is on that question, if you will permit me, I want to ask him a question. I know that he is a lawyer. I have in my bill a provision that the State banks be permitted to participate in this fund provided they meet all of the requirements prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency. Now, I want to ask the gentleman as a lawyer if he thinks, if we pass a bill of that kind, that it will be constitutional?

I want to read the language of my bill:

SEC. 4. That any banking institution incorporated, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory of the United States may apply to the Comptroller of the Currency to be allowed to make the deposit herein required to be made by the national bank; and if upon examination the Comptroller of the Currency shall find that such banking institution is solvent and properly managed, he shall accept such deposit and shall issue to such banking institution his certificate to the effect that such banking institution has complied with all of the requirements of this act and that the depositors therein are entitled to the same protection as provided in this act for depositors in national banks. The officers of all State banking institutions who accept and comply with the provisions of this act shall be required to comply with all provisions thereof and with such rules and regulations as may be made by the Comptroller of the Currency in order to carry out its provisions and requirements.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think there is any question, if the gentleman will permit me, but that that course might be pursued by State banks. I want to say further, from the little ripple on the surface, that if the national banks adopt the system of guaranteeing deposits, the State banks will be forced to come into the national banking system by means of a provision like this, or to organize under a State system like Oklahoma; and in my opinion whichever one, the National or State government, adopts that provision first, the other government will have to do it in self-defense to protect the banks. A deposit guaranteed is one system that looks solely to the interest of the people, while most of the measures leaving that out are looking to the interest of the banks.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield? While that may be true as a legal proposition, is there not danger that if a provision like the gentleman has just read were incorporated in the national bank depository law, it would lessen the confidence on the part of national banks in the law for the reason that State banks would not be subjected to the same examination and control as the national banks? It seems to me that if you get them in——

Mr. GRONNA. They will be subject to the same inspection that they are now, and also to national inspection.

Mr. NORRIS. You would have to provide national bank examinations and an examination of the State banks at last. Now, does this bill provide just the same examination for the State banks as for the national banks?

Mr. GRONNA. I think it is already in my bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the probabilities are that if we pass that kind of a law we should pass laws that would be a little more stringent than they are. Of course that would all have to be done in the State, and the examinations should be the same.

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the gentleman from Nebraska for the statements he has made. In drafting this bill I was absolutely sure that a provision of that kind would be legal and constitutional.

Mr. GOULDEN. In making your statement that one-thirtieth of 1 per cent would be sufficient, I take it that was based on future expectations. When we shall have a law guaranteeing full and implicit confidence in our banks, it will avoid all runs; and when we shall have, as well, a thorough examination of all banks, we shall then avoid anything in the shape of a run, which is responsible for the failure of so many banks.

Mr. GRONNA. I have based my figures upon the losses in the past.

Mr. GOULDEN. You have made no prediction on the future?

Mr. GRONNA. I have based it on absolute facts.

Mr. GOULDEN. I fear you are too low, then.

Mr. GRONNA. I would be glad to include anybody's figures.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will allow me. I think your figures are based on an average of years. Well, as I understand that, at the beginning a greater assessment might be needed, until a sufficient sum was accumulated, and that would diminish and decrease after that had been accomplished.

Mr. ADAIR. I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from New York that his question more particularly refers to losses in banks by reasons of failures, runs, etc. Your purpose in making this provision is not to provide especially against runs. Bank funds lost to depositors come from mismanagement and dishonesty in the banks, and runs do not necessarily create loss to depositors. It is a very small percentage of loss that is created by runs on the banks. The losses occur by reason of dishonesty of the officials, and you can not pass any law that would prevent men from being dishonest occasionally.

Mr. GRONNA. I would say to the gentleman that the banks under this law would be closed if their business was not conducted on business principles, because there would be no danger of creating any suspicion in financial circles. As soon as the officials found that the bank was a weak one and not conducted on business principles, the office would at once proceed to see that it either go into liquidation or be taken over by other banks.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will permit me again, I understand the objection to the guaranty of deposits has been largely based upon the idea that such guaranty would promote recklessness in bankers and induce them to give extravagant rates of interest. Does your bill say anything about interest being guaranteed by the bankers and restricting the rate of interest?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it does not.

Mr. HARDY. I think that probably would be a wise provision.

Mr. GRONNA. It has been maintained by some that the adoption of the plan of insuring depositors would protect weak and poorly managed banks at the expense of the strong, well-managed ones, and that it would encourage "liberal" and speculative banking rather than safe and conservative methods. These critics overlook the fact that the direct protection afforded is not to banks but to the depositors in banks. So far as the banks are concerned, the benefits are indirect, and the strong, conservatively managed banks would be benefited as well as those not so strong or so well managed. Runs on banks, from which strong institutions suffer as well as weak ones, would be prevented, and the currency, without which a bank can not do business, would not be withdrawn and hoarded, but would remain in the bank. It is not clear that this measure for the protection of depositors would in any way encourage speculation or loose banking methods. A bank would be closed on becoming insolvent, then as now. The officials and stockholders of the bank would be liable to the same extent as at present. It is not readily apparent that the management of a bank would be tempted to run the institution into bankruptcy by the mere knowledge of the fact that its depositors had been insured against loss, nor is it conceivable that the stockholders should willingly elect a management that would make them liable to twice the par value of their stock simply because provision had been made for the safety of the bank's deposits. If anything, this measure would make for safe management. The authorities would not then, as they often do now, hesitate and delay as long as possible before closing a bank, because of the shock that such action will give to the confidence of the public and the consequent injury to the other banks. Confidence is necessary in the conduct of business. Banks are established to facilitate the conduct of business. If they are to fulfill the purpose of their establishment, it is necessary that the public have confidence in them. This confidence can be secured by guaranteeing the deposits of the banks.

The country may not yet be ready to provide such a fund for the protection of depositors against loss, but it is highly gratifying to note the growing favor with which the plan meets, especially when compared to the almost unanimous opposition of only two years ago. The new State of Oklahoma has adopted the plan of insuring the deposits in her State banks, and the neighboring States are being forced to follow suit, as in no other way can their banks secure deposits in competition with the banks of Oklahoma. I do not think it a rash prediction that a very few years will see the deposits in all the banks in the country, both national and State, protected by some form of insurance, either by voluntary associations or by national and State laws.

Mr. FLOYD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. FLOYD. In that connection, I desire to ask: If that kind of a provision was incorporated, would it not cause all banks to watch more closely the affairs of other banks? And if a bank was in a failing condition, or indulging in reckless speculation or improper business methods, would not the effect be that every other bank that had knowledge of that fact would report to the Comptroller and bring that matter to an investigation at once?

Mr. GRONNA. That is absolutely true, in my opinion.

Mr. FLOYD. It seems to me that would be the result of it.

Mr. ADAIR. May I ask a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield.

Mr. ADAIR. I should like to know how one bank would have the means of knowing that another bank was speculating in stocks or in questionable securities? What opportunity would they have for knowing the business of any particular bank?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the gentleman, if he is a banker he must know that if an act of this kind is passed the banks will not act individually, but they will form themselves into associations, which they should do to-day; that bankers will not be in the banking business for the mere purpose of making a few dollars for their own banks, but that men at the head of those institutions will be in the banking business for the purpose of conducting the business honestly and in a creditable manner, to save the people their money, and at the same time to make money for the banks themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of California. Taking human nature as it is, don't you think it would have just exactly the opposite effect of that? Who cares if a bank fails, if he can get the Government to step up and pay the depositors? It will not make any difference if twenty banks fail in a week if everybody gets his money from Uncle Sam.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say in reply to the gentleman from California, in the first place the stockholders will care, and in the second place the banks will be taxed for this fund.

Mr. SMITH of California. But the depositors and all other creditors of the bank would simply look to the Government in the background and say, "Now, I do not care how the bank is managed. It is no concern to me, because if it goes into the hands of a receiver and its doors are closed I will get my money anyhow."

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think I understood the gentleman. Did you mean as far as the public are concerned?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; the people who deposit money.

Mr. GRONNA. They will have full confidence in the banks. They will know that there is a fund deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and in case of the failure of a bank not a dollar will be lost.

Mr. SMITH of California. Your proposition, as I understood it, was that this scheme you have in mind would lead to a closer bond between bankers; that they would watch each other.

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely. There would be no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of California. I think it would have absolutely the opposite effect.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRONNA. In a moment.

Mr. ADAIR. In reference to what I said a moment ago, I fear the gentleman misunderstood me. I want to say first that I am in sympathy with your position. I believe in the position you are taking. I believe that these deposits should be guaranteed by an assessment upon the banks. My only purpose in asking you the other question was to get your opinion as to whether it would bring bankers closer together, and a closer understanding between them as to the character of the business they were doing. My experience in the business has been that bankers are usually pretty close-mouthed. They keep their business to themselves so far as possible. That is one of the first things to learn in the banking business, to make it absolutely confidential. If you have business with the bank with which I am connected I want you to feel that nobody knows anything about the business of a bank except you and myself. I want to say to the gentleman that I am in hearty sympathy with his bill, and believe that we should have a law of that kind.

Mr. GRONNA. I am glad that the gentleman is with me.

Mr. HARDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the criticism of the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH], he seems to be fearful of recklessness on the part of the depositors; that if the deposits were guaranteed by the Government, the depositors would become careless and reckless. I have never heard of the failure of a bank being brought about by the negligence or recklessness of the depositors of that bank.

Mr. SMITH of California. I did not have that in mind. The proposition was that the fact of this guaranty would tend to bring the bankers together and each help the other, and to caution one another against improper banking and thereby produce a better system of banking in the country. My suggestion was that it would have exactly the opposite effect.

I suppose the banks in the country are as much interested in avoiding bank failures as anybody in the community. If one banks fails it shocks every other bank, and they want to avoid it. If the Government is going to step in and make good when one bank fails, then it will be no shock to the community, because the community knows that if the bank fails there will be no loss to them. In other words, there would be less interest on the part of one bank in having its neighbor conducted properly than if left as they are now, to feel the result that follows every such disaster.

Mr. HARDY. That supposes that each bank would be in ignorance of the fact that each failure would bring an assessment on every bank; that the bank would not regard its own interests to protect itself by avoiding the failures of banks.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I am a banker only in a small way, but it is my opinion and belief that whether the banker conducts business on a small or a large scale, if you make it cost him something he is going to be careful to see that his fellow-banker exercises more care and intelligence and does not go into the business for speculation. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of California. The gentleman does not imagine that the banker is going to pay the tax or the contribution which he provides for in his bill. If there is an additional burden, they will quickly pass it over to the customer, to the borrower. Therefore the burden would nominally lie on the banker, but he would not carry it; he would transfer it to his customers.

Mr. GRONNA. Not necessarily; the banker is to pay the tax first; unless you can create a demand for money it will be impossible for banks to advance their discount.

Mr. SMITH of California. If the gentleman has got a scheme by which he can make the banker stand the burden I should like to hear it.

Mr. NORRIS. The general proposition as I understand it is to guarantee depositors on the part of the Government by a fund raised by assessment on the banks. The theory is, and I think there is no doubt whatever of it being true, that it would increase the deposits very largely, so that the banker would have to pay his proportionate share of this fund and would much more than make up what he had to pay by the use of the large increased deposits that would come to his bank. [Applause.]

Mr. GRONNA. I thank the gentleman for the statement.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to Members that we would like to have these practical ideas that the gentleman from North Dakota is presenting, and I hope he will not be disturbed any more. His time will shortly expire, and I beg Members to give him a fair chance to finish his speech.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe that the establishment of confidence in our banks by means of this guaranty fund will be found of great benefit in times of money stringency or bank crises. Of course it will not entirely prevent stringency in the money market. Our currency system has the defect of not making any provision for expansion in time of need, and confidence will not remedy this; but our currency actually contracts in time of need of expansion, and this the establishment of confidence will remedy. It will not give us an elastic currency, but it will prevent our currency from expanding when it should contract, and contracting when it should expand.

I want to state to the House there is, in my belief, a demand for legislation of this kind, and in support of that I want to read a portion of a letter from Mr. E. A. Drew, who has been in business and is in business to-day in the city of Minneapolis. I read from his letter:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 9, 1908.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Member of Congress at large for North Dakota, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It gave me a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction to read your interview appearing in the St. Paul Dispatch of December 19, wherein you exploited the objects of your bill now before Congress, looking toward a Government guarantee of deposits in all national banks and requiring four-fifths of all the reserve of the bank to be kept within its own vaults.

I want to congratulate you on being the pioneer in taking up this fight for the people and the best welfare of the whole country at large.

In my opinion the safety of bank deposits and savings of a frugal people is of the greatest and most vital interest to every man, woman, and child—of more importance than any subject now discussed by men, regardless of party politics or creed; for what does it profit a people to gain the sublime and enviable height of prosperity only to lose it in a single night by a brain-storm of shaken confidence, starting from the exposed rascality of men high in financial circles, with fuel added to the flame of suspicion by certain influences which stand to make money, no matter which way values trend?

Now, the provision relating to reserves is not included in my bill, but I firmly believe that whether this bill is passed or not, or a bill of this kind which has any of its provisions—I honestly believe that if we do nothing else we should repeal that part of the national-bank act which permits any bank to hold three-fifths of its reserve in other banks. I believe that all banks should hold at least four-fifths, or 80 per cent, of all their reserves in their own vaults.

Mr. STERLING. What protection is it to the depositor if they have all the reserve in their own vaults? They can not pay it out to their depositors. They are just in the same condition as though they had not any reserve in there at all.

Mr. GRONNA. That may be true, so far as it relates to loans, if you assume the bank may fail. It is not true regarding depositors, if you keep the money in your own vaults. We had that experience last fall. When we wanted our money it could not be had. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] will bear me out. I know him to be a banker. He will bear me out that when you want your money you can not get it, because they have loaned it out to speculators, and there has been an overspeculation not only on the people's deposits, but on the reserve that should be kept in the bank.

Mr. STERLING. Suppose he has a reserve, the depositor can not get it. Suppose the bank is down to its limit, and it has just the 25 per cent or the 15 per cent that the law requires to keep as reserve. The depositor goes to get it and the banker can not pay it out. The bank has got to save itself just as much as if there was not any fund.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. Certainly, the bank can pay out to the depositor and must pay it.

Mr. STERLING. I understand that the law forbids them to pay it out to the depositor, just as much as it forbids them to loan the money.

Mr. VREELAND. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from North Dakota. The object of the law is to compel him to keep it so that he can pay it out. One of the reasons why it ought to be kept at home—and the illustration of it that is fresh in the minds of every one of us is that when it is not kept at home, but is sent to New York, where it could not be reached, or some other city, they could not get it back, and it not only stimulated speculation where it was held, but it could not be returned where it ought to have been returned and where in law it is supposed to be, but as a matter of fact is not, but the bank would be justified and not only justified but required to pay it out to the depositor if it had the money there.

Mr. GRONNA. That is quite true.

Mr. VREELAND. I would like to set the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] right on the question of reserves of banks. In a national bank, of course, the reserve can be paid out. He will recollect that the banks of New York City have been something over $20,000,000 below their reserves for several weeks until recently. They can pay out the reserve, but they can make no further loans below the reserve, and must make up the reserve to the legal limit within thirty days, if required.

Mr. GRONNA. They can pay the money to depositors, but must not loan it.

Mr. STERLING. They do pay it to depositors, but I do not agree with the gentleman that they are entitled under the law to pay it to depositors. I may be mistaken about that, but I have been at some pains to make inquiries. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] if I am not correct?

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think every bank does pay out to depositors.

Mr. STERLING. I know they do it.

Mr. KEIFER. I think, in the experience of thirty-odd years, the understanding is that the reserve is kept for the very purpose of preventing the bank from declining to pay depositors, when, as a matter of course, the bank would have to go into the hands of a receiver if it did that.

Mr. STERLING. Now, I beg the indulgence of the Member here who contradicts my position. Is it not a regulation of the Department they can not pay them out to the depositors?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. The reserves can be paid to depositors. But when the bank comes below its reserve—and we have had the New York banks for two months below their reserve by something over $50,000,000——

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I call the gentleman's attention to the law.

Mr. GRONNA. My bill provides that national banks shall be taxed one-fiftieth of 1 per cent, or 20 cents per thousand dollars, on their annual deposits. On deposits now in national banks, this would amount to more than $800,000 annually, which is considerably more than the average annual loss to creditors of insolvent national banks for thirty-nine years. I believe that another law should also be enacted providing that banks should pay 2 per cent interest on Government deposits, and that no bank should be entitled to receive Government funds to exceed 50 per cent of its capital stock. On January 22, 1908, the United States Government had on deposit in national banks nearly $250,000,000. Interest on this as provided would bring $5,000,000. If the plan of taxing the banks on their deposits in order to create a guaranty fund be found objectionable, the amount realized by requiring the banks to pay interest on the Government deposits might be used to establish and maintain a fund for guaranteeing deposits.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman permit me? If that proposition was not accompanied with another proposition that the bank would not be obliged to put up a Government bond or some low interest-bearing bond to guarantee the Government, I can not see how the bank could make any money or be induced in any way to take Government deposits even at 2 per cent, although I am strongly in favor of the Government receiving interest.

Mr. GRONNA. If I may be permitted, the bank does not lose that interest on the bond. The Government does not get that interest. The bank gets that interest, consequently it pays no interest at all on Government funds. I think I am right in that respect.

Mr. HINSHAW. I want to make myself understood. I am in favor of the payment of interest all right by the bank to the Government, but if a Government bond bearing only 2 per cent is required as security for the loan from the Government and it pays the Government 2 per cent and buys the bond at a premium of 4 or 5 per cent, the bank would lose money on the transaction, it seems to me, and could not be induced to take the money at all unless it could put up a security bearing 4 or 5 per cent of municipal or State bonds, or securities that the banks can procure in their own localities.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman will permit, the Secretary of the Treasury does not require the deposit of United States bonds. Any security that the savings banks of New York, New Jersey, or Massachusetts would take, he would take.

Mr. ADAIR. In answer to the gentleman I will say there are many banks of the country who would be very glad to take deposits. You take it out in my State, since we have a State law providing that interest shall be paid on public funds there is not a bank in Indiana but has been scrambling to get all the deposits it can get and pay 2 per cent on them, and there is not a national bank in Indiana to-day but what would be glad to take a Government deposit and pay 2 per cent, even if it bought a Government bond and put it up as security upon which it received but 2 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe the gentleman is absolutely correct; I know in my State they pay 3 per cent on State funds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit; suppose, now, the Government passes a law securing deposits, and one State pays more interest than another, which makes it, of course, more dangerous for your bank to live. Do not you think it will be a good thing for the National Government to say a bank shall not pay more than a minimum amount of interest on deposits, and also fix the rate of interest?

Mr. GRONNA. If the gentleman will permit, I do not believe he was here when I made my statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was not.

Mr. GRONNA. I said on January 22, 1908, the United States Government had on deposit in Government banks about $250,000,000, for which they received no interest. I also said I believed another law should also be enacted providing that all banks should pay 2 per cent interest on Government deposits, and no bank should be entitled to receive Government funds to exceed 50 per cent of its capital stock.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I see that carries it still further. My proposition exactly was, for instance, here is the magnificent newly created State of Oklahoma, where everything is on a boom, and they pay, perhaps, 10 per cent out there. Now, that draws all the money from the old States, where they pay only from 4 to 6; so you see the difficulty.

Mr. GRONNA. Objection is made to the system of guaranteeing deposits for the reason that it would discriminate against all banks that are not national banks. That may to a certain extent be true, but would it not be infinitely better for the country to adopt a system of banking that would at all times be safe and prove satisfactory to the people? State banks can to a certain extent have this same protection by associating themselves together and creating a protective fund under State law, but I believe that even State banks could be included in this system if they are willing to subject themselves to the same requirements as are imposed upon national banks.

Why should we have a panic at any time when the country is enjoying unexampled prosperity? Never in its history has this country been so prosperous as it is to-day. We are enjoying the blessings of bountiful crops; in the West labor could scarcely be hired at any price; before this financial flurry the factories were overrun with orders.

Labor was receiving higher wage than it ever had before. We produced more than we could take care of, and the world stood ready to buy our products of every kind and description. We produced 2,500,000,000 of bushels of corn, more than 600,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 13,500,000 bales of cotton. With a balance of trade of $450,000,000 in our favor and with a gold production of $100,000,000 yet we had a panic, all due to our weak and inefficient system of banking. The only way to settle this question is to agree upon something that the people want and that the banks want. Any attempt to enact laws detrimental to or discriminating in favor of either will and should fail. While we are willing to listen to what the bankers may have to say, we must not forget that the people are the ones who are most vitally concerned in this as in all other great questions. According to Government reports, the people have more than $13,000,000,000 in the different kinds of banks and the bankers have about $4,000,000,000. Even as a mathematical proposition it would not be fair to leave it to the bankers to say what kind of a system we should adopt. Every plan that the bankers have so far proposed has proved to be a failure. I read an Associated Press report to the St. Paul Dispatch:

WHERE HAS MONEY GONE? NEARLY THREE HUNDRED MILLION HAS DISAPPEARED SINCE LAST AUGUST.

NEW YORK, January 8, 1908.

According to the monthly circular of the National City Bank, $276,000,000 in cash disappeared between the call for the condition of the national banks responded to last August and the one last month. This includes a net reduction of $41,000,000 in the cash holdings of all the national banks in the country, and a loss of $13,000,000 cash reported by the New York City trust companies, together with the known additions to the circulating medium during this period, including $100,000,000 of gold imported from abroad and $72,000,000 cash released by the United States Treasury.

This shows conclusively that there is a lack of confidence in our banks. Now, why ask for an asset currency? Why not do something to bring back the $276,000,000 that have been hoarded? In addition there is an available circulation of $300,000,000 not yet taken out by banks that may have it for the asking.

No country in the world has as large an uncovered paper currency as the United States. According to the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, the uncovered paper currency of the leading countries on January 1, 1906, was as follows: Germany, $213,900,000; France, $118,200,000; United Kingdom, $116,600,000; United States, $582,100,000; the per capita uncovered paper currency being: Germany, $3.53; France, $3.02; United Kingdom, $2.67; United States, $6.83. It is to be borne in mind that the United States had, in addition, about $660,000,000 of silver and silver certificates, and $346,000,000 of United States notes, covered by only $150,000,000 of gold, and that the national bank note currency has recently been largely increased.

The following table shows deposits and cash holdings of the several classes of reporting banks on or about June 30, 1907, together with the percentage of cash to deposits for 1906 and 1907:

Banks.	Individual deposits.	Cash on hand.	Ratio of cash to deposits.
			1906.		1907.
	Millions.	Millions.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
National banks	$4,322.9	$721.9	----------	16.80	----------	16.70
State banks	3,068.6	254.0	8.30		8.28
Savings banks	3,495.4	27.4	.79		.78
Private banks	151.1	8.7	6.15	4.94	5.76	5.60
Loan and trust companies	2,061.0	101.7	3.49		4.93
Total	13,099.6	1,113.7	----------	8.29	----------	8.50

The percentage of cash to individual deposits held by all national banks on May 20, 1907, was 16.70 per cent, and the percentage of reserve held to deposit liabilities on that date was 21.22 per cent, of which 13.23 per cent was in lawful money.

Had it not been for the need of our products abroad, which made gold imports possible, where and how would we have got the $100,000,000 in gold? It was not the banker or through his system that this gold was secured, but by the honest effort of labor, by the production of something real, the production of crops, cereal, and cotton, that the world stood ready to buy. We had the products to sell and got the gold.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to thank the House for their close attention and for the additional time given me.

I believe that section 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States should be amended so that under its provisions but one-fifth instead of three-fifths of the 15 per cent reserve required by law to be kept by banks in reserve may consist of balances due from reserve banks. I also believe that section 5195 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which authorizes banks in smaller reserve cities to keep one-half of their lawful money reserve in cash with banks in central reserve cities, should be repealed. In other words, a bank should be compelled to keep four-fifths of its reserve in lawful money in its own vaults.

Now, I do not want to be understood as being opposed to an elastic currency. I do not believe that anyone is opposed to an elastic currency. I do not wish to array class against class, or section against section, for I believe that what benefits the people in one section of our country benefits the people in another section of our country, but, Mr. Chairman, this question should be settled without sectionalism, without discrimination for the benefit of a favored few, but with patriotism, in the interest of the people, and, above all, with the idea constantly in view that labor as well as capital must be treated fairly, justly, and honestly, in order that confidence may be restored in our American banking institutions. Let us show to the people that we will do what we can to protect their earnings from loss. Without this confidence capital can not hope to prosper. I hope that no one wants a panic. I know that it is true that those who are engaged in honest business suffer, that those who are engaged in manufacturing suffer, that those who are engaged in agriculture and farming suffer, and that, above all, the laborer suffers.

In my State alone, the money stringency last fall cost the farmers at least $5,000,000. Just about the time that the farmers had gathered their crops and were ready to dispose of them, and the world stood ready to buy them at profitable prices, they found that they could not sell for lack of currency. When the buying of grain was resumed, there were those who took advantage of the position in which the farmer had been placed, and the products of the farmer were secured at prices 10 to 20 cents per bushel less than what they were actually worth.

Now, I want to say to the Members of this House that this is a question that can not and should not be made a party question. It is a question that is of greater importance than any other question that you can bring before this House. The people in the cities and the people in the country are watching our actions, and it is for us to say whether we will follow the old system of banking or whether we shall say to the people that we stand ready to cooperate with them; that we stand ready to say that we think it possible for them to have confidence in our institutions; that we will make it possible for them to deposit their funds in our banks and not lose a single dollar. Now, will we do it? I want to say to you, as one I shall vote for a measure of this kind. It does not make any difference from which side of the House that measure comes. [Applause.]

With a law taxing banks and guaranteeing deposits, the depositors will feel confident of being paid and will make no unjust demands for their funds. The bank officials will in all cases be the ones to worry, not only over their own affairs, but over those of their fellow-bankers. This is as it should be. It will tend to create a closer relationship among bank officials, as each will, to a certain extent, be responsible for the welfare of the other. Nothing can be more important in the commercial world than a free and friendly intercourse among business men. The old saying "In union there is strength" holds good in this case as well as in all other cases where it can be applied, and I know of no other business where it can be so effectively applied and result in so marked a degree in advancing not only the interests of the banks, but also ultimately the interests of the people.

It might be well for the men who are placed at the head of our large banking institutions to take time to study the causes that at certain periods affect their business and cause them uneasiness, worry, and often serious losses. If this is done in a spirit of fairness, without prejudice and greed—if this great question is viewed from the broad standpoint of a good citizen, with no special interest or advantage to any one class in mind, but in a statesmanlike and patriotic manner, we shall have no difficulty in agreeing upon some plan or system satisfactory to all. We have sound money, now let us adopt a system, or improve our present system, so that we can truthfully say that we have sound banks. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I arise once more to challenge the autocratic authority which the Speaker has asserted over the deliberations of this body. I regret that a sense of duty calls me to the performance of this task. If I shall be made to suffer some inconveniences by those in power here because of that which I now utter, I shall try to exercise the fortitude necessary to bear it.

I do not expect that what I say will have great influence upon the results here, but I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that some of the words which I shall now utter will float out through the corridors and out of the windows of this Capitol and out into the country where the people themselves may know what transpires in this body. If the people of the United States knew as you know, Mr. Chairman, and as I know, and as other Members know, how their voice is suppressed here, the Administration now in control would be swept out of power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I entertain no malevolence toward the Speaker. I have for him personally the highest regard. So impressed have I been with the successful career of this wonderful man that I have adorned the walls of my home with his picture, that there may be kept constantly before my boy and the boys of my neighbors the sublime heights which may be reached by one of such inflexible purpose as has possessed this man of iron. As an individual he is most lovable. Generous, companionable, intellectual, resourceful, persistent, and, above all, courageous, he stands a giant among men. He is the ablest and the boldest champion of aristocracy this age has produced. If the spirits of the departed are allowed to come back into this world from which their bodies have gone, with what rapture must the ghost of Alexander Hamilton contemplate the administration of his illustrious disciple as Speaker of this House? [Applause on the Democratic side.] It was the Hamiltonian view that government was for the classes, and that the only hope for the masses was that by thrift some of them might accumulate enough wealth to be admitted to the classes. This Hamiltonian idea is entertained by a majority of the leaders of the dominant party. Few of them, however, have the courage to avow it, as does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. Chairman, the Speaker has overthrown the people's free government and erected upon its ruins an autocracy more absolute in its despotism than exists in any monarchy of Europe. Our forefathers bought with their blood and left us as a blessed inheritance "a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people." In the scheme of government which they provided, this House was to be the bulwark of our liberties and the forum in which Representatives were to freely deliberate and act for the general welfare, untrammeled except by the fear of God and the will of the people. No clearer conception of our system can be expressed than in the words of the Speaker himself. In his address at the beginning of this session he said:

> The fundamental principles of free government are eternal and unchanging, resting on the will and responsibility of the people, and are put in action through the deliberations of conscientious and fearless representatives of that will. This House is the only institution under our Constitution where that will of the people may be expressed with a fair approximation to scientific accuracy. To this House and this House alone belongs the peculiar, the delicate, and the all-surpassing function of interpreting and putting in definite form the will of the people.

These are the words of the Speaker; and yet that same Speaker has completely subverted the people's free government of which he so clearly speaks. On the first day of this session, lashed into fury by the deserved castigation of my colleague [Mr. DE ARMOND], the Speaker said:

> The Chair desires to state again that the Speaker of this House is the servant of the House.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is true when the Speaker acts within his legal authority; it is not true, however, when the Speaker sets at naught the law, overrides the House, and substitutes his own unbridled will for the will of the people as sought to be expressed by the majority of the Representatives on this floor.

Mr. Chairman, the responsibility for legislation here rests, not upon the Speaker, but upon the majority of the Representatives. The Speaker, as he well says, is "only the servant of the House," not its master. Yet this Speaker has assumed that he is responsible for everything that passes this House, and has declared that he will not permit a measure to be considered or voted upon unless he himself shall approve it. No matter if two-thirds of the Members shall favor it, still it can not be considered or voted upon unless the Speaker shall favor it also.

I hold in my hand a magazine article written by the Hon. L. White Busbey, the genial and talented private secretary to the Speaker, from which I desire to read some extracts. He says:

> The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds prepared an omnibus bill, and three-fourths of the Members signed a request to the Speaker asking that the Rules Committee bring in a special rule for the consideration of this bill. The Speaker refused the request. The chairman of the committee pleaded and urged.

Sir, where was this "pleading and urging" done? On the floor of the House, in the open? That chairman, armed as he was with a signed request of three-fourths of the Members of the House, could not have gotten the floor for that purpose. To do his "pleading and urging" he had to sneak off to the Speaker's private room and gently tap on the door. Being admitted, he had to deferentially stand and meekly "plead and urge" with the Speaker alone as a Christian goes alone into his closet to "plead and urge" with his Maker.

Continuing, Mr. Busbey says:

> As a final stroke, the chairman said "Then, Mr. Speaker, this bill is to fall by the will of one man, who is in the chair by our votes. We have no redress from this one-man power." "Yes, you have," replied the Speaker, "you have a way to pass your bill. You placed me in the chair to shoulder the responsibility of the legislation here enacted."

Sir, I pause to have the Speaker tell us by what authority he assumes that he became responsible for the legislation here enacted by being elected Speaker. I see him sitting here now upon this floor. I ask him to rise in his place, not as Speaker, but as a Member from Illinois, and tell us how it was he "shouldered the responsibility" for what a majority of the Members of the House might enact.

But let me continue to read Mr. Busbey's account of what the Speaker said:

> In my view I can not assume responsibility for this bill. You can elect a new Speaker to-day and pass your bill if you can find one who will accept that responsibility, but if you leave me in the chair your bill will not become a law.

Who said it should not become a law? Not a majority of the Members of the House, for two-thirds of them had signed a written request for its passage. Who, then, was it that said it should not become a law? The American people? No; because they have no way to speak except through the mouths of their representatives. Yet this one man, who under the law is only the servant of the House, gags two-thirds of the Members so that the voice of the people is stifled. This one man, exercising an authority which he has wrongfully usurped, says "I veto your bill before its passage." It is true that the President of the United States may veto a bill, but not until it has been passed. Then his veto may be overturned by a two-thirds vote of the two Houses. The President's veto is exercised in accordance with law. In this House one man in violation of the law vetoes a bill before its passage and a nine-tenths majority can not overturn it, except by first removing him from office. How does this autocrat tell us we may pass a bill here which he does not approve? We must first remove him from office as Speaker. To do that would be revolution. Then, sir, the only way a majority here can overcome this one-man power is to resort to revolution. The only way according to this Speaker for the American people to give force and effect to their will is to resort to revolution and drive from office this czar who obstructs them. Has it come to pass that the Speaker of the House of Representatives has brought us to the level of the Russian peasants who have no privilege but that of revolution? Think of it, Mr. Chairman. This man tells us that a majority here can not pass a measure which he disapproves without we first expel him from an office to which we have elected him. This one man is stronger than a two-thirds majority of the House. The bill which Mr. Busbey tells us was supported by three-fourths of the Members of the House never got off of the Speaker's table, and died with the session. Oh, Mr. Chairman, what a morgue is that Speaker's table! I call upon the American people to come up to that morgue and view their dead. [Applause.] I have not time to catalogue the corpses. I will speak of some of them.

At the beginning of the Fifty-sixth Congress I introduced a bill here providing for the abolition of the duty on wood pulp and printing paper. Some others introduced the same bill. I have introduced it in every Congress from that day to this. Where is it? It is down in a pigeonhole in the Ways and Means Committee room, presided over by the genii that have been selected by this autocrat to see that all who enter there leave hope behind. [Laughter.]

My friends from Wisconsin, give me your ears. You go out into your country and you tell the people that you are in favor of revising the tariff. The membership of this House from Massachusetts do the same thing. I want to suggest to you what a magnificent convenience you have. You can shout tariff revision as long as you please; you are in no danger, because as long as you uphold the Administration that now controls this House you can make your people any promise that you please; this Speaker will see to it that you do not have to redeem your pledge. [Laughter.]

Are you what you profess? Then come across, come over to us now and let us join hands and make a fight in the only way a fight can be made by breaking down the autocracy which will not allow the people's representatives to do what a majority of the people want done.

How many Members in this House will stand up in their places and say that they are opposed to the abolition of the tariff on wood pulp and printing paper? I see one, two, three, four, five. We have five out of 386 Members bold enough to hold up their hands and say that they are opposed to it; and even they have not given their names so that they may go in the RECORD. Four-fifths of the membership of this House favor the measure. Why don't we pass it? Because it is buried in the committee room of the Ways and Means Committee.

I should like to make a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill and bring it on the floor for action. It is a perfectly fair motion for me to make. Why do I not make it? Because the Speaker of the House would say, "For what purpose does the gentleman rise?" And when I should state my purpose I would go down as if knocked with a sledge hammer. [Laughter.]

What have the trusts to fear? You Members over there who enact these rules, who put this autocrat in power over us, you are perfectly safe; you can get the support of both sides; you can have the trusts support you because you don't do them any harm, and then go out and fool the people by making them believe that you are trying to do them some good.

There is a rule of this House which provides that on one day in the month there shall be a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill. It is privilege, and a privilege that does not inhere in the Speaker, but to the individual Members of this House; and yet there is not a man on this floor who will say that he ever received recognition for a motion to suspend the rules unless he went first meekly and humbly into the Speaker's room to beg as a favor that which was already his as a matter of right. I dare say that during the entire reign of this Speaker no Member has ever risen in his place as a matter of right, as a Representative of the people, and received recognition to move to suspend the rules. You must first get consent of this one-man power that controls us or you can accomplish nothing.

Back in my State some of the people are wet and some of them are dry. They believe in the fundamental doctrine of local self-government; in some counties they have declared that liquor shall not be sold in their midst. And what is the result? They have closed out the liquor dealers, but original packages are pouring in there by express, with the loss of revenue, and still having all the liquor that they had before. The people do not want it there; they have said by their votes that they are opposed to it, but it is carried there under the construction of the law governing goods carried from one State to another in original packages.

There has been before this House, before I came here in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and each and every day since then, bills seeking to remedy that situation. What has become of them? They have been sent down by Charon across the river Styx from whence they may never return. Are the people of the United States in favor of making liquor shipped in original packages subject to local laws of the communities into which they go? Yes. Three-fourths of the membership of this House are in favor of it. Everybody is in favor of it except the special interests, the brewers, and the distillers and the Ægis of the classes that presides over the destinies of legislation in this House. I should like to move to discharge that committee and take that bill up for consideration in the House. Who is in my way? The membership? No! The membership of this House are in favor of it. Who is in my way? Who is in the way of the American people here upon this question? One man! Not Alexander Hamilton, but his talented disciple.

Back in my State there are hundreds of old soldiers who enlisted in the cause of the Union under the Stars and Stripes to preserve this country indissoluble. For more than twenty years we have been seeking to get onto this floor a bill giving them a pensionable status. They fought as did other soldiers for the maintenance of the Union. Our bill—I have one in this Congress and it is buried in the Committee on Invalid Pensions where I can not get it out—I would like to get it on this floor. I would like to make a motion to discharge the committee from its consideration and bring it up here and let us submit it to the wisdom of this House. I would not ask the Speaker to become responsible for it. All I ask of him is that it be brought here and passed or defeated by a free, honest vote of the Representatives of the American people. Those old soldiers have waited a long time, hoping that Congress would be just. Old and trembling now, they ask for relief. I believe Congress is ready to give it. But one man stands in the way and blocks us. Who is he? He is the Speaker of this House, that disciple of Alexander Hamilton, who exerts the great power which he has usurped to promote the interests of the special classes.

We have injunctions. In the State of Missouri we passed a law to regulate freight and passenger rates. Where is that law? For two years it has been held up by injunctions issued by a Federal judge who came from up in Iowa. One man from another State comes into our State and at one fell swoop restrains every officer of our State from enforcing a law that has been deliberately worked out by the people and their representatives. We want the power of the Federal courts to issue injunctions limited. The representation on this floor wants to pass a law limiting Federal injunctions. The laboring people have been standing around the corridors of this Capitol for years pleading that we relieve them from the horrible results of these improvident injunctions. This House is ready to limit this tyrannical power of the courts. Give us a chance to do it. Mr. Speaker, if it is done the responsibility will not be upon your shoulders. The responsibility will be upon the shoulders of us who come here as the Representatives of a free people to deliberate and to act untrammeled as the will of our constituents demands. Give the farmers, the laboring people, who are oppressed by these improvident injunctions, some relief.

I beg of you, Mr. Speaker, give us an opportunity to express the will of the people. It is up to you, Mr. Speaker. We can give the relief that the people demand in thirty minutes if you will ascend to that chair and say that the question may be brought to a vote. We can pass that law in thirty minutes, Mr. Speaker, if you will give your consent that some Representative on this floor may move for its consideration. But it can not be done. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, you block the way. No matter from what direction we come to ask for these things that we people demand we are blocked, securely blocked, by your one-man power that rules here. Every Republican is relieved from responsibility. He can go back home, as I said a moment ago, and shout reform until his lungs have been exhausted. It does not do any good and it does not do any harm. The trusts, the special interests, are shielded behind that marble desk in front of the Speaker's chair. If the American people will only rise to the exigency of the occasion, if they will only understand as you understand it, Members of this House, and as I understand it, the place to assault is that citadel of the special interests, they will succeed. They will do it when they understand it, and in order that they may understand it, I have taken the floor. It has been an unpleasant task. I wish that somebody else more able had undertaken it, but it is something that I could not allow to pass and feel that I had honestly served my constituency.

No man will rise in his place and say that what I have uttered is not the truth. Mr. Busbey, the confidential secretary to the Speaker, has given you the pen picture which I read of how the Speaker killed one bill. That is precisely the way in which he has killed all these other bills in which the people are interested, and until that is remedied it is useless to talk about free government, it is useless to talk about reform, it is useless to talk about doing anything in the interest of the people. The consolation that the Speaker offers is that if we do not like what he does we may remove him. In Russia when the peasant does not like what the Czar does he throws a bomb and blows him out of his seat. Here the Speaker states when we do not like the way he rules that the only remedy we have is that we throw him out of his office. That is not the genius of our Government; that is not the system that was erected for our control. The founders of the American Government were not the Hamiltonians; they were the Jeffersonians. They believed that you could trust the people, and, Mr. Chairman, you can trust the people. It is the only power in this country that you can safely trust. If temporarily they go wrong they will right themselves. Trust the people; give these Representatives their rights upon this floor; let every man have the privilege to rise in his place and present what he chooses for the consideration of this House, and then let that matter be disposed of by a free and an untrammeled expression of the Representatives of the people.

If any Representative shall so far forget himself as to do that which is wrong, his constituency will reckon with him when the next election rolls around. It was intended that the ballot box and not the Speaker's gavel should be a check upon the Members of this House. It was not intended that this should be a penitentiary where we should have a warden and a deputy warden; that Representatives were to come here with shackles upon their consciences and manacles upon their intelligence, and, if Republicans, be delivered over to a warden, and, if Democrats, to a deputy warden. That is not the spirit of our Government. We are not expected to be put into close column, each man with his hands on the shoulders of the one in front of him, and told to march lock step. This is not the place for a lock-step march. This is a place where every man ought to be permitted to express the sentiments of his own people as he understands them, responsible only to the God who observes what he does and to the people who gave him their support. I have called attention to this in my feeble way. I hope that there are some others abler and bold enough to keep up the struggle.

"Open these windows," as some old German parliamentarian said when he commenced to speak and the members got up and went out. He asked the presiding officer to find the janitor. Inquiry was made as to what he wanted with the janitor, and he said: "I want him to open the windows so what I say may be heard by the German people." That is what I want to-day. I do not expect this to be heeded by those who stand here in control, but I do want the American people to come into a full realization of the tyranny to which we are subjected. What will be my part for what I have done and said to-day God only knows, but let it come. I have taken the floor fearlessly as a defender of the liberties of my people, and I have this time, as I have done on former occasions, challenged the authority of the Speaker of this House to control it as he does and to continue the issue with him, which I will fight out as long as I am in public life, whether the people at the ballot box shall not compel him to deliver back their free Government which he has so ruthlessly taken away from them. Mr. Chairman, I thank you. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SABATH. What was the gentleman's question, may I ask? Whether the House was in favor of removing it?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes, the House is in favor of it.

Mr. SABATH. I want to be recorded that I am in favor of removing the tariff from wood pulp.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Everybody is in favor of it except the "big three." [Laughter.] All are in favor of it except the Speaker and the Rules Committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURPHY] have permission to have a letter read at the desk. It will only take a minute of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE STATE CIVIL SERVICE REFORM ASSOCIATION,
Milwaukee, January 22, 1908.

Hon. JAMES W. MURPHY,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The executive committee of the State civil service league of Wisconsin, in behalf of the members of the league and the friends of the merit system throughout the State, earnestly request you to endeavor to secure the insertion of a clause in the bill (H. R. 7597, introduced by Mr. CRUMPACKER) providing for a census in 1910, requiring that the 4,000 or more additional employees under the Census Bureau shall be selected by competitive tests under the civil-service rules. We respectfully protest against the clauses in said bill which provide for the appointment of the additional clerical force through noncompetitive instead of competitive examinations. The noncompetitive tests used in selecting the employees of the last two censuses are said, upon good authority, to have served as a mere cloak for the spoils system, and resulted in extraordinary and unnecessary expense, and incompetent, inaccurate, and even fraudulent work. It is desirable that that record shall not be repeated. We earnestly call your attention to the President's message on the subject, sent to Congress on the 6th of this month, as representative of the influential public opinion of this and many other States. We should appreciate a reply stating your own views on the subject.

Very respectfully,

JUDSON TITSWORTH,
GLENWAY MAXON,
G. W. HAZELTON,
JOHN A. BUTLER,
For the Executive Committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume all the time that has been allotted to me, and I desire only to use so much of it as may be necessary to make some comment upon a recent unofficial prophecy of the late official prophet of the Republican party, General Grosvenor, of Ohio. While in the city a few days ago he made an elaborate and carefully prepared statement in the nature of a prophecy to the effect that the prospective nominee of the Democratic party could not by any possible computation be figured out as able to secure more than 166 of the electoral votes of the United States, and in making this prophecy this prophet, recently out of a job, used this language:

> Bryanism has been the bane of the Democratic party in the East and great Middle West for all these years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some one has said that "The best of prophets of the future is the past," and the world's greatest poet has said that "One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning." Therefore it happens, Mr. Chairman, that even if the Democratic party were disposed to take its warnings and its prophecies from high Republican sources and from assistant Republican newspapers, that party is much more likely to look to its experience of recent years and scan the statistics of recent elections than it is to heed the grave warnings of eminent Republicans who are very anxious to save the Democratic party from a terrible mistake. What are those experiences?

In the table prepared by the eminent gentleman from Ohio, we find 166 electoral votes accorded to Bryan in the approaching election, as follows:

Alabama	11	North Carolina	12
Arkansas	9	Oklahoma	7
Florida	5	South Carolina	9
Georgia	13	Tennessee	12
Kentucky	13	Texas	18
Louisiana	9	Virginia	12
Maryland	8
Mississippi	10	Total	166
Missouri	18

After this concession to "Bryanism" the same prophet proceeds to foretell which States will surely be Republican. These so-called "safe Republican States" embrace, among others, the States of Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, and Ohio. Now, for a few moments, I desire to draw attention to these States, which cast in all 126 electoral votes, and in which Democracy is alleged by the prophet to have been so terribly damaged by the "bane of Bryanism." What do the figures of the elections show? Taking the first State, Colorado, we find that Mr. Bryan in the year 1900, in the last campaign in which he was a candidate, polled 122,000 votes, and that the Democrat nominated by the Democratic party in the last campaign as safe and sane, representing, as our Republican friends tell us, the real, wise, and hopeful candidacy of the Democratic party, polled only 101,000 votes four years later.

Mr. BONYNGE. May I ask the gentleman a question? Has he the figures of 1896, when Mr. Bryan carried the State by about 136,000 plurality, and in 1900 by 29,000 plurality? At the same rate of figures the Republicans ought to carry the State next time by 100,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I reply to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] to this effect, that Mr. Bryan in both campaigns carried this Republican State by large majorities, and that with the exception of Colorado every one of these States gave Mr. Bryan substantially the same vote in 1900 that it gave him in 1896. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman was talking about Colorado and I wanted him to give the facts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It did so, Mr. Chairman. Moreover, in spite of the fact in 1900 that the Republican candidate for President was running for reelection; in spite of the fact that he had at that time, as the Republicans have not now, the argument of the full dinner pail; in spite of the fact that the Republicans at that time had, as they have not now, the argument of a successful war, Bryan carried this Republican State and can do so again. Colorado, moreover, is the only one of the debatable States in which Mr. Bryan's vote declined from 1896 to 1900, and even then, after that decline, he had enough to carry the State against McKinley by nearly 30,000 majority. He had more than any other Democrat ever received in Colorado before or since. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Come, now, to the State of Idaho. He carried that State in 1896, and again in 1900. No other Democratic candidate for President ever carried that State. When Judge Parker ran—and in speaking of him I speak in no disparagement, because his candidacy was not one in which his personal strength was the test. His weakness was the weakness of the reactionary. It was the weakness of a general who was leading toward the rear and not toward the front. [Applause.] When Mr. Parker ran in Idaho he polled only two-thirds as many votes as Mr. Bryan had polled four years before.

Coming now to the State of Ilinois, which General Grosvenor denominates as surely Republican, because Democracy there suffers from the bane of Bryanism, what do we find? We find that Mr. Bryan polled in that State 503,000 votes in spite of the flood of money which was poured forth at the last moment to purchase the electorate. We find that Judge Parker four years later polled about 200,000 votes less. [Renewed applause.] Mr. Bryan polled in Illinois more votes than any Democratic candidate for President before or since. Running four years after Cleveland, he had 40,000 more votes, and running four years before Parker, he polled 175,000 more votes than Parker. [Applause.] Does that look as though the Democracy of Illinois was suffering from the "bane of Bryanism?" Mr. Bryan did not carry the State then, although I believe he will carry it this year. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] But he lost Illinois by a vote which was 200,000 to the good, as compared with the reactionary candidate.

Let us now look at the State of Indiana, which Republican prophets warn us will surely be Republican if Bryan runs. Here we can more emphatically repeat the statement made by me about the State of Illinois. No Democrat who ever ran for President in Indiana, or for any other office in Indiana, ever polled as many votes as Bryan did in 1900 against Mr. McKinley, the popular and militant President of a successful war and the prophet of a full dinner pail. In 1896 Mr. Bryan polled 43,000 votes more than Cleveland had done four years before, and he polled in 1900, 35,000 votes more in Indiana than Judge Parker did four years later. Does that show weakness or strength in Bryanism?

Now we come to the State of Montana, denominated as safely Republican. Mr. Bryan carried that Republican State both times; and in 1900 polled 16,000 more votes than Parker did four years later.

In Nebraska, my own State and Mr. Bryan's State, he carried it in 1896, and in 1900 even though he lost it by a narrow margin he polled more than twice as many votes as were given to Judge Parker four years later. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] And it may be said, Mr. Chairman, that as a result of Bryanism, the Republican majority in Nebraska, which had originally been nearly 28,000, has been so reduced as to be less than half that size; and we feel confident in this year of grace, with Bryan as our leader and candidate, we will carry that State for him. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman—he may have stated it, although I failed to hear it—what the vote for Bryan was in 1900 as compared with his vote in 1896 in Nebraska?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In Nebraska?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I can furnish the information. [Cries of "Go on!"]

I will reply to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio by a more comprehensive statement perhaps than he anticipates. The total popular vote of the United States for the Democratic candidate in the year 1900, when Mr. Bryan ran, was 6,358,000. Four years later, when Judge Parker—a man of unimpeachable character, a man with a great reputation as a lawyer, a man who stood high in the Empire State and wherever lawyers are known—in that campaign Judge Parker polled 5,077,000 votes.

Mr. KEIFER. A further question; the gentleman did not answer the other. Do you know whether Mr. Parker is right in his statement of a day or two ago that Mr. Bryan did not act in good faith, and according to promise, or he would have got more votes?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Bryan is entirely able to answer personal questions himself. My opinion is that he acted in very good faith and that he carried himself in a model way under the circumstances. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It will be remembered, in further answer to the gentleman's question, that when the great convention was held in St. Louis a desperate fight occurred in the committee on resolutions. Single handed and with a vigor and energy and ability unparalleled in struggles of that sort, Mr. Bryan for several days and several nights succeeded, by his work on the committee on resolutions, in preventing that committee from reporting a platform which he could not honestly support and defend before the people. After the resolutions had been adopted, after the platform had been made, after the candidate had been nominated, or about the time he was nominated, after the books were closed, that candidate by wire made, without authority, what he called and his friends called "an addition to the Democratic platform." And yet Mr. Bryan went forth in that campaign and made the best fight that he was capable of in support of that ticket.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And Judge Parker thanked him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He fulfilled his pledge and received the thanks of Judge Parker during or near the close of that campaign. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. I did not understand the gentleman to answer my question about the relative vote for Bryan in Nebraska in 1896 and in 1900.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I assure the gentleman from Ohio that I am not afraid to answer the question.

Mr. KEIFER. You can answer it in a word.

Mr. WEISSE. If the gentleman wants those figures I will go into the House Library and get them in a minute and take that load off the gentleman's hands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Unfortunately I have not before me the figures for both years. I find that Bryan polled 114,000 votes in the year 1900, which was the year of his second campaign, and four years later Judge Parker polled 51,800 votes.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrupt the gentleman just a moment, in reference to Bryan's work for the ticket that was nominated in St. Louis.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MACON. I desire to state that he did noble work after that convention adjourned, notwithstanding the fact that every little two-by-four would-be statesmen in that convention had tried to drive him out of the party.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes. I think the gentleman from Arkansas is eminently correct in that. And now, as I have been interrupted by the distinguished ex-Speaker and Representative from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], I want to give him some figures on Ohio.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman from Nebraska permit me just a moment? The question asked by the gentleman from Ohio as to whether or not Judge Parker impugned the good faith of Bryan would seem to lead to the inference that Bryan did not support him loyally in the campaign. Judge Parker did not intimate such a thing.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; he did not. He simply said that Mr. Bryan before Parker's nomination had made speeches or statements which were used afterwards by Parker's enemies to hurt him, but he in no way implied that Bryan did not support him after he was nominated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not also a fact that while he was making his great campaign for Parker in Indiana that Judge Parker wired him and thanked him for his brilliant and magnificent defense of him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I remember that distinctly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I desire to refer to the State from which my distinguished interlocutor [Mr. KEIFER] comes. Ohio is put in the Republican column, as beyond all doubt, by General Grosvenor, and put there as more impossible for Bryan than for any other candidate. Yet what are the facts? They are that Bryan polled more votes in Ohio than any Democratic candidate before or since. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Does that look as though Bryanism is a bane on the Democracy of Ohio? Or may that great Bryan strength in Ohio possibly afford a suggestion of the motive for the disinterested nonpartisan advice of General Grosvenor and other eminent Republicans and assistant Republicans who have advised the Democrats not to nominate Bryan? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Bryan polled 130,000 more votes in Ohio in 1900 in a campaign against Ohio's favorite son, who was then President of the United States—he polled 130,000 more votes than Parker did four years later without an Ohio candidate against him. Does that show Bryan weak or strong in Ohio? And when we come finally to the State of New York, from which Judge Parker hails, we find that Bryan polled substantially in 1900 as many votes as Parker did in 1904, and that the majority against Bryan in that State was not so great as against Parker by some 32,000 votes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I rarely make a political speech, and I have only been moved to do it on this occasion because there has seemed to me to be a systematic conspiracy in high places, among Republicans and assistant Republicans, posing sometimes as the friend of the Democratic party, to misrepresent and distort the facts. I have brought here some of the figures of the campaigns of our recent experience to demonstrate that Bryanism rather than being the bane of the Democratic party is its strength at present and its hope of the future. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me I wish to read as a part of my remarks an article entitled "The fundamental cause of hard times," taken from The Public.

[The Public. Louis F. Post, editor; Alice Thatcher Post, managing editor; Chicago, Saturday, January 11, 1908.]

THE FUNDAMENTAL CAUSE OF HARD TIMES.

SHORTAGE OF MONEY.

Financiers explain the present commercial disorder, about which there is so much optimism and so little hope, as a result of insufficient money. But this explanation is not in alignment with the facts. Money is more plentiful than it has been for many years; and though it has been hoarded, the hoarding did not begin until the banks suspended cash payments. Moreover, the free use of checks and other substitutes for money has practically removed all the barriers to normal trade which could by any possibility be attributed to hoarding or to money scarcity from any other cause. Evidently a more radical explanation is necessary than shortage of money.

LOSS OF CONFIDENCE.

The "man in the street" is nearer right when he refers owlishly to "loss of confidence." His explanation is at least as good as that of the medical men who account for deaths by "heart failure." But as they seek the curable causes of such deaths back of their climax in heart failure, so must the curable causes of hard times be sought back of their climax in "loss of confidence."

If we make this search, we shall find that the loss of confidence is in speculative values. So long as confidence in speculative values persists, we have what we are pleased to call "prosperity;" but when the limit of confidence is reached, the fever of speculation subsides and the chill of hard times sets in. Hard times are due to loss of confidence in speculative values.

But speculative values of what?

Of different kinds of commodities, to be sure; but always of commodities possessing two market characteristics—intense demand and monopolized supply.

No speculative value can long attach to anything which is not an object of general and intense desire, nor then unless the supply is so monopolized that it does not readily respond to demand. If, on the one hand, the desire were neither intense nor general, prices couldn't rise high enough for a disastrous collapse, for demand would begin to shrink as soon as prices began to expand, and this would operate as a check upon further price expansion. If, on the other hand, the intensely desired commodity were not monopolized, its price could not rise high enough for a disastrous collapse, for supply would then keep pace with demand, and this also would operate as a check upon price expansion. But when desire is intense enough to continue to enhance demand, and monopoly is strong enough to restrict supply, prices tend to rise to the limit of confidence, and thereupon there set in those speculations which end in a crash as soon as loss of confidence in higher values becomes a factor in the market.

When that crash comes, the toppling over of the speculative structure wrecks legitimate industry also, because speculative business and legitimate business are so intimately related that any general paralysis of speculation tends to paralyze the whole commercial system.

THE TULIP CRAZE AS AN EXEMPLIFICATION.

In the history of the noted tulip craze of Holland, about the middle of the seventeenth century, may be found a simple and impressive exemplification of the principle suggested above.

Desire had been widespread among the well-to-do classes for a root that produced a peculiar flower. At this stage the craze was not unlike those society fads of our own time over extraordinary chrysanthemums and orchids. But unlike these modern flower manias, the tulip craze of Holland spread beyond the leisure classes. It grew from a mere class fad into a commercial speculation. So far did it invade the domain of commerce that as many as nine exchanges were established exclusively to deal in rare tulip bulbs as we deal in these days in grain and stocks. Here was clearly present that intense general desire which, if the commodity desired be monopolized, causes the speculation that ends in general disaster. Although the tulip bulb was not an absolute monopoly, it was monopolized in great degree through the ownership of choice varieties and specimens, and this brought about the conditions of disaster—increasing general demand, monopoly of supply, speculative mania, collapse, depression.

While the craze lasted the prices of tulip bulbs of special varieties ran up into the thousands of dollars, and titles to them were distributed in undivided interests, like titles to real estate or turnpikes or canals or railroads or industrial trusts in later times. These interests were sold "short" and bought "long," and the shares in them were hypothecated as collateral for loans.

Yet the bulbs had no very great real value. Their values were almost wholly speculative. That is, they brought high prices on 'change because there was confidence in a continued desire or demand for them and in a continued monopoly of the supply.

So long as confidence in those two conditions prevailed, confidence in the speculative values of tulip bulbs held strong and prices soared. Everybody who had an interest in tulip bulbs, or who was a tulip-bulb lawyer (and there were many such), or was a broker or dealer in tulip-bulb interests in any way, thought he was getting rich. Living in an era of "abounding prosperity," whether he used those words or not, not for worlds would he have disturbed confidence by "calamity howling" or "knocking." These fictitiously rich people spent money freely. They invested with the self-satisfied air of your successful business man before his fall. They borrowed one another's credit, and they lent their own. They figured as men of financial weight. They lived expensively. And with the fatuity of the optimistic man of affairs in all ages they expected this golden era to last forever.

All went well enough while confidence in the continued speculative value of tulip bulbs lasted, but after a while confidence began to wane. At first only the more cautious speculators lost confidence. No doubt they kept their feelings to themselves. Probably they continued to adjure everybody, in classic Dutch, never to "knock" but always to "boost." But they unloaded their own tulip-bulb interests and they bought no more.

Of course, the tulip market soon began to sag, and then it sagged more and more, as other and still other optimists of the prudent sort gradually unloaded their tulip interests. And after the market had sagged a while it crashed.

Do we need to be told what happened then to the confiding people who had held to their tulip bulbs while the more prudent optimists, singing pæans to prosperity, were unloading, or to those upon whom these unloaded? Can we not imagine the calamities that engulfed all who had heavy investments in tulip-bulb interests—all who had pledged tulip-bulb interests as collateral and were loaded down with debt for which they had little else than tulip-bulb interests to show? Can we not realize the situation of the money lenders who held tulip-bulb collateral at, say, 60 per cent of the market value, and of the tradesmen and the workers generally who had claims upon "busted" tulip-bulb nabobs for goods supplied or houses built or service rendered?

Many a Dutch home was desolated and doubtless many a placid Dutchman bewailed "the money famine." But if they were living now, those Dutchmen, they would see, as we can, that the true cause of their disaster was not scarcity of money, but general loss of confidence in the speculative values of tulip bulbs.

LESSON OF THE TULIP CRAZE.

Haven't we had commercial crises since, without tulip crazes? Certainly. But we have had none without the precise conditions, essentially, of the tulip craze. In them all there has been a period of speculation in one or more objects of intense desire, the supply of which has been monopolized; and this speculation has been so general and so intimately related to legitimate business that when the speculative values have collapsed the entire commercial system has suffered from the shock.

The things that acquire speculative value in greater or less degree according to expected demand, and to the obstacles thrust in the way of supply, include railroads, canals, street cars, maritime privileges, trading privileges, telephone and telegraph privileges, land monopolies of various kinds, and so on. Indeed, land monopoly is usually the controlling factor in all. Don't railroads, canals, turnpikes, telephones, telegraphs, and street cars depend upon monopolies of rights of way over the land? and are not maritime and trading and all other seagoing privileges usually valueless unless connected in some way with land monopoly? The only great exceptions, perhaps, are patent rights—using that term inclusively. These may be exclusive rights to use inventions, as under our patent laws; to manufacture money, as under our banking laws; or to manufacture or sell certain commodities, as under the monopoly régime of the "good Queen Bess." Even these patent privileges are so associated in use with landed monopolies that under our system of free trade in land their speculative values attach very largely to land monopoly. So great is that effect, and so much larger are the speculative interests in land monopoly than in any other kind, that it may be fairly said that the speculative values which by collapsing produce industrial depressions, are the speculative values of land monopoly. These are the tulip-bulb values of modern speculation.

LESSON OF THE SOUTH SEA BUBBLES.

The two most noted commercial crises in Europe after the tulip craze were obviously caused by collapse of the speculative values of land monopoly. We allude to the "South Sea bubble" and the "Mississippi scheme." Both were South Sea bubbles; that is, both were collapsed speculations in the American hinterland beyond the Mississippi River, which had been supposed to extend to the South Seas. The "Mississippi scheme," engineered by John Law, was French; the "South Sea bubble" was a British imitation. Each was at its height, however, and each came to grief, at about the same time—1719 to 1720.

Speculation in the stock of the "Mississippi scheme" had reached 610 to 1 in August, 1719, and by April, 1720, it was at 2,050 to 1. Why? Because in 1719 the company had been granted by France a monopoly of the trade of the French possessions beyond seas, including especially the Mississippi country of North America. It was like a street franchise or a railroad grant of the present time, or a turnpike or canal franchise or an anthracite coal deposit a hundred years or so ago. Everybody wanted a chance in this scheme of getting something for nothing.

After reaching 2,050 to 1 the stock collapsed even more rapidly than it had expanded. Why was that? Financial historians of one school say it was because paper money issued by the company came tumbling in for redemption in specie; financial historians of another school say it was because the paper money had unfortunately been made redeemable in specie. But the crucial point is why this money came tumbling in for redemption at all.

Loss of confidence? To be sure. But loss of confidence in what?

There is but one answer that the facts will sustain. It was loss of confidence in the speculative value of exclusive rights to exploit the producing and trading opportunities of the French landed possessions over seas.

The "South Sea bubble" of England was a doublet to the "Mississippi scheme" of France. The South Sea Company had a monopoly of the South Sea trade, and the speculative value of its stock ran up rapidly to 1,000 to 1. Why? Evidently because of confidence in the great value of the privilege of monopolizing the trade and developing the productive opportunities of the hinterland of North America. The stock would doubtless have gone higher if some of the insiders—the British Pierpont Morgans of that era—hadn't lost confidence early and begun to unload upon an optimistic public. In a few days, at any rate, this stock had fallen from 1,000 to 1, down to 135, and then to nothing, bringing on a tremendous commercial crash.

Why?

Evidently from loss of confidence in the speculative value of those monopolized privileges in the North American hinterland, which had linked themselves in the market with legitimate business.

THE FIRST AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

The same relation of confidence in the speculative values of landed privileges to industrial depressions is manifest in the historic crises of the United States, of which there have been six since the Revolutionary war, the present being the seventh. The first was from 1784 until 1790.

There had been great prosperity in the colonies during the latter part of the colonial period; and though times were hard during the Revolution, this was accounted as one of the hardships of war. But the expectations of good times with peace were disappointed, and 1784 is noted as a black-letter year in the period of commercial distress that lasted in the nineties.

The common explanation, then as now, and as in every intermediate depression, was scarcity of money. There was naturally, therefore, a cry for more money; and much paper money was issued, and many were the laws which were passed to force its circulation. An old pamphleteer of the time, Pelatiah Webster, declared that the scarcity was not of money, but of confidence in securities. He was doubtless right. The fact that lands were sold for half their value, as the historians tell us, is far more significant of a period of speculative land values in anticipation of the good times to come with peace, than of scarcity of money.

THE SECOND AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

Between the first and the second industrial depression in this country there was an interval of nearly twenty years—from about 1791 to about 1809. This interval was famous for prosperity. It was also notable for those phenomena of speculation that were characteristic of the tulip mania and of the South Sea bubbles. Western colonization stimulated speculation in Western lands. The discovery of anthracite coal deposits brought on speculation in mining stock. Textile manufacture enhanced the speculative value of material-producing land everywhere within reasonable reach, and by building up factory towns it gave an impulse to urban land values. Canal companies, bridge companies, turnpike companies, land companies were chartered, all with grants of privileges for levying tribute. And so confident were the public that these monopoly privileges would be extraordinarily profitable, that an era of wild investment set in, precisely the same in principle as that of the tulip bulbs and those of the South Sea trade. For a long time everyone thought he was getting rich. But about the middle of the first decade of the new century confidence in these speculative values was checked, and by 1809 the boom had burst.

The twenty years of "bounding prosperity" were now succeeded by fifteen of hard times throughout the East, relieved in the West by a brief interval of tulip-bulb prosperity. The rush of migration westward, due to hard times in the East, had been followed by a fever of speculation in Western lands; and when this incidental or intermediate boom collapsed, as collapse it had to, it collapsed for the same reason that the tulip craze had, for the same reason that the Mississippi and the South Sea bubbles had, for the same reason that the boom from 1791 to 1809 had—from loss of confidence in speculative values. For the most part, if not altogether, these Western values were land values. Land went down in value with a rush in 1819—a fourth, a third, a half.

The collapse was attributed, as usual, to financial derangements, but isn't it plain that it must have been due to loss of confidence in land speculation?

After land values all over the country had in that fateful year reached the lower levels upon which profitable production was possible, signs of general revival were visible, and in a few years the long-drawn-out depression of 1809–1824, the second of our national history, with its short speculative diversion in the West, had come to an end.

THE THIRD AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

Hardly were the improved conditions following the second depression fairly realized than they began to generate anew the speculative mania which only could and in due time did in fact, produce the third depression, that of 1837–1842.

Speculation in land values was again evident as early as 1826, about the time the Erie Canal had connected the Great Lakes with the sea. Railroad building began later to furnish opportunities for speculation in transportation monopoly in place of the canal and bridge stocks of the early part of the previous era of prosperity. In 1830 there were only 36 miles of railroad in the country, but by 1831 a mania for railroad building had spread throughout the nation, and speculation in railroads as well as in town lots and public lands was under full headway. Again we were in boom times. Again there was "bounding prosperity." But again it was of the tulip-bulb kind, and signs of collapse were in the commercial sky in 1833 and 1834, just as they were last spring and last summer.

When the inevitable crash of 1837 came, it was attributed by the financiers and their dupes to Jackson's circular requiring specie payments for public lands, much as the present crash is attributed by financiers and their dupes to Roosevelt's war upon big business. But Jackson's specie circular, if it caused the crash in any sense at all, caused it only as a pin prick may cause the collapse of a bladder already blown to the bursting point, caused it as the demand for specie caused the collapse of the Mississippi scheme already expanded by speculation to a point beyond which confidence could not go.

That the buying of public lands had risen from $4,887,000,000 in 1834 to $24,000,000,000 in 1836 is hint enough of the heights which land speculation must have reached. Railroad building had risen from 36 miles in 1830 to 1,273 in 1836, which gives a hint of the probable speculation in railroad stocks and in the lands of the territory which the "iron horse" was opening up.

Edward M. Shepard thus describes the phenomena in his Martin Van Buren:

"It did not seem necessary to create wealth by labor; the treasures lay ready for whomever should first reach the doors of the treasure houses. To make easy the routes to El Dorado of prairies and river bottoms was the quickest way to wealth. Roads, canals, river improvements, preceded, attended, followed these sudden settlements, this vast and jubilant movement of population. There was an extraordinary growth of 'internal improvements.' In his message of 1831, Jackson rejoiced at the high wages earned by laborers in the construction of these works, which he truly said were 'extending with unprecedented rapidity.' * * * If new lands at the West could be made accessible by internal improvements, the succession of seedtime and harvest had for a dozen years seemed no more certain than that the value of those lands would at once increase prodigiously. So the American people, with one consent, gave themselves to an amazing extravagance of land speculation. * * * Everybody thought himself richer and his labor worth more. * * * Lands near the cities and villages of the State [New York] had risen several hundred per cent in value, and were sold not to be occupied by the buyers but to be sold again at higher prices."

This speculation had to have its end, as had the tulip craze and the South Sea bubbles in Europe, and the boom period from 1791 to 1809 in this country, and for the same reason—loss of confidence in the continuance of speculative values. The end came in 1837, and what Mr. Shepard wrote of it in his Martin Van Buren, half a century later and twenty years ago, applies with wonderful exactness to conditions now. "Nature's vital and often hidden truth," he wrote, "that value depends upon labor, could no longer be kept secret by a few wise men. The suspicion soon arose that there was not real and available value to meet the demands of nominal value. The suspicion was soon bruited among the less as well as the more wary. * * * To many the crisis seemed merely a financial or even a great banking episode. Many friends of the Administration loudly cried that the disaster arose from the treachery of the banks in suspending. Many of its enemies saw only the normal fruit of administrative blunders, first in recklessness, and the last in heartless indifference. To most Americans, whatever their differences, the explanation of this profound and lasting disturbance seemed to lie in the machinery of finance, rather than in the deeper facts of the physical wealth and power of the trading classes."

As Mr. Shepard goes on to explain with considerable definiteness, these deeper facts could be generalized as loss of confidence in speculative land values.

THE FOURTH AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

Like thunder from a clear sky came the panic of 1857, the fourth in the American series of great depressions. It was heralded by the failure of one of the oldest banking institutions in the country—the Ohio Life Insurance and Trust Company—an institution which had weathered the destructive storm of 1837. But the same conditions that made the depression of 1837 inevitable had been gathering below the financial horizon long before the demoralizing thunderburst of 1857.

The industrial situation had been improving since 1842. Railroad building had greatly increased, railroad rights of way, and the land, both agricultural and urban, which they served grew in value; gold fields were discovered, which gave prodigious opportunities to the adventurous for getting easy money; free trade had stimulated commerce with all the world. As a result speculation in land values of various kinds, from railroad lines and mining stocks to city lots, had become intense. If speculation was not so spectacular as in the period preceding the panic of 1837, it was nevertheless more widespread as to territory and more general as to population; and by 1857 it had reached a point at which confidence in speculative values was about exhausted. The real estate markets of the cities tell the story. In Chicago, for instance, a typical building site, worth $45,000 in 1856—its highest point until then—fell to $35,000 in 1857, and was down to $28,000 in 1861, after which it rose again. With the beginning of the civil war the depression of 1857 passed away, except at the South. Limited to its own resources, the South had no opportunity to recover industrially so long as the war lasted; but at the North the war itself revived industrial opportunities.

THE FIFTH AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

The activities which stimulated speculation at the North during the civil war extended over the nation when peace had come, and by 1873 conditions were similar to those that Mr. Shepard describes as having preceded the panic of 1837. Railroad stocks, mining stocks, and lands of every kind were in demand for reselling at a profit, and speculative values rose enormously. Land in Chicago was higher than it had ever been and higher than it got to be again until in the eighties. This was true also of New York and doubtless of all the other large cities and most of the towns. And landed interests were mortgaged and again mortgaged and sometimes mortgaged again and even again. Everybody was once more getting rich without working.

Until 1873 confidence in the continuance of speculative values was seemingly inexhaustible. But it had in fact been exhausted, and before the year was gone it had been lost. When Jay Cooke failed the whole speculative house of cards began to tumble and a period of hard times set in which lasted nearly ten years.

THE SIXTH AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

This period of hard times, the sixth in the weary series, a period well remembered yet for its economic suffering and terrors, was, like all the others, preceded by an era of confidence in the speculative values of land and caused by loss of that confidence.

Suburban lots had once more been platted and sold at high prices, to be again sold at higher prices. Once more railroad stocks, which represent land monopoly in some of its most important phases, and many other stocks which represent it in more or less important phases, had become the tulip bulbs of another speculative generation. Again the prices of these monopoly privileges had expanded to the bursting point. Again there was a pin prick through some disarrangement of the financial machinery. Again there was a collapse and a long period of industrial distress—from 1893 to 1898.

Confidence had been excited in the speculative value of a monopolized object of general and intense desire. So long as this confidence lasted, everything seemed to boom; but when this confidence was lost, the business structure toppled. It was the tulip-bulb experience over again, but with real land monopoly instead of imaginary tulip-bulb monopoly as the subject of the craze—with land monopoly represented in building sites, in mining stocks, in railway franchises, and in consolidations that were based no more upon patents for inventions than upon rights to mineral and other landed opportunities.

THE SEVENTH AMERICAN DEPRESSION.

And so is it again to-day.

A year ago everyone "who was anyone," thought he was getting rich. Times were as flush in the United States as they had been in Holland at the height of the tulip craze, as they had been in France at the height of the Mississippi venture, as they had been in England at the height of the South Sea speculation, as they had been in the United States just before every previous depression, from the first to the sixth. Speculation was rife; monopolies were rising in value; land in promising situations invited investment at more than it was worth for use; fortunes were turned over and over in Wall street, where speculative interests in land have found their readiest market in the form of corporation stocks; business was lively at small profits for managers and a "living wage" for workers; and the happy-go-lucky optimist beamed.

But confidence began to sag here and there. Mr. Morgan's was probably the first to go, for he made no investments after 1906, but turned millions of his interests into gold and into demand loans tightly secured. Gradually the word spread that personal expenditures were falling off, that collections were "hard," that some investments were not so good as they had been. Then there came a flurry, a puff of wind on the summer seas of finance, which carried down some business craft and warned others to trim sail. That was in August. In October the storm broke.

When the banks, for no reason apparent to most business men, stopped cash payments, it was clear enough to all but the fatuous or the crooked that the depression was here. The banks did not close for lack of money. It was for lack of confidence in the value of the securities they held as collateral, securities which for the most part were titles in some form to speculative interests in some kind of land. They were in the plight of those money lenders of Amsterdam who had lent on the security of interests in tulip bulbs at 60 per cent of market value, and now saw tulip values receding.

There may be fluctuations before the worst comes, but it is all too evident that we have entered upon one of those periodical depressions of which the tulip craze is a whimsical instance and the South Sea bubbles were primitive examples, and which in this country may be catalogued as the depressions of 1784–1790, 1809–1819, 1837–1842, 1857–1862, 1873–1882, 1893–1898, and 1907–?—the final date of the last being as yet a secret of the industrial fates.

THE LESSON OF IT ALL.

Without waiting for the answer the fates may have to give, is there no lesson to learn from what we of this country have already experienced? How long shall we go on permitting that monopoly of our planet which furnishes the basis for the speculation which, cycle by cycle, gives us a period of unwholesome investment followed by one of deadly depression? How long shall we fasten our minds upon the surface symptoms of these periods with microscopic attention, while ignoring altogether their evident and only slightly hidden cause?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to my colleague from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, in the best of good nature I take the floor for a moment or two. We have witnessed an extraordinary condition of mind among the distinguished Democratic Members on the other side of the House this evening. Uniformly they have clapped their hands and cheered when the distinguished Member who has just been on the floor has demonstrated that in the election of 1904 the great Judge Parker, of New York, had run substantially behind Mr. Bryan in former elections, and especially did they cheer when they found that he had run behind very materially in Bryan's own State of Nebraska.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman know why they applauded?

Mr. KEIFER. I am satisfied with the fact that you are cheering, and cheering because your candidate of 1904 was not able to get as many votes as did your candidate in 1896.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say to the gentleman that it was because it answered the argument of those now who want us to sidetrack the great commoner of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; but it seems that in the State of Nebraska in 1900, where there was a full and fair canvass, while they appealed to the people to sustain him because he was a son of the State, he was beaten by something over or about 10,000 votes in a fair election, and that is a sufficient answer to the suggestion that came from the other side.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Does the gentleman not think that perhaps you gentlemen on the other side have enough to look after to select your own nominee, without attempting to select our candidate? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. I appreciate that remark, and I will allow the gentleman to make his speech in his own time. It won't take two people to make the little speech that I want to make. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I only want to say that I read in the daily press that Mr. FORAKER stated that the President of the United States was prostituting the selection of officials under the Federal Government for the purpose of beating him out of the State of Ohio and giving it to Taft. Is that true or false? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KEIFER. I am not responsible for what the gentleman reads in a newspaper or what Mr. FORAKER may say. Allow me to say that I want to remind the Democrats that when they cast the great votes for their now champion in 1896 and 1900 they were trying to force the country into free silver. I suppose now if they follow Bryan they will try to force on the country the idea that the Federal and State governments should own the railroads and public corporations, unless that is repudiated by him. There was a singular thing happened in the Democratic national convention in St. Louis in 1904.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. KEIFER. In a moment. I wish to finish this statement first. In 1904 the distinguished leader [Mr. WILLIAMS] of the Democratic party on the other side of this House made an opening speech and pronounced the question of free silver dead, and said that we had reached the gold standard in this country.

Mr. HARDY. Now, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KEIFER. After that Mr. Littleton, of New York, followed up in his nominating speech with the same declaration, saying that the silver question was settled, and through Divine Providence. Then what followed? The committee on resolutions appointed at that convention, with Mr. Bryan amongst them, was in session all night of the 7th of July, and in the morning reported a resolution declaring that the silver question was first and foremost and unsettled, and that the gold standard was not established, and reported that to the convention and that was adopted, and then what followed?

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KEIFER. After the convention had followed Mr. Bryan with the free-silver platform and a declaration that the money question was not settled, its candidate, Judge Parker, of New York, sent to the convention, or to a member of the convention, Mr. Sheehan, this telegram:

> I regard the gold standard as firmly and irrevocably established, and shall act accordingly if the act of the convention to-day shall be ratified by the people. As the platform is silent on the subject, my views should be known to the convention, and if it be proved to be unsatisfactory to the majority, I request you to decline the nomination for me so that another man may be nominated before adjournment.

When this was read to the convention they bowed their heads and said to Mr. Bryan: "You are licked on your old question of free silver, and we were right in the beginning; the gold question is settled, and we will accept Judge Parker as our candidate." Now, that was the situation in which you put the poor old judge from New York and then undertook to elect him President of the United States, and it was for that reason that Judge Parker in his recent interview undertook to say that Mr. Bryan had not acted in good faith toward him or the result might have been different. Now, what is the question of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HARDY. I wanted to ask the gentleman if your President, at the other end of the Avenue, did not come about as near talking about the Government having to own the railroads if you did not control them as Mr. Bryan ever did?

Mr. KEIFER. I don't know. If the gentleman knows more than I do on that subject, I will take his testimony. I have arisen only to remind the gentlemen on the other side of this peculiar situation——

Mr. HARDY. Didn't your President McKinley wabble on the silver question about as much as anybody else?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no. I am ready to defend that position, because I think I followed along pretty close beside him in what you call the wabbling.

Mr. HARDY. Did you ever put a gold plank in your platform until after——

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I am not going to go into a discussion——

Mr. ANSBERRY rose.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, let me finish my sentence first. One at a time.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question when he has finished.

Mr. KEIFER. Our President, our candidate for President, is not going around in the different States trying to boss legislative bodies and dictating as to whom they shall vote for for Senator.

Mr. HARDY. The question is, Didn't you stand for free silver up to 1896?

Mr. KEIFER. Who?

Mr. HARDY. The Republican party.

Mr. KEIFER. No.

Mr. HARDY. In 1888 didn't you have it in your platform?

Mr. KEIFER. No.

Mr. HARDY. Did you ever come out for a gold-standard plank?

Mr. KEIFER. We passed the act (March 4, 1900) fixing the gold standard, and have stood by it ever since. In 1896 we repudiated the old theory of free silver, and we never supported it in the sense in which the gentleman speaks. We did favor the utilization of silver to the extent that we could make a silver dollar as good as a gold dollar, and we have kept that promise up to the present hour. [Applause on the Republican side.] A silver dollar or a paper dollar is as good as a gold dollar anywhere in the United States to-day, in spite of the Democratic party. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask my distinguished fellow-Congressman from the great State of Ohio——

Mr. KEIFER. Have you got a Bible there?

Mr. ANSBERRY. No; I have the Republican bible—your platform of 1896.

Mr. KEIFER. Go ahead, it is all right.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I will ask you with reference to the question the gentleman just asked you, when you changed your position on the money question, if your platform in 1896 did not contain this plank, and if you then did not support this plank——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I supported it whatever it was. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes' time to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEIFER. I will accept it because these gentlemen desire to talk.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio this question in reference to this plank:

The currency question. The Republican party is unswervingly for sound money—

[Applause on the Republican side.]

It caused the enactment of the law providing for the resumption of specie payments in 1879. Since that time every dollar has been as good as gold—

[Applause on the Republican side.]

We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency—

[Applause on the Republican side.]

or to impair our credit. We are therefore opposed to the free coinage of silver—

[Applause on the Republican side.]

except by international agreement—with the leading commercial nations of the world. We pledge ourselves to promote, and until such agreement can be obtained, the existing gold standard.

[Cries of "Good!"]

[Cries of "Good!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman read the Democratic platform of the same year and see whether the Democratic side will applaud it as we have applauded ours?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Allow me to finish my question——

Mr. KEIFER. I know, but you must not take up all of my time.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Are you in favor of asset currency or rag money?

Mr. KEIFER. The man wants to know whether I am in favor of asset currency. Has that anything to do with the question I am discussing? I believe not. Let me say one word here. This platform that has just been read is good Republican doctrine to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.] If all the great commercial nations of the world, such as England, France, Germany, and other countries, would go to a silver basis with gold, the United States would go there to-day. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] seemed to have some hesitation about giving a comparison of the Bryan vote in 1900 as compared with 1896. I have had the curiosity to look it up, and I find in 1896 Bryan carried Nebraska by a plurality of 13,576. In 1900 McKinley carried Nebraska by 8,222. [Applause on the Republican side.] In 1904 Roosevelt carried it by 86,682, and if the percentage keeps increasing the candidate this year of the Republican party will carry it by about 100,000. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to add we have some evidence that is of a more recent date of the disintegration of the great Bryanite-Democratic party by the election down in the State of Kentucky. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14766, the urgent deficency bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KIMBALL was granted leave of absence of one week, on account of important business.

BILLS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following bills, which were read a first and second time and, with the accompanying reports, were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

H. R. 12420. A bill to extend immediate transportation privileges to the subport of Alburg, in the customs collection district of Vermont.

H. R. 9217. A bill amending sections 2533 and 2534 of Revised Statutes, so as to change the name of the Fairfield collection district.

H. R. 9218. A bill amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes."

H. R. 558. A bill to extend to the port of Chattanooga, Tenn., the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, in pursuance to the order previously made, the House (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned until Monday at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Charles S. Von Hoffen, administrator of estate of Henry Von Hoffen, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a copy of a letter from the chief of the Second Division, General Staff Corps, a report of documents distributed by the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907—to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named as follows:

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11776) for the opening of Jefferson and Fifth streets NW., District of Columbia, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 358), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S.

2872) to amend an act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 366), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13430) to authorize the Chicago, Indianapolis and Louisville Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the city of Hammond, Ind., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 359), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14032) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Merrimac River at Tyngs Island, Mass., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 360), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14040) to authorize the county of Ashley, State of Arkansas, and her citizens, to wit, S. R. Bulloch, Z. T. Hedges, and others to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 361), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BRANTLEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14282) to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 365), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4763) transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired to the active list of the Navy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 362), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 3) requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the amount of money deposited in national banks, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 363), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

He also, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 2) requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount of money deposited in national banks in New York, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 364), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10591) granting a pension to James Burke—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12706) granting a pension to William Kahn—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14732) granting a pension to William S. Sykes—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14240) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and cancel the allotment of William Jondron, Yankton Sioux allottee, should it prove to be fictitious—Committee on the Public Lands discharged, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 2892) for the relief of the estate of F. Z. Tucker, deceased—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 2897) paying certain claims of G. W. Howland—Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 8629) granting a pension to David T. Kirby—Committee on Naval Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 2176) granting a pension to Lottie B. Galleher—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 14837) granting an increase of pension to William P. Wade—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 15105) to provide campaign badges for officers, enlisted men, sailors, or marines who served honorably in the Spanish, Philippine, or China campaigns, and who were not in the United States service on January 11, 1905—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PATTERSON: A bill (H. R. 15106) to establish in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be known as the Bureau of Public Highways, and to provide for national aid in the improvement of the public roads—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOBSON: A bill (H. R. 15107) to authorize the attendance of five midshipmen from the Philippine Islands at the United States Naval Academy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15108) to authorize the attendance of five cadets from the Philippine Islands and one from Porto Rico at the United States Military Academy—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMMOND: A bill (H. R. 15109) for the erection of a public building at New Ulm, Minn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 15110) providing for purchase of site and erection of public building at Millen, Ga.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 15111) to authorize the purchase of lands and buildings for the consular establishments in China, Japan, and Korea—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 15112) authorizing the extension of Rock Creek drive, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RHINOCK: A bill (H. R. 15113) for the relief of tobacco growers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. POWERS: A bill (H. R. 15114) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Old Town, in the State of Maine—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. COCKS of New York: A bill (H. R. 15115) to provide for the distribution of the Annotated Statutes and Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ACHESON: A bill (H. R. 15116) to forbid the transmission through the United States mail of any newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any intoxicating liquors—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GAINES of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 15117) to allow the transfer of carriers from rural to city and from city to rural postal-delivery service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 15118) to establish a light station on Duck Island, Isles of Shoals, State of Maine—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ELLIS of Oregon: A bill (H. R. 15119) to extend the time for reclaiming and making final proof of reclamation upon desert-land entries in Umatilla County, State of Oregon—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BEDE: A bill (H. R. 15120) providing for the drainage and reclamation of swamp and overflow lands in the State of Minnesota—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15121) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter of the first class for service in the waters of Lake Superior—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15122) for construction of additional light-house districts—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 15123) to prohibit the giving to or receipt by public officers under the Constitution or laws of the United States of any free frank or privilege for the transmission of messages by telegraph or telephone, to prevent discriminations in interstate telegraph and telephone rates, and fixing requirements governing the receipt and preservation of such messages—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] called up his resolution, No. 74, with regard to the case of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company v. John Mitchell last week and asked that a copy of the bill of complaint in that case and the restraining order be printed as a Senate document I objected, because, as I said at the time, I wished to have a statement read and made a part of the papers which the Senator from Texas asked to have printed. But I was unable to do so, because the hour of 2 o'clock was near at hand when the unfinished business would come before the Senate, preventing me from having the statement read, as I desired. In fact, there was not over a minute and a half left, and it was utterly impossible to submit the statement in that time.

I know nothing whatever about the matter, and regard it only fair and just that all the facts concerning the pendency of the case and action thereon should be placed in the RECORD. I made this clear to the Senate when the matter was up day before yesterday, when I said:

I will ask the Senator [Mr. CULBERSON]—

This is my statement of last week—

I will ask the Senator [Mr. CULBERSON] if he is not willing to allow the matter to go over until we may get the opinion of the judge with it, if it has been printed. I have no objection to the printing of the papers to which the Senator referred, but I think they ought all to be printed together.

I have ascertained since the matter was first presented that there was no opinion of the court filed. The facts, as I am advised by the judge of the court, are as contained in the statement which I hold in my hand.

As I have said before, the matter is one in which I have no interest whatever and no knowledge except as disclosed by the papers submitted by the Senator from Texas and contained in the statement which I wish to present to the Senate. I do not desire to prevent the fullest proper consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas. My only purpose, as I have heretofore said, is to let the facts pertaining to the matter be put in the RECORD in connection with each other so that they may all be readily accessible and fully understood.

I got the judge over the long-distance telephone, and his statement, as near as I could take it down, I now submit:

In the case of Hitchman Coal and Coke Company v. John Mitchell et al.

The following statement was received by me last night from Judge Dayton, over the telephone, from Parkersburg, where he is now holding court:

"The bill in that case, supported by numerous affidavits, was presented to me in October, 1907, and, as usually is done, I granted a hearing upon it, with a preliminary or temporary restraining order. This hearing I set down for the first day of this term here, commencing on the 14th of this month. This was the first day of the first regular term to be held after the day the bill was presented.

"On the 14th, when the hearing was called, the defendants appeared for the first time, and asked for a continuance of the hearing, in order to allow them time to file answers and counter affidavits. I granted this motion, and then the attorneys on both sides consulted and agreed that the continuance should be to March 18 next. There, of course, has been no opinion rendered by me, because there has been no hearing of the matter. No injunction has been granted; only a temporary restraining order until the hearing, which, under our practice here, is granted in course if a prima facie case is presented by the bill."

Now, Mr. President, I ask that this statement of mine and the telephonic communication of Judge Dayton follow the papers presented by the Senator from Texas last week.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not exactly understand the request of the Senator from West Virginia. Of course, I have no objection to his statement being printed, as I said when the matter arose. The trouble about it was that the Senator was under the impression that there might have been an opinion rendered. He was not certain about it. I stated that if any opinion had been rendered I would be glad to have it, because it was an extraordinary order which had been entered, and I thought it well to have some substantiation from the judge, if there could be any. The Senator now asks that the statement he presents shall follow the papers which I presented the other day. Do I understand him to ask that a copy of the bill of complaint and restraining order be printed in the RECORD and that the statement which he has presented shall follow those two papers?

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that the papers the Senator presented last week appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. They are in the RECORD.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not in the RECORD?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; here they are.

Mr. SCOTT. The papers are in the RECORD.

Mr. CULBERSON. They may have been printed in the RECORD, though I did not ask that, and of course I may be mistaken about that, but they are printed in the form of a resolution. I resorted to this method of getting the matter printed for the information of the Senators because there were so many objections on the other side of the Chamber to my request to print them as a Senate document. As far as I know, they have not been printed in the RECORD; they have not been printed as a Senate document, but have been printed in the form of Senate resolution No. 81.

If the Senator from West Virginia makes the request that the preamble and resolution be printed in the RECORD and the papers submitted by him follow, I have no objection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Texas will find that the papers are in the RECORD. The resolution itself embraces not over ten lines, and the preamble covers more than seven pages of the RECORD.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RETURN OF CASES TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a letter from the chief justice of the Court of Claims, transmitting a communication from the Assistant Attorney-General requesting the return of certain cases which were dismissed for lack of prosecution through error in making up the list of cases, etc., reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That in compliance with the request of the chief justice of the Court of Claims, under date of January 15, 1908, the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to return to the Court of Claims the following Congressional cases, namely: George M. Kausler v. The United States, No. 10551; The Heirs of Pierce Butler v. The United States, No. 10552, and The Levee Steam Cotton Press Company v. The United States, No. 10554, and the said court is hereby authorized to proceed in said cases and in each thereof as if no return therein had been made to the Senate.

CONDITIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of Secretary Taft upon his recent trip to the Philippines. I heartily concur in the recommendations he makes, and I call especial attention to the admirable work of Governor Smith and his associates. It is a subject for just national gratification that such a report as this can be made. No great civilized power has ever managed with such wisdom and disinterestedness the affairs of a people committed by the accident of war to its hands. If we had followed the advice of the misguided persons who wished us to turn the islands loose and let them suffer whatever fate might befall them, they would have already passed through a period of complete and bloody chaos, and would now undoubtedly be the possession of some other power which there is every reason to believe would not have done as we have done; that is, would not have striven to teach them how to govern themselves or to have developed them, as we have developed them, primarily in their own interests. Save only our attitude toward Cuba, I question whether there is a brighter page in the annals of international dealing between the strong and the weak than the page which tells of our doings in the Philippines. I call especial attention to the admirably clear showing made by Secretary Taft of the fact that it would have been equally ruinous if we had yielded to the desires of those who wished us to go faster in the direction of giving the Filipinos self-government, and if we had followed the policy advocated by others, who desired us simply to rule the islands without any thought at all of fitting them for self-government. The islanders have made real advances in a hopeful direction, and they have opened well with the new Philippine assembly; they have yet a long way to travel before they will be fit for complete self-government, and for deciding, as it will then be their duty to do, whether this self-government shall be accompanied by complete independence. It will probably be a generation, it may even be longer, before this point is reached; but it is most gratifying that such substantial progress toward this as a goal has already been accomplished. We desire that it be reached at as early a date as possible for the sake of the Filipinos and for our own sake. But improperly to endeavor to hurry the time will probably mean that the goal will not be attained at all.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 27, 1908.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 14638. An act to enable the city of Tucson, Ariz., to issue bonds for the extension and repair of its water and sewer system, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

H. R. 14779. An act to transfer the county of Alachua, in the State of Florida, from the southern to the northern judicial district of that State and to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Florida at the city of Gainesville, in said district, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 456) to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C., which was, on page 1, line 10, to strike out all after "Salisbury" down to and including "district," on page 2, line 3.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN FLORIDA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3350) for the establishment of a fish-cultural station on the St. Johns River, in the State of Florida.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station on the St. Johns River, in the State of Florida, for the propagation of shad, mullet, and other fishes, the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. Now let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

HITCHMAN COAL AND COKE COMPANY V. JOHN MITCHELL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions coming over from previous sessions. The first in order will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 74, by Mr. CULBERSON, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate and inquire into the circumstances connected with the issuing of a restraining order in the case of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. That resolution may be passed over for the present. A substitute practically has been offered for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over. The next resolution coming over from a previous day will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 81, by Mr. CULBERSON, relating to the bill of complaint filed in the circuit court of the United States in the case of the Hitchman Coal and Coke Company v. John Mitchell.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table subject to call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks that the resolution may lie on the table subject to call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to inquire at this time if the Secretary of the Treasury has answered the resolution presented by the Senate Committee on Finance and adopted by the Senate a month or six weeks ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that no answer has been received.

Mr. CULBERSON. It occurs to me to say that in view of the statement in the newspapers that we will soon have presented to the Senate from the Committee on Finance a financial measure we ought to have a report of the Secretary of the Treasury prior to that time.

It also occurs to me, Mr. President, to say that it seems there has been ample time for the Secretary of the Treasury to have answered the resolution to which I refer, and that the delay is unfortunate at least, because we are unable to have the facts which he will present for the consideration of the Committee on Finance and for the consideration of individual members of this body.

PROPOSED TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on account of the fact that the time of the Senate has been taken up more or less with the financial debate I shall postpone the remarks of which I have given notice for Wednesday, January 29, until the following Wednesday, February 5, at which time I shall speak on Senate bill No. 3163, introduced by me, to create a tariff commission.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1424) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army was announced as first in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

Mr. STONE. I desire to inquire what became of the resolution which was under consideration on Thursday morning last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It went to the foot of the Calendar under the rule, having had its day.

TEA FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that it be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, as the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is absent and takes some interest in that bill, I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from Idaho, without prejudice.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

The bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. STONE January 16, 1908, which is as follows:

The claim of William R. Little is predicated upon facts that are set forth in a report made by the late Senator Platt, of Connecticut, on behalf of the Select Committee on Indian Traderships, presented to the Senate March 2, 1889. So much of said report as relates to the claim of Mr. Little is hereto appended, as follows:

William R. Little was a trader at the Sac and Fox Agency. He was licensed first in his own name, and then, his brother becoming interested with him, they were in 1884 licensed under the firm name of William R. Little & Co. The license expired on the 8th of September, 1885. Little was a young man, about 30 years of age, a native of Rock Island, who commenced life as a stock herder at $10 a month; afterwards became a clerk at the Pawnee Agency at $40 per month; was industrious and economical; and as a result of several years' services saved up from his wages about $1,750 with which, having obtained a license, he started a trader's store in 1882. He was successful in his trade, and had at the expiration of his license stock in trade to the value of about $3,800 and about $15,000 due him from the Indians for goods sold them. The annuities due to the Indians at the agency were payable semiannually, but had been delayed, so that no payments had been made for twelve months, which accounts for the large amount of debts due from the Indians.

In the month of August, prior to the expiration of the license, he made an application for the renewal thereof, but was notified that it would not be renewed. About the time of its expiration, H. L. McClung, of Knoxville, Tenn., and R. N. McClung, of Terrell, Tex., came to the agency and informed Little that they had a letter from A. B. Upshaw, Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to the effect that they could have an exclusive license and right to trade at the agency. The letter was produced and read to Little. Thereupon Little made an arrangement with the McClung brothers to sell to them his goods and building and agreed to take charge of their business for them at $1,200 a year. The arrangement was that the McClung brothers would get him permission to continue the business until the 1st of January, when they would come and pay him the money for the same, reckoning the value of the goods at cost, with carriage added, and the building at cost.

Little, relying on the good faith of the McClung brothers, continued the business, his time being extended by the Commissioner.

While the McClungs were there making the arrangement with Little, Little received a letter from his sister in Bloomington, Ill., informing him that John Eddy, of Bloomington, had been licensed to take the place of Whistler, Pickett & Co., who were also old traders at the agency. Little showed the letter to one of the McClungs and told him there must be some mistake, as the letter which he had seen from Acting Commissioner Upshaw said that the McClung brothers were to have the exclusive trade at the agency. Little informed McClung that the Commissioner was coming to the agency that evening, and McClung waited and had an interview with the Commissioner, after which the two brothers saw Little, and one of them said:

"We have seen the General (Commissioner Atkins), and he says that John Eddy is licensed to trade here at Sac and Fox; that there is a mistake, and that he will at once, when he gets to Washington, send him either to Shawneetown or Wellston; that we have been promised the place and are going to have it."

He further said:

"Boys, you can rest assured that all is straight that we tell you."

The same evening one of the McClungs came to the store and said to Little:

"Now, you go on and order some more goods and keep your stock up until we come here, and we will take everything off your hands at cost and carriage, and we will be here on the 1st of January."

They went away the next morning, and Little afterwards received a letter from one of them saying that his brother had been to Washington to see the Commissioner. In the letter he wrote:

"Everything will be all right, Little, just continue as you are doing."

That was the last that Little heard from the McClungs.

They had represented that their father and the Commissioner were old schoolmates, and that the place had been promised them on account of the intimacy between their father and the Commissioner.

Two weeks after the McClungs were there John Eddy came to the agency and said that he was licensed to trade there and wanted to make some arrangement with Little for his business. Little declined because he had made the bargain with the McClung brothers. While there Eddy made a proposition to Little to use his license under which to carry on the business and asked Little what he would be willing to pay for the use of the license. Little declined to make any arrangements. Little notified McClung that Eddy had been there. On the 1st of January, the time to which his license was extended, he closed the store. A payment to the Indians came on the 5th of January, but all that Little could collect of the $15,000 due him, his store having been closed, was $2,500.

Eddy had then made some arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co., or it was understood at the agency that he had done so, though it subsequently appeared that he put no money into the concern. Little went to Washington, told his story first to Mr. Upshaw, the Assistant Commissioner, from whom he got no consolation, and afterwards to Commissioner Atkins, who informed him that he could do nothing till he had heard from the McClung brothers. The Commissioner sent a telegram to one of them, and after about ten days received a letter from them confirming Little's statement, but declining to carry out the agreement which they had made with Little, presumably upon the ground that the license to them was not exclusive and that Eddy claimed to have made an arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co. The Commissioner then told Little that he should have his license; that he saw he had been misled by the McClungs.

In the same conversation the Commissioner asked Little whether Eddy was then at the Sac and Fox Agency. Eddy had returned to Bloomington, Ill., staying at the agency but a few days. The interview between the Commissioner and Little and the statement made by Little about Eddy are detailed by Little as follows:

"General Atkins got up and said, 'Little, I have a letter from the agent, a very nice letter, about you, and also one from the McClungs, and I see you have been misled by the McClungs.' He says, 'You shall have your license.' So I went then right down to General Upshaw and told him, and he said that he would issue the license, and went to looking over a bond that was dated back some time, and he said I would have to make a new bond. I told him I could do that. So I went right up to the Commissioner and told him I would have to make a new bond, and he says, 'You go right home, Little, and make a new bond and carry yourself like a man, and everything will be all right; and,' he says to me, 'look here,' he says, 'I just want to ask you a few questions.' He says, 'What about this man Eddy; is he down at Sac and Fox?' Said I, 'No, sir; he is not.' He says, 'Well, he has got a license to trade there.' Said I, 'I understand he has.' He says, 'Who is running the business there?' I said, 'The old parties, Whistler, Pickett & Co.' He says, 'Isn't Eddy there?' I replied, 'No, sir; he is not.' Said he, 'Where is he?' 'In Bloomington, Ill.,' I says. He says, 'Do you know that Whistler, Pickett & Co. are running the business?' I said, 'I think they were when I left. The old employees are still in the store, and there was no change made at all.' 'Well,' he says, 'if Eddy is not there attending to his business I will make him go there.' He says, 'Will you please put it in writing what you know about it?' I said I would. So I went right over to the office with Mr. Ellis, and I just told him what I knew about it, and he wrote it down and we went in and gave the statement to the Commissioner."

Little returned to the Sac and Fox Agency and soon after the agent there was notified to have Little close his business and leave the Territory, the reason given for the order being that Little had made a false statement as to Eddy not being at the agency. The store had been opened by Little upon his return, by authority of the Commissioner, telegraphed to the agent. The store was finally closed July 15, 1886, by an imperative order from the Commissioner sent to the agent, directing that Little should be put out of the Territory at once. The ground upon which Little's statement was claimed by the Commissioner to be false was that Mr. Upshaw, the Acting Commissioner, said that Mr. John H. Oberly, at whose request Mr. Eddy was appointed, claimed to be receiving letters from Eddy, dated at the agency. The matter was afterwards investigated at the Sac and Fox Agency, and it was found that Little's statement was true; but Little was not relicensed and no reparation was made. He was financially ruined by reason, in the first place, of having trusted to the McClung brothers, and, in the second place, for having told the truth to the Commissioner about Eddy when asked by the Commissioner.

If Eddy ever had any arrangement with Whistler, Pickett & Co., it was given up. He did not continue the business, and either resigned or his license was revoked. The agent was directed to put Little off the reservation, and Little thereupon sold his goods to the chief of the tribe, who had the right to trade without a license, at a nominal price, and lost about $8,000 which were due to him. He settled with his creditors for 33⅓ cents on the dollar. Through the intercession of friends he was permitted by Commissioner Atkins to go at the time of two subsequent payments to the Indians to see if he could collect what was due him, and has never since been allowed on the reservation. There were no charges whatever against Little as regards the conduct of his business.

Acts of this general nature have been passed by Congress at different times. It seems to be the only practicable way of doing speedy justice to Mr. Little.

The committee recommends the passage of the bill.

During the reading of the report—

Mr. KEAN. Enough of the report has been read for my information. It recalls to my mind the case, and I will not ask for the further reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The further reading of the report will be dispensed with, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RENT FOR BUREAU OF FORESTRY.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) to amend the act of March 4, 1907, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1908, so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to use for rent an increased proportion of the appropriation made by said act for rent for the Bureau of Forestry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act of Congress approved March 4, 1907, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to use for rent not to exceed $60,000 of the moneys appropriated by the act for general expenses of the Forest Service, instead of "not to exceed $40,000" for such purpose, as provided in the act.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 3640) to amend sections 9 and 14, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 9, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That said lands shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and the Spanish wars, as defined and prescribed in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: Provided further, That the price of said lands shall be the appraised value thereof, as fixed by the said Commission, but settlers under the homestead law who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law shall pay one-third of the appraised value in cash at the time of entry, and the remainder in five equal annual installments, to be paid one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry, and shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of said five annual payments, and in addition thereto the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre, and no other and further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required of such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry: Provided, That if any entryman fails to make such payments, or any of them, within the time stated, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited, and the entry shall be forfeited and canceled: And provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed by said Commission, receiving credit for payments previously made: Provided, however, That the entryman or owner of any land irrigable by any system hereunder constructed under the provisions of section 14 of this act shall, in addition to the payment required by section 9 of said act, be required to pay for a water right the proportionate cost of the construction of said system in not more than fifteen annual installments, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be paid at the local land office, and the register and receiver shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid.

"The entryman of lands to be irrigated by said system shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, reclaim at least one-half of the total irrigable area of his entry for agricultural purposes, and before receiving patent for the lands covered by his entry shall pay the charges apportioned against such tract. No right to the use of water shall be disposed of for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one person, and the Secretary of the Interior may limit the areas to be entered at not less than 60 nor more than 160 acres each.

"A failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry and water-right application subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys paid thereon. The funds arising hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and be added to the proceeds derived from the sale of the lands. No right to the use of water for lands in private ownership shall be sold to any landowner unless he be an actual bona fide resident on such land or occupant thereof residing in the neighborhood of such land, and no such right shall permanently attach until all payments therefor are made.

"All applicants for water rights under the systems constructed in pursuance of this act shall be required to pay such annual charges for operation and maintenance as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the failure to pay such charges when due shall render the water-right application and the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act as well as of any moneys already paid thereon.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix the time for the beginning of such payments and to provide such rules and regulations in regard thereto as he may deem proper. Upon the cancellation of any entry or water-right application, as herein provided, such lands or water rights may be disposed of under the terms of this act and at such price and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, but not less than the cost originally fixed.

"The land irrigable under the systems herein provided, which is owned by or has been allotted to Indians in severalty, shall be deemed to have a right to so much water as may be required to irrigate such lands without cost to the Indians so long as the title, legal or equitable, remains in said Indians; but any such lands leased for a longer term than three years shall bear their pro rata share of the cost of the operation and maintenance of the system under which it lies, and when the Indian title is extinguished such lands shall also bear their pro rata cost of operation and maintenance.

"When the payments required by this act have been made for the major part of the lands irrigable under any system and subject to charges for construction thereof, the management and operation of such irrigation works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such form of organization and under such rules and regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions hereof for the furnishing of water rights for the irrigation of Indian lands without cost except for operation and maintenance.

"A right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this act shall be appurtenant to the lands irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect."

That section 14 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the proceeds received from the sale of said lands in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and, after deducting the expenses of the Commission, of classification and sale of lands, and such other incidental expenses as shall have been necessarily incurred, and expenses of the survey of the land, shall be expended or paid, as follows: So much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable in the construction of irrigation systems, for the irrigation of the irrigable lands embraced within the limits of said reservation; one-half of the money remaining after the construction of said irrigation systems to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians in the purchase of live stock, farming implements, or the necessary articles to aid said Indians in farming and stock raising and in the education and civilization of said Indians, and the remaining half of said money to be paid to said Indians and persons holding tribal rights on said reservation, semiannually as the same shall become available, share and share alike."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will ask that that bill go over, as I wish to have an opportunity to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. DIXON subsequently said: I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of Senate bill 3640, which went over at the request of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. He has suggested an amendment which is acceptable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection to the consideration of the bill having been withdrawn, it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Montana will offer a slight amendment, and I will therefore withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. DIXON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 21, after the word "maintenance," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "in accordance with the laws of Montana."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF OCONTO HARBOR, WIS.

The next business in order was the following concurrent resolution reported by Mr. DEPEW from the Committee on Commerce, January 16, 1908:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Oconto Harbor, Oconto, Wis., with a view to providing a 20-foot channel and turning basin in said harbor, and to submit estimates for the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

The bill (H. R. 9121) to authorize a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY AT DEPERE, WIS.

The next business on the Calendar was the concurrent resolution reported by Mr. ELKINS from the Committee on Commerce January 16, 1908, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made at Depere, Wis., for a turning basin; also for the purpose of deepening the present channel between Green Bay and Depere and making it a 20-foot channel clear through from Green Bay to Depere, and to submit estimates for the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

GRAND CALUMET RIVER BRIDGES AT GARY, IND.

The bill (H. R. 11330) to authorize the Chicago, Indiana and Southern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the town of Gary, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 11331) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio and Chicago Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River at or near the town of Gary, Ind., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEYS OF FLATHEAD RIVER, MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar was the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. DIXON December 21, 1907, and reported by Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Commerce, January 16, 1908, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Flathead River, Montana, from the mouth of the same to the city of Kalispell, with a view of dredging and cleaning out a channel, carrying 4 feet of water from the city of Kalispell to the mouth of said river, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SURVEY OF YELLOWSTONE RIVER, MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar was the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. DIXON December 21, 1907, and reported by Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Commerce, January 16, 1908, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the portion of the Yellowstone River from the city of Glendive, Mont., to the mouth of the said river, with a view of cleaning out the channel thereof, so as to maintain a 4-foot stage of water therein, including a lock at the United States Government dam, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

HARBOR OF ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar was the concurrent resolution reported by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce January 16, 1908, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey of the entrance and harbor at St. Augustine, Fla., with a view to determining the necessity for and cost of construction of necessary breakwaters, etc., to protect the Government works at St. Augustine, Fla., from damage from erosions and encroachments of the sea.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is temporarily absent, and I understand desires to be present when this bill is considered.

Mr. PILES. In the absence of the Senator from Idaho, I consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

FEES OF JURORS AND WITNESSES.

The bill (S. 597) amending the act of August 3, 1892, clause 361, entitled "An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in certain States and Territories" (27 Stat. L., 347), was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the act of August 3, 1892, clause 361, 27 Statutes at Large, page 347, entitled "An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in certain States and Territories," so as to read:

That jurors and witnesses in the United States courts, including commissioners' courts, in the States of Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Idaho, Colorado, and Utah, and in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona shall be entitled to receive for actual attendance at any court or courts, including commissioners' courts, and for the time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from the same, $3 a day during such attendance, and 15 cents for each mile necessarily traveled over any stage line, or by private conveyance, and 5 cents for each mile over any railway, in going to and returning from said courts: Provided, That no constructive or double mileage fees shall be allowed by reason of any person being summoned as both witness and juror, or as a witness in two or more cases pending in the same court and triable at the same term thereof.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Oregon what States are included in that bill?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What are known as the Rocky Mountain States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 1824) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Alabama, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, the station to be located at a point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN DELAWARE.

The bill (S. 536) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station in the county of Newcastle, Del., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with amendments, in line 5, after the words "for the," to strike out "establishing" and insert "establishment;" in the same line, after the words "of a," to strike out "fish-hatching and fish-culture" and insert "fish-cultural;" in line 6, after the word "station," to insert "in the State of Delaware;" in line 8, after the word "suitable," to strike out "site within the county of Newcastle, State of Delaware," and insert "point," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Delaware, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Delaware."

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The bill (S. 2328) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN NEW JERSEY.

The bill (S. 762) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of New Jersey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of New Jersey, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point in the State, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VETERAN VOLUNTEER FIREMEN'S ASSOCIATION, ETC.

The bill (S. 2024) to amend "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington," approved March 2, 1891.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after the words "during the," to strike out "existence of said associations or either of them" and insert "pleasure of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That said act be amended so as to include both the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association and the Association of Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia in the use of all that part of lot 11, in square No. 141, in the city of Washington, and building thereon, occupied by a house used formerly as an engine house, and described as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of said lot and running east 30 feet on H street, thence 50 feet south on a line parallel to Nineteenth street, thence west 30 feet to Nineteenth street, and thence north 50 feet to the beginning; the same to be used by said associations as a place of meeting and for the storage of their property and belongings, consisting of fire apparatus, books, maps, pictures, files, souvenirs, mementos, and papers of historic interest, the same to continue during the pleasure of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENGLEHART & CEASE.

The bill (S. 1643) for the relief of Englehart & Cease was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Englehart & Cease, of Webster, S. Dak., $140, in full compensation for loss in sale of cattle illegally placed in quarantine by Government inspector at the stock yards in Chicago, Ill.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report is No. 75.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from New Jersey wishes I can briefly state the object of the bill. I think he will recall the bill after I state the facts.

Mr. KEAN. I think I will recall it in a second.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire to have the report of the committee read?

Mr. KEAN. No.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain the bill, since he has volunteered, for the reason that the report is very short; I have read it through, and it is not a very ample explanation. Perhaps it is a claim resulting from cattle inspection or something of that kind. I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. FULTON. In brief the facts were these: Cattle were shipped from South Dakota to the stock yards, I think at Chicago, and they were improperly detained there for inspection in violation of the rules of the Agricultural Department. It was the fault of the local representative of the Department of Agrfculture. He detained the cattle longer than he should have done. I am speaking now, of course, in a general way, because I have not before me the report which gives the facts, but in a general way I am quite familiar with them. The result was that the cattle deteriorated very considerably in value.

The Secretary of Agriculture went into the matter quite carefully and reported the amount which he thought should be allowed and recommended its allowance, and that is the amount stated in the bill. The following bill on the Calendar is of the same character.

Mr. BURKETT. How many of these bills are there? Here are two. Have there been other bills of this nature before?

Mr. FULTON. No; I do not recall any other bills of this character before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURKETT. I am going to ask that this bill be laid over, and I desire to say a word.

With all the inspection which Government officers are now doing, if we are going to start out and establish this sort of precedent we are very liable to open up the door to a lot of claims that will come against the Government, which will swamp us. It may be entirely proper that the Government should pay for the failure on the part of its officers to do their duty or for their neglect of duty or their carelessness. However, I am very certain that heretofore in all lines of Government work we have not observed that rule. Just why it should be taken up in this particular kind of a case and done I do not know. I ask that the bill lie over until I can examine it a little further.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to the bill going over, but I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that he was a member of the committee last year, when similar bills were reported favorably, and, as I recollect it, although my memory may be at fault, when they passed the Senate.

It is not particularly for neglect of duty that this claim is presented. It is because of the wrongful acts of the representative of this Government in confining cattle in pens, refusing to allow the owners to take charge of them and put them on the market, in violation of the rules and without any authority. In a case of this kind it seems to me the owners of the cattle should properly be compensated; and the Secretary of Agriculture reports that this is the amount of the actual loss. Of course the matter is of no concern to me personally.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I was on the committee last year and that is what attracted my attention to this matter. I was not then for these claims and I am not yet. I do not know but that somebody ought to have compensation for the carelessness of these officers. But this may attract attention to the necessity of changing in some way a lot of our inspection laws and either get a better lot of inspectors, who will be more careful in their work, or put some responsibility upon them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

RATHBUN, BEACHY & CO.

The bill (S. 114) for the relief of Rathbun, Beachy & Co. was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BURKETT. This is the same kind of a bill as the other one, and I ask that it may go over with the other bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

INTERNATIONAL MINING EXPOSITION, NEW YORK.

The bill (S. 2424) providing for a United States exhibit at the International Mining Exposition, Madison Square Garden, New York City, and inviting other nations to participate therein, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Industrial Expositions with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, section 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Geological Survey, is hereby authorized to prepare and place on exhibition at the International Mining Exposition, to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York City, May 25 to June 20, 1908, an exhibit of the mineral resources of the United States and its possessions, and the methods of mining and extraction of metals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby requested to invite the nations of the world to participate in the said International Mining Exposition and to send exhibits showing their mineral resources and methods of mining and extraction of metals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Does the bill carry any appropriation or necessarily involve one, which will follow? If it is intended that there should be an appropriation, it ought to be expressed in the bill, and the bill ought not to go through without a provision of that kind, if such is the ultimate purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia propose an amendment?

Mr. BACON. I want to hear from those who are in favor of the bill, so that we may know about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Since this bill was up the other day I have made some inquiries about it, and I am assured that if an exhibit is made the entire cost will not exceed $5,000.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then it ought to be put in the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be amended so as to provide that the amount of the expenditure shall not exceed that sum.

Mr. BACON. That is a very considerable point gained, but I should like to know why we should go to that expense.

I will say to the Senator that the thing which causes me to say anything about the bill is not the small amount which may be involved in making this exhibit, but we have been for more than thirty years expending very large sums of money for expositions of one kind and another. Every section of the country has had the benefit of it, and our recent experiences in this connection have not been of a kind to encourage us to continue in this line of business.

This is a very small matter if it is not to exceed $5,000, but it is still the recognition of the propriety of expenditures of this kind. I do not know how far this may be important; I do not know how far the invitation to foreign nations which is expressed in the bill may devolve upon us additional expense.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That has been stricken out of the bill.

Mr. BACON. It has been stricken out?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Then I shall have nothing more to say on that point.

But I repeat that the thing which attracted my attention to the bill and which causes me to call the attention of the Senate to it is not the small amount which may be involved in this particular case, but it is the recognition of the propriety of continued participation by the Government in these expositions in a way to require first probably a nominal expense, and then a larger expense, and ultimately a very great expense and as, in recent experiences, a very great loss to the Government; and as all parts of the country have had the full benefit heretofore, impartially, let me say, of the generosity of the Government in this regard, I think it is about time for us to stop.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, when this bill was up a few days ago I objected. I am not going to object to it now, but I simply want to say that I do not myself believe that very much good comes of this kind of an exposition. If we pass the bill at all I think we shall have to make some appropriation, or else the Government, which will be committed to this exposition to some extent, will be utterly unable to comply with the law. I think $5,000 is a pretty small sum, but if the Senator who is in charge of the bill thinks that sum is enough, I think we had better put it in the bill and be done with it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The only expense the Geological Survey will be to in this matter will be for the transporting of materials and exhibits that are already on hand. That is all that is contemplated.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator put in a proviso to that effect—that there shall be no expense except in the transportation of mineral specimens, which are now in the possession of the Government?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. "Mineral specimens and mining appliances."

Mr. BACON. Very well; whatever will cover it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will prepare such an amendment and offer it.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I did not hear just what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] stated, and it may be that he has touched upon the point which I am about to suggest. This bill is going to put some sort of burden on this Department. It makes no special appropriation. I would not be in favor of it with an appropriation, because I think we are about through with this sort of business. This bill is certainly very objectionable, in that it puts an additional burden on a Department and gives it no additional money for that purpose. The Senator knows that one of the Departments which has caused more or less trouble, perhaps, in the matter of expenses has been this same Department; and if we are going to load on additional burdens by our own act, give them additional reasons for coming in here with deficiencies, we can expect deficiencies to come in hereafter. I certainly think we ought not to pass a bill of this kind, authorizing an exhibit to be made without any limit to the amount of the expenditure, and with no special appropriation, and expect the Bureau to make the exhibit out of some kind of an appropriation which it already has, because the result is bound to be that we will have a deficiency in the end when the thing is done.

Now, if this sort of legislation is to be passed the amount ought to be fixed; the thing to be done ought to be definitely stated, and the money ought to be appropriated so that we should determine the amount that we are going to spend in making the exhibit, rather than to leave it to the head of a bureau, who, as we know from experience, is rather liberal, when a little permission has been granted, in creating deficiencies for us to consider later on.

If any steps have been taken by other nations so that it is important that the bill ought to pass, I think it at least ought to go over until the bill can be redrafted and those objections in some way bridged over by the wording of the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not insist upon the bill going over, because, as the bill itself shows, the exposition is to begin in May, and the time is short within which these matters are to be done. I move that the bill be amended by adding at the end thereof:

Provided, That there shall not be expended more than $5,000, to be used entirely for the transportation of materials and mining appliances now in the possession of the Government.

I think the amendment will obviate the objection.

Mr. BACON. I myself will be content with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That there shall not be expended more than $5,000, to be used entirely for the transportation of materials and mining appliances now in the possession of the Government.

Mr. BURKETT. As I understand the Senator's amendment, does the $5,000 include additional salaries and everything of that nature.?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It includes everything. It says there shall not be expended to exceed $5,000.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me ask the Senator, while I am on my feet, as there is no report in connection with this bill in my book, what is the origin of this exposition? Where does the idea come from?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The exposition company is one organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey. It is a project which was expressly approved by the mining congress held in Texas a few years ago. It has been approved by many of the governors of the mining States. My own State has made a legislative appropriation for an exhibit. Mining men in my State are now gathering funds and materials for making an exhibit there. Does that answer the Senator's question? May I ask that the amendment I proposed be again read?

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest that we insert the words "and care," so as to read "for the transportation and care."

Mr. BACON. I suggest that the word "exclusively" be used rather than the word "entirely."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. "Exclusively." I accept the suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That there shall not be expended more than $5,000, to be used exclusively for the transportation and care of materials and mining appliances now in the possession of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Select Committee on Industrial Expositions reported an amendment to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for a United States exhibit at the International Mining Exposition, Madison Square Garden, New York City."

ALICE M. STAFFORD.

The bill (S. 1729) for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$621.95" and insert "$749.92," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford, of the Fifteenth Infantry, United States Army, * * * the sum of $749.92, the same being the amount of money necessarily advanced and paid by him out of his own personal funds while first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster, Fifteenth Infantry, post quartermaster and commissary at Fort Wingate, N. Mex., in the years 1879 and 1880, in order that the troops in said command might have fresh beef and necessary food during the fourteen months' drought in which no rain fell in the region of said fort, and during which time the beef presented for issue by the beef contractor was of such poor quality as to be unfit for food for said command.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. CLAPP rose.

Mr. BACON. If the report is long, possibly the Senator in charge of the bill would occupy less time in stating to the Senate the points in it.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will pardon me. There is a report which is somewhat lengthy.

A similar bill passed at the last session, for the amount of twelve or thirteen hundred dollars, I think, although I may be mistaken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Thirteen hundred and seventy-one dollars and eighty-seven cents.

Mr. CLAPP. The President vetoed it on the ground that there was only seven hundred and some odd dollars due. This bill will take the place of the other one. The former bill passed all right, but the amount was too large.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Minnesota whether the amended amount in this bill corresponds to what the Executive thought was due.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, during the morning the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians, passed the Senate, and while I do not intend to move its reconsideration, I rise to propound an inquiry which has been presented during a previous session of the Senate with reference to the same subject-matter.

The bill in question is for the relief of Mr. Little, who was, about twenty years ago, an Indian trader on an Indian reservation. It seems that Little failed to collect from the Indians on the reservation certain sums of money, aggregating some $8,000 or thereabouts, and having so failed to collect, this bill now provides that the Secretary of the Interior, after the lapse of twenty years or more, shall collect from the Indians the respective sums due to Mr. Little and pay the same over to him when collected.

It appears that the claim in question was reported upon by the late Senator Platt while a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That report shows great merit in this particular case, and I only raise a question with reference to the principle involved, to the end that we may have an expression from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the probability of the Secretary of the Interior being made a collecting agent for Indian traders who fail to collect from the Indians.

Should this view be entertained, we will send the Secretary of the Interior forth, through his various agents, to collect not small sums, but very large sums from the Indians, reaching back over a period of more than one hundred years. Indian traders were appointed by William Clark when he was designated about a hundred years ago as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, located at St. Louis. It became a habit to trust Indians for goods sold to them from time to time at the traders' stores. Indians sometimes pay and sometimes do not pay, just as white people sometimes pay and sometimes forget to pay.

Never before within my knowledge has Congress required the Secretary of the Interior to collect from the Indians and pay the trader's accounts which he thought in his time proper to trust out to the Indians. I do not pretend to say how much would be found delinquent, but it is probably safe to say that millions upon millions of dollars of claims due to the Indian traders would be presented to Congress, if the Secretary of the Interior were allowed, without reference to time, to make the collection from the Indians, if alive, and turn the fund over to the trader.

Now, my belief is that the traders extend credit expecting to meet certain losses; that they charge prices, as a rule, in view of expected losses to a certain degree or percentage. The credit extended is generally upon the judgment of the trader in the ordinary course of his business with the Indian tribe with whom he is licensed to trade. I think the principle of this bill, generally extended, authorizing or requiring the Secretary of the Interior to make these collections would be pernicious, would greatly burden the Department, would frequently work injustice upon the Indians, because, as a rule, they are rather lax in their method of accounting, and we would be required to take the trader's books as the highest evidence of the amount due from the Indians to the trader.

The transactions referred to in this bill occurred about 1886, and, owing to the peculiar conditions surrounding them, I imagine that some moral obligation arose of which the United States is required in honor to take notice. It seems that Mr. Little was deceived and misled by the officers of the United States Government, and I desired that that state of facts should be made very explicit, to the end that the passage of this bill shall not form a precedent upon which numberless claims for like relief will hereafter be made.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I quite agree with all that the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has said, and certainly desire to disclaim any intention that this bill shall stand as in any sense outlining or foreshadowing the policy of the committee. In fact, it was only with the greatest reluctance that the committee finally decided to report the bill favorably. It had received a very careful investigation at the hands of our former colleague, Mr. Platt, whose conservatism was well known to all. There had been a case of such apparent, at least, rank injustice on the part of Government officials that the committee did feel that the case should be made special and that the party was entitled to relief. It must be understood to stand solely upon its own individual merits.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that there will be very considerable difficulty in carrying out the provisions of the bill. I understand the Senator to state that these accounts were made in 1886. Of course the statutes have run against them, and I do not see how the Secretary of the Interior will ever enforce this claim against the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think an equally difficult problem will present itself in tracing the items to individuals at this late date, but the best we could do was to authorize him to do so if he could.

Mr. TELLER. I am not criticizing the committee, but it appears to me that it is one of those cases where it would have been better not to have done anything, not simply because you will create a precedent, but because you will give the Department of the Interior trouble, and it may make a good deal of trouble on the reservation. The Indian will forget that he has ever had the goods and will naturally deny it. As the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] says, practically all the evidence that can be had now will be on the books of the Treasury Department.

I read the report made by the late Senator from Connecticut; and I agree that it is a very outrageous case, but it seems to me it is one of those cases that it is pretty difficult to deal with. There is some danger that a good deal of trouble will grow out of it, and a good deal of injustice may be done to the Indians.

I did not feel at liberty to object to the consideration of the bill; I know how very careful the late Senator from Connecticut was in matters of this kind; but I am afraid the committee did not consider all the difficulties that will arise from putting the act into operation. I looked over the bill and I read the report. I did not see anything that I could add to the bill. It occurred to me then that it was a difficult thing to do, and I think very likely if the bill should pass that it would fail to be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota whether this involves anything more than the question as to whether or not the Government will make good to the Indians the difference between the value of the money specified in the treaty of 1854 and the character of the money in which they were paid in 1864? I am sure the committee gave the measure thorough consideration, but I have in my mind a claim which has not, strictly speaking, been urged because they have not been able to get anyone in Congress to take it up, but a claim involving a very large sum of money on behalf of certain contractors for Government supplies in the State of Ohio, and in which they raised this same question.

Mr. CLAPP. Is the Senator addressing himself to Order of Business 89, Senate bill 2268, or to the bill to adjust the accounts of William R. Little?

Mr. HEYBURN. I was addressing myself to Senate bill 2268. I came in during the discussion and I was advised that we were considering that bill.

Mr. CLAPP. No; the discussion has been upon a bill which was passed. Senate bill 2268 will be the next on the Calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I withdraw any suggestion I rose to make.

Mr. FRYE. What is the next bill on the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF LAKE SUPERIOR AND THE MISSISSIPPI.

The bill (S. 2268) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriations for the same, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. CLAPP. That bill may go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

MARY C. MAYERS.

The bill (S. 2227) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $5,000 for the aid and support of Mary C. Mayers, widow of Joseph L. Mayers.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FULTON. The report is quite long, that is, if all the exhibits attached to it are read. I can briefly state the case to the Senator. Perhaps he would prefer, however, to hear the entire report read.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the principle involved in the bill?

Mr. FULTON. I will state the principle. Of course there may be a question whether the Government should ever pay for personal injuries. It has, however, done so in many instances, and if it ever should pay this is one of the cases where it should be done.

The United States cruiser Charleston was in the harbor at Hongkong. It had taken on board some coal. This Mr. Mayers went on board and collected for the coal. A little launch by means of which he went on board was lying at the gangway. He went on board, collected his money, came down to the launch, got into the launch, and some of the sailors on board the Charleston, either through some accident or negligence, let go one of the ship's boats that was hanging right above.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I ask the Senator there, is it clear that it was a case of negligence, or was it just an accident?

Mr. FULTON. It is perfectly clear. There is no question about it.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator used the words "accident or negligence."

Mr. FULTON. It was negligence. Of course the word "accident" would not be the proper term to use. It was done through negligence. There was no occasion at that time for lowering the boat, and certainly if there had been occasion for lowering it it should not have been done while this boat was lying at her proper berth at the gangway. But the sailors did let go one of the ship's boats hanging immediately above and it fell, striking Mr. Mayers, the injury resulting in his death the next day.

The launch was injured and some Chinamen on board were injured. The Government paid the Chinamen a small amount, I think some $60 apiece, or thereabouts, for their injuries. There was a survey held on the launch and the amount awarded the owner was $500, which the Government paid, recognizing the fault of the ship.

So it seemed to the committee that the Government having paid the Chinamen and having paid the owner of the boat they surely ought to pay this woman for the death of her husband.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask that the letter of the late Secretary of the Navy, Mr. John D. Long, on page 3 of the report of the committee, be read. It exonerates the officers and crew, and shows that an apprentice was guilty of the unfortunate happening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 18, 1900.

SIR: Referring to your communication of the 10th instant, requesting the views of the Department as to the bill (S. 2216) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers on account of the death of her husband, caused, in May last, by being struck by the whaleboat falling from the U. S. S. Charleston, at Hongkong, China, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of all the papers on file in this case, and to state that while the Department does not consider that there was any failure on the part of the officers or crew of the ship to exercise due and proper care, it is evident that the accidental fall of the boat was caused by an error on the part of an apprentice, second class, who, in endeavoring to clear the anchor, mistook the chain of the boat-detaching apparatus for the cable of the anchor, and by pulling it detached the boat. It does not appear that there was any contributory negligence on the part of Mr. Mayers.

It is believed that, with all the papers before it, the committee will be able to determine whether, in accordance with its practice in similar cases, the relief provided for in the bill should be granted.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire further to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the committee proposes by this character of legislation to establish the principle that the Government of the United States is responsible for negligence in such cases?

Mr. FULTON. I will state that we have no purpose to establish any precedent. I have said several times when personal-injury cases came before the Senate that I would appreciate it very much if the Senate would in some proper case determine finally whether or not it proposed as a matter of policy to recognize personal-injury cases.

Almost every time a case of this character comes up there is objection to it on the ground that the Government should not make an allowance for injury to persons either in its employ or in cases where the injury was sustained through the negligence of its officials.

I will state the view I have taken, so far as I am personally concerned, on the committee. It is that the Government should stand in its relation to its employees and to persons doing business with it exactly as any private individual or corporation should stand, and, therefore, where a claim is presented and is clearly proved in which, were the Government a private individual or a private corporation, in the circumstances it would be clearly liable, it seems to me we are bound to report favorably upon such a claim, unless the Senate or the Congress shall determine as a matter of policy that it will not allow any damages for personal injury.

But the Senate continues to pass these bills, and it is not for the committee to say whether or not that is a wise policy. We can not say to Senators who send in bills that the Congress will not recognize them, because it continually does recognize them. That being so, we have to assume that that character of claims are legitimate claims, and the only thing we have to investigate is whether the evidence is sufficient to justify reporting the measure favorably.

Perhaps I should say in passing that as far as I am concerned I would not report a personal injury claim favorably unless the evidence were very clear, indeed, because I recognize the fact that you can not always get at the truth as satisfactorily from mere affidavits and ex parte statements as where the witnesses go on the stand in court and are subjected to cross-examination. Therefore, I would require an exceptionally clear case to be made out by affidavits and ex parte statements.

But where the Government has made an investigation, as it did here, where it had a Board of Survey and paid for the damages to the boat, recognizing its liability there, and where it paid the foreigners their claims, recognizing its liability to them, I confess where all the evidence shows as clear a case of negligence as could well be made out, and one in which, if submitted to a jury against a private corporation or an individual, there would be no question about the recovery, its seems to me it is a case on which we ought to report favorably.

We reported to allow the widow $5,000, and if she should be allowed anything I think everybody would agree that she should be allowed that much.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, regarding this claim, the Senator from Oregon has stated the case very clearly. I may say that in my service upon the Committee on Claims, covering some ten years or more, probably less than $40,000 have been paid for claims of a similar character—that is, for personal injuries. Of course, as to its being a precedent, you might apply the same objection to every bill that goes before the Committee on Claims.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

CHAPTER TEN.

THE SLAVE TRADE AND PEONAGE.

Sec.
242. Confining or detaining slaves on board vessel.
243. Seizing slaves on foreign shores.
244. Bringing slaves into the United States.
245. Equipping vessels for slave trade.
246. Transporting persons to be held as slaves.
247. Hovering on coast with slaves on board.
248. Serving in vessels engaged in the slave trade.
249. Serving in foreign vessels engaged in slave trade.
250. Receiving or carrying away any person to be sold or held as a slave.
251. Equipping, etc., vessel for slave trade.
252. Penalty on persons building, equipping, etc.
253. Forfeiture of vessel transporting slaves.
254. Receiving persons on board to be sold as slaves.
255. Vessels found hovering on coast.
256. Forfeiture of interest in vessels transporting slaves.
257. Seizure of vessels engaged in the slave trade.
258. Proceeds of condemned vessels, how distributed.
259. Disposal of persons found on board seized vessel.
260. Apprehension of officers and crew.
261. Removal of persons delivered from seized vessels.
262. To what port captured vessels sent.
263. When owners of foreign vessels shall give bond.
264. Instructions to commanders of armed vessels.
265. Kidnaping.
266. Holding or returning persons to peonage.
267. Obstructing enforcement of preceding section.
268. Bringing kidnaped persons into United States.

SEC. 242. Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any foreign vessel engaged in the slave trade, or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel owned wholly or in part, or navigated for or in behalf of any citizen of the United States, forcibly confines or detains on board such vessel any person as a slave, or, on board such vessel, offers or attempts to sell as a slave any such person, or on the high seas, or anywhere on tide water, transfers or delivers to any other vessel any such person with intent to make such person a slave, or lands or delivers on shore from on board such vessel any person with intent to make sale of, or having previously sold such person as a slave, is a pirate, and shall be imprisoned for life.

SEC. 243. Whoever, being of the crew or ship's company of any foreign vessel engaged in the slave trade, or being of the crew or ship's company of any vessel, owned in whole or in part, or navigated for, on in behalf of, any citizen of the United States, lands from such vessel, and, on any foreign shore, seizes any person with intent to make such person a slave, or decoys, or forcibly brings, or carries or receives such person on board such vessel, with like intent, is a pirate and shall be imprisoned for life.

SEC. 244. Whoever brings within the jurisdiction of the United States, in any manner whatsoever, any person from any foreign kingdom or country, or from sea, or holds, sells, or otherwise disposes of, any person so brought in, as a slave, or to be held to service or labor, shall be fined not more than $10,000, one half to the use of the United States and the other half to the use of the party who prosecutes the indictment to effect; and, moreover, shall be imprisoned not more than seven years.

SEC. 245. Whoever builds, fits out, equips, loads or otherwise prepares, or sends away, either as master, factor, or owner, any vessel, in any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, or causes such vessel to sail from any port or place whatsoever, within such jurisdiction, for the purpose of procuring any person from any foreign kingdom or country to be transported to any port or place whatsoever, to be held, sold, or otherwise disposed of as a slave, or held to service or labor, shall be fined not more than $5,000, one half to the use of the United States and the other half to the use of the person prosecuting the indictment to effect; and shall, moreover, be imprisoned not more than seven years.

SEC. 246. Whoever, being a citizen or other person resident within the jurisdiction of the United States, takes on board, receives, or transports from any foreign kingdom or country, or from sea, any person in any vessel, for the purpose of holding, selling, or otherwise disposing of such person as a slave, or to be held to service or labor, shall be punished as prescribed in the section last preceding.

SEC. 247. Whoever, being the captain, master, or commander of any American vessel found in any river, port, bay, harbor, or on the high seas, within the jurisdictional limits of the United States, or hovering on the coast thereof, having on board any person, for the purpose of selling such person as a slave, or with intent to land such person for any such purpose shall be fined not more than $10,000, and imprisoned not more than four years.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, here is a large body of criminal law in relation to the introduction of persons into the United States for the illegal purpose of selling them into slavery. To anyone looking at these provisions they sound like echoes of the dead past.

I wish the Senator would tell us whether in the investigation by the joint committee, which the Senator so ably represents here, the committee of which he is the Senatorial head, went far enough into this question to find whether its report is dealing with actual present existing conditions, or, as I have said, only with echoes of the past.

Is it believed that to-day there is any necessity for the pages of the criminal code to be encumbered with elaborate provisions preventing the introduction of human beings into the United States for the purpose of being sold into slavery? All the old provisions of law rally around that one distinctive purpose, and around that most inhumane, abominable traffic, the bringing of persons by force and constraint into the United States in order that they might, under then existing conditions, be sold into slavery. If anything has disappeared absolutely into the dead past it is that condition. The animus has gone; the incentive is gone. The conditions here that make the animus and the incentive for this abominable trade profitable have absolutely been wiped out.

I should like to have the Senator tell us whether his joint committee in considering this revision of the criminal code was met by a condition that seems to me apparent, that all these provisions have become what the lawyers call caput mortuum. They are dead matters; and I wish the Senator would tell us why there is any necessity for encumbering the criminal code with provisions in relation with this matter, which is as far beyond our comprehension to-day and beyond our jurisdiction to-day as the conditions of centuries ago. I may be wrong; there may be something still left that makes necessary the prohibition of this traffic, which has been condemned by one civilized nation after another, and which with us, I can suppose, has absolutely disappeared. I may be wrong; but it seems to me that if the Senator had found upon the statute books, lurking there unobserved from the traditions of the past, provisions for the punishment of witchcraft, we would be confronted with a situation not more practical and not less commending itself to our attention and to our legislation than these provisions.

I wish the Senator would tell the Senate why he has thought it advisable to maintain upon our code of criminal laws these old statutes that were enacted in the past upon conditions which have absolutely disappeared and which have, so far as I know, sunk utterly out of sight.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it will be observed that all the five sections which have just been read, being chapter 10, deal with the question of slavery. The existing law was enacted more than one hundred years ago, in 1807, which prohibited the importation of slaves on ships into the United States. It was amended in 1817, in 1818, in 1824, and in 1830. Those statutes constitute the prohibitive legislation against the importation and the holding of slaves in various forms. The language in the law as it is now, found in section 5375, is "any negro or mulatto." I will call the Senator's attention to the language in 5377:

Any negro, mulatto, or person of color.

Those were the two forms in which the parties subject to this prohibitive legislation were classed.

Mr. HALE. That is the designation——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. That is the designation physically of the persons to whom the statutes shall apply. It is not what they shall be subjected to afterwards, but simply a description of them as physical persons. I am not troubled about that. What I am troubled about is that we are keeping upon the statutes a body of laws applying to persons suffering slavery, the persons described in the statute as read by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was coming to that. The existing law, as I have suggested, dealt with persons under the designation of negroes, mulattoes, or persons of color. Now, the conditions that made that legislation necessary have passed away, as suggested by the Senator from Maine. But other conditions have arisen. That suggested to your committee the necessity of still keeping upon the statute books the prohibition against slavery, because while slavery at that time was confined to the persons designated in the prohibitive sections, yet now the slave trade has extended to people who do not come within that designation. It is of comparatively frequent occurrence, unfortunately, that our vessels or the vessels of other countries bring to our shores people who are held in slavery, to be sold in slavery, that do not come within that designation of "negroes, mulattoes, or persons of color." People from Japan, people from China, people from some other Asiatic and European countries are brought here under contract that amounts to slavery, perpetual slavery; brought here for immoral purposes oftentimes, sold as slaves were sold. Whether the designation of "slave" is applied to them in the contract is immaterial. If the effect of their contract is to enslave these people, then it is proper and right that there should continue always to be upon our statute books such prohibitive legislation as will enable the laws to reach such people.

Mr. President, your committee struck out the words "negro, mulatto, or person of color" and inserted the more comprehensive word "persons." So that as the law is reported by your committee and now under consideration, in the five sections just read, the word "persons" is substituted for the more limited designation of "negro, mulatto, or person of color." Many of these people who have been brought to this country even up to the present day for the purposes of slavery, or what amounts to slavery, are not within any of these prohibitive designations. For that reason your committee has thought it necessary, in order to give the courts of the United States power to reach not only individuals who are responsible for the importation of this class of human beings, but also that they may reach the ships and the shipowners that bring them to our shores. That is the purpose, the reason for the action of the committee in reporting this section with the new designation of "persons" as a substitute for the more specific designation "negroes, mulattoes, and colored persons."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can see from the Senator's explanation how the committee have struck out certain physical designations that covered the previous introduction of the negro or his affiliated relations for the purpose of being sold into slavery. Now, I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks substituting the word "persons" for all the classes that were formerly brought here for the purpose of being sold into slavery, the importation of coolies or of persons under contract to labor, or the introduction of persons for immoral purposes is covered by the phrases and limitations contained in all these sections of being brought without consent to a condition of slavery, because if the Senator has reported a body of law that makes the result which he seeks to reach and prohibit, a condition which does not exist and which is not covered by the term "slavery," he has sent to us a series of propositions that will be absolutely inefficacious.

I do not understand—I may be wrong—that the purposes for which these persons, as intimated by the Senator, who are brought here for undesirable, pernicious purposes—I do not understand, under any construction with which I am familiar, that they are brought here for the purposes of slavery, which has been interpreted and which was well understood in the past, and is absolutely and conclusively defined—a certain and specific condition. Now, I do not think, unless better advised, that the purposes for which these other classes are brought—immoral, undesirable as they are—come under any designation that would make them what has been interpreted as covered by the word "slave."

I wish the Senator upon this matter would further enlighten the body as to the reasons for these provisions. He says now that the old classes that were formerly introduced we have parted with; they no more confront us; but there is another class brought here for other purposes. Now, does this apply to committing them to slavery by any actual condition, or does it make absolutely good for nothing the provisions of these sections?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the provisions under consideration do not deal with persons who have made contracts on their own behalf. That is covered by other statutes. They cover only those cases where the parties against their will, rather than pursuant to a contract to which they are a party, are subjected to conditions of slavery. Slavery may exist for a week as well as for a lifetime. In the period of this country's history when slavery was in vogue it was not always the slavery of a lifetime. Sometimes it terminated, under varying conditions, before the close of the lifetime of the party who was the slave.

The class of persons intended to be reached by this proposed legislation is that class of persons who make contracts in oriental or other countries for the services of a party without the consent of the party whose services are to be delivered, and who bring those persons here not always pursuant to a contract before they are brought here, but who bring them here for the purpose of subjecting them to such contracts as may thereafter be made pertaining to them. Whether this service be for manual labor or whether it be for immoral purposes is immaterial; if it is a service enforced upon those parties against their will or without their consent or pursuant to a contract to which they are not a party, all of those conditions would be slavery within the provisions of these five sections.

The bringing in of coolies under contract for labor would come under another law, because the cooly comes as a party to that contract; he comes here of his own free will. The bringing in of any other class of people from any section of the world pursuant to an agreement to which they are a party or of which they have knowledge, who have or will come here and be subjected to work or where their services will be sold, is not slavery within the meaning of these sections. That is contract labor. That is regulated by other statutes, but this criminal statute is intended only to enable the law to reach those who come here without being a party to their coming here or without being a party to the disposition of their services or the control of their rights, whether they be children of irresponsible years and conditions or whether they be people who, because of their environment or the condition of their lives, can not protect themselves. In any such event these five sections are intended to protect them primarily against the ships that bring them here; again, against those who obtain possession of them after they are brought here in the ships or at any period of their existence within our borders. That is the purpose.

It has become particularly necessary that such legislation should be kept upon the statute books, since we have obtained the responsibility as well as the control of some lands in which other customs than those with which we have of late been familiar obtain. It is certainly necessary, in view of that fact, that we have this real weapon of law, which will enable us to protect those helpless people against the oppression of those who would enslave them.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] first made his suggestion I thought it was an excellent one and I thought the reason for it entirely sufficient. Conditions which once called for these statutes have long since become obsolete, and the statutes themselves ought to have been repealed when the conditions in which they originated ceased to exist, but the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], in charge of this bill, has given even a better reason for repealing these statutes than the Senator from Maine at first suggested.

If these statutes are to be maintained as a prohibition against introducing slavery into the United States, and then to be used by the courts to punish and to suppress a wholly different offense, then certainly they ought not to remain upon the statute books. None of the classes indicated by the Senator from Idaho can fairly be classed in any court or by any legislative assembly as slaves. If shipowners contract for the foreigners' labor and bring them here, they will violate the law against the importation of contract labor, and they can be fairly and properly and sufficiently punished under that statute. If they bring a man here and without his consent make a contract for his services which they call upon him to perform, that contract has no more binding force upon his conscience or in the law than if I contracted with somebody that the Senator from Idaho would perform some service for that third person. It is a contract which no man can lawfully make in this country with respect to the work of another man, and even if the other man subsequently ratified it and entered upon the performance of it he could abandon it whenever he pleased, because there is no such thing known to our law as the specific performance of a contract for personal service.

If the Senator seeks to prevent the importation of people for immoral purposes, another statute should be employed to meet that. If the Senator seeks to strengthen our law against the importation of contract labor, I will join him in passing any sensible amendment upon that subject; but to keep a relic of the long ago upon our statute books to remind us of a condition which we all rejoice has forever passed seems to me worse than useless.

I would like to go further. I would like to see the American Congress take from the statute book all of those old enactments relating to slavery and all of those growing out of the bitterness which followed its abolition immediately after the close of the war.

It is one of the curious things, Mr. President, about the Constitution of the United States that the word "slavery" does not appear in it except in the thirteenth amendment, which abolished it. It is said that a Virginia statesman, foreseeing that the time would come when slavery would cease to exist deliberately and carefully excluded the word from the original Constitution, and his example was followed in the first twelve amendments. It is said that Mr. Madison, who perhaps bore a more conspicuous, or, if not a more conspicuous, certainly a more useful part in the work of that convention than any other member of it, not excepting even General Washington or Mr. Franklin, watched every provision and carefully excluded the word "slavery" from the original instrument. If the men who framed the Constitution in that day, foreseeing the time when slavery would cease to exist, carefully kept it from the Constitution, surely their children, or, rather, their children's children, should now take it out of the statutes when it has long since ceased to exist in practice or in theory.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Idaho will accept the very excellent suggestion of the Senator from Maine and let this and all related and kindred provisions drop from this codification of our laws. They are useless, or worse. If they simply seek to deal with slavery, then they are useless, for slavery has not only ceased to exist, but never can be reestablished in this land. If they are to deal with a condition which is not comprehended within the definition or understanding of slavery, then they are worse than useless—they are dangerous—because the courts and officers are thus invited to exercise an authority designed for the suppression of one evil in suppressing what they may consider another but wholly different evil. Let us deal with each condition according to its own demands, and let us not advise the courts that while we are legislating against slavery we mean really to authorize them to suppress and to punish a wholly different offense.

Then, Mr. President, I would like to see this recognition that slavery and all which relates to it is obsolete followed by a generous recognition that the statute books are full of laws passed to meet a condition that, happily, does not now exist. Let them go out, also, until we have a statute book in which there is written no line to remind us of those days following the war and known as the reconstruction era.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, following out what was my original thought, which has been so well amplified by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I will ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], as I did the other day, a question in regard to the method of procedure.

We discovered on examination that certain provisions of the old law were better than the new provisions as reported in the pending measure, and on appealing to the Senator to know by what process we could restore the old provisions, he very readily suggested the method. We are in a way, Mr. President, hampered in the actual, practical consideration of this bill, this large framework of criminal law, by a lack of knowledge as to how to proceed in order to either introduce new matter or eliminate old matter.

Supposing the Senate believes that it would be better to absolutely strike out from the criminal code all of these sections, to leave it tabula rasa, as if these sections had never existed, because the conditions which called them forth do not now exist; supposing, Mr. President, that a motion should be made to strike out all these sections and a majority of the Senate should favor it, what would the Senator say to that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if a bill to repeal these sections were introduced as original legislation in this body, it would go to the standing Committee on the Judiciary. Now, whether or not the Senate would be willing to concede to this joint committee functions that, under the standing rules of this legislative body, belong to the Judiciary Committee I am not prepared to say. Of course it is competent for the Senate at this time, as in Committee of the Whole, to recommend to the Senate, to which this bill shall be reported from Committee of the Whole, that these provisions of existing law be repealed, and it would then be for the Senate to say whether or not they should be repealed without going to a committee.

Mr. HALE. That, Mr. President, is the ordinary process by which we make and enact legislation. We, as in Committee of the Whole, instruct the Senate with the programme the course that shall be pursued, and that is reported to the Senate. But there is no way of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole reporting by resolution to the Senate; it is only done by a vote showing the disposition and purpose of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. So I think that before we depart from the subject I shall move that this entire body of law relating to the introduction of persons for the purpose of committing them to slavery shall be stricken out of the criminal code. If the Senate does not take that instruction, or if the Senate as in Committee of the Whole votes it down, then that is the end of it.

I see no way, Mr. President, of expunging this matter from the existing criminal code, which is supposed to be a living code based upon and operating upon present conditions. I see no way of ridding ourselves of these superfluous sections except by striking them out and when that action is reported to the Senate to await its action.

Mr. President, the Senator has a great deal more knowledge about this code generally than, I may say, anybody or everybody here, but upon this large question, upon which any of us may have views, I should say that the Senator would be instructed, and it would certainly be no reflection upon his committee if the Senate should decide that there is no need longer of encumbering the criminal code with these useless provisions.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am impressed with the thought as to the effect upon the reputation of our Government in the estimation of other nations of the earth, who perhaps do not understand our method of making and repealing laws as well as we do, should we by an affirmative vote repeal the statutes that prevent ships flying our flag from engaging in the slave trade upon the coasts of other countries. The prohibition of the slave trade by any vessel bearing the flag of the United States is included in these sections.

Thank God, slavery in the United States is a thing of the past, and it has passed forever; but there is a sentiment in legislation prohibiting and denouncing slavery that we must not lose sight of. The statutes by which England abolished the slave trade and slave ownership have not been repealed by that country because they have effected their purpose. England is classed among the nations as one in which slavery can not exist by law by reason of the laws enacted by her Parliament and written upon her statute books.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. The United States stands in the same position. I now yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I was just about to say that England, having no constitution, had written it in her statutes; but we, having written it in our Constitution, then it became unnecessary to write it in our statutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the constitution of England is written in her statutes because she has no other place in which to write it. The Constitution of our country bears the same relation to our people as do the statutes of England. We have, in addition to the Constitution, what we may call temporary legislation, using that term without regard to the number of years during which a statute may remain in force. Our statutory law is temporary and may be repealed. Our permanent law is written in the Constitution, and, while it may be changed, it can not be repealed.

Now, Mr. President, I was addressing myself to the consideration of the effect upon the reputation of this country of a broad stroke of the pen that should repeal the declaration and the only declaration against the slave trade and trading in slaves by vessels carrying the flag of our country. I think we should consider most carefully the provisions of existing law, because they do more than prevent the holding of slaves or the sale of them. They guard our flag and our ships that carry it from the reputation and the stain of engaging in the slave trade.

Mr. President, speaking a little further upon the suggestion of the Senator from Maine as to the method of reaching a consideration of the existing law upon this subject, I do not believe that it is the best way to strke out these sections from the code. The committee thought that the time had arrived when every reference to slavery as it was known before the war should be wiped off the statute books, and they undertook to do it. They struck out every reference to the race or color of the party protected by the legislation, and they made it apply to every person, substituting the word "person" for the descriptive words in existing law, thinking it would prohibit it and would leave the record of this country clear against the imputation that a man might engage in the slave trade.

It will be admitted that were the existing law to be repealed, or should we enact this code as a substitute for existing law and leave out of it any prohibition against the sale of slaves or the purchase or holding of slaves or trading in slaves, it would wipe out all provisions against the slave trade.

The constitutional amendment is limited in its language. It does not cover all that is covered by these sections of the statute that it is proposed to strike out. Article XIII, section 1, goes thus far:

> Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.
> SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

What legislation is there upon the statute books carrying into effect the prohibition of the thirteenth amendment? The sections under consideration give life, virility, and meaning to that provision of this Constitution. The sections under consideration dealt not with the holding of slaves within any place over which the United States exercised jurisdiction, but it dealt with the process by which persons were enslaved; the process by which they were gathered and brought from other countries—the trade in slaves that was carried on by our vessels and our seamen.

I do not think it is a complete answer that the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution does all that was sought to be done by the five sections of the Revised Statutes under consideration. I do not think, therefore, that the striking out of these sections would leave this country in a desirable position in the estimation of the other nations of the world, because it would be said by those lacking a thorough comprehension of our methods of legislation and our system of government that the United States Congress had repealed the law against the slave trade and had made it possible for its citizens to engage in that trade by the repeal of existing law. Do we want to be put in that position in the eyes of the other nations of the earth, whether justly or not? Would it have that effect? Is there not an implication, however reasonable or unreasonable, that would arise from the very fact that we were repealing the laws that stood between the people and the slave trade? Can they harm anyone by remaining upon the statute books? They have been there for a hundred years. On the 4th day of March, 1807, the law was enacted. Under the then existing conditions slavery was abolished in this country by the thirteenth amendment, by the proclamation really crystallized in the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution; and all the years have elapsed since that time and it has not been deemed necessary or wise, whether considered upon substantially legal grounds or upon grounds of sentiment, that existing laws should be repealed.

I believe to-day that no one section of this country is more likely than another to reengage in this business. I believe to-day that the enactment of these sections under consideration would be as necessary in their application to the North as to the South, to the East as to the West, but I eliminate all that from the consideration of the question of the propriety of repealing by direct action in the Congress of the United States the law against something which every man in this generation in the civilized world execrates and condemns. I doubt the wisdom of doing it, of sending such a message out to the world.

We can so adjust the law as to remove from it every possible suggestion inimical to the feelings of any section of the country and yet let it stand as a declaration of principle common to all people and let it stand for what it is worth, to protect the infants and the helpless and those who are subjected to what in effect is slavery. The word "slavery" is older than the foundations of this country. It was not originated to apply to the conditions of those held in slavery before the war. There can be no possible sentiment arise out of the term "slavery." It is as old as the human race. While the civilization of the age has led the people's mind away from it and led them to behold it only with abhorrence, yet statutes like these upon our books commend us to the respect of the world.

Mr. SUTHERLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator from Utah proceeds I should like to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to say that I came into the Senate Chamber while the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was delivering a very excellent discourse on the inadvisability of keeping an obsolete law on our statute books, and hearing the reply of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] I was led to believe that the statutes which he proposed to retain are intended to deal with the slave trade as it might exist between this and other countries.

I have just examined these provisions, and I find that some of them are intended to prohibit a vessel of the United States, or carrying the flag of the United States, from engaging in the slave trade between other countries. For instance, I will illustrate my point with the permission of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I find that section 248 by implication excludes the United States. It reads:

SEC. 248. Whoever, being a citizen of the United States, or other person residing therein, voluntarily serves on board of any American vessel employed or made use of in the transportation of slaves from any foreign country or place to another—

The "another" plainly referring to a foreign country or place—shall be fined not more than $2,000 and imprisoned not more than two years.

I agree with the Senator from Idaho that that ought to be retained in the statute book. I am sure the Senator from Maine does not disagree to that, because we want to prohibit our vessels engaging in the slave trade as between other countries. But my solicitude is that our statutes shall contain nothing that recognizes the possibility of a slave trade immediately concerning the people of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when I rose, it was for the purpose of saying that while the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] was speaking I had been examining these provisions, and I find, for instance, that section 244 is confined to cases where persons for the purpose of being committed to slavery are brought to the shores of the United States, which is a condition not existing. I find that other sections provide, in some cases, that no vessel shall engage in the slave trade for the purpose of transporting persons to any other port—and that, of course, is not covered by our conditions. They go further, I find, and certain sections here, to which I have no objection, provide that vessels shall not be fitted out in the United States to engage in this trade anywhere, either here or elsewhere, and the Senator from Idaho is right about it—that those provisions should not be struck out. So the discussion has, I think fortunately, brought out the fact that whilst certain of these conditions and certain of these provisions are obsolete, other conditions do not apply to the introduction of persons to be committed to slavery to the shores of the United States.

Now, I wish right here the Senator from Idaho would give us some information, because I have not had the benefit either of studying this statute or of historic reading in the past, and have not informed myself. What civilized countries or colonies of civilized countries have not, as we have, absolutely abolished slavery, so that it can not be introduced on their shores? In other words, how wide will be the operation of these sections—to which no one of us objects—in any part of the world?

Where to-day will the slaver, the vessel loaded with these unfortunate beings wrested from their homes for the purpose of being sold into slavery for profit—where to-day will the slaver, so loaded, so cursed with this cargo, which was a frequent thing in the days of the past and, I presume, very infrequent to-day, find a lodgment to-day in the civilized world where she is not prohibited, as she is here, from landing her cargo? Where, Mr. President, does a condition of slavery exist that would make it an object to land these unforunate human beings from the deck of a slaver? Has the Senator looked into that?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is said and written unfortunately that in one of the possessions of the United States slavery exists to-day—that is, one of the islands in the Pacific which came to us as the result of the war with Spain. I have not investigated that charge with sufficient care to be able to say how much foundation there is for it, but I think, perhaps, Congress should investigate it and know the facts. I had almost said that I knew—I know from the statement of men on whose word I rely that a condition of slavery exists somewhere in the Philippine Islands; a remnant of conditions that we found there. It should not exist. That is within the language both of the law of 1807 and of all subsequent statutes and within the language of the proposed code, because the language is in the law of 1807:

Every captain, master, or commander of any American vessel found in any river, port, bay, harbor, or on the high seas, within the jurisdictional limits of the United States.

Those provinces are within the jurisdiction of the United States. Suppose, for instance, that a vessel were to engage in collecting slaves upon some of the Philippine Islands—back, perhaps, where they scarcely know that the jurisdiction has changed, where they only know that there was a fight, and do not know a thing about the history or scheme of government under which they live. Suppose a slave vessel were to gather up a few—one or a hundred or a thousand makes no difference in principle—and take them over to the island where that prince reigns in a state that was becoming to the barbarian a thousand years ago and sell them to him. It would be a violation of the existing law. Do we want to repeal the law which would enable us to-day or to-morrow or ten years hence to stop that kind of thing?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or do we want to put ourselves to the necessity of enacting new legislation when we already have legislation which would fit it?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I say no, a hundred times no; and I am glad the Senator in investigating the reach and range upon which this criminal code will apply has brought to us a condition in one of our own dependencies where these old statutes ought to be in force. It is not encouraging, Mr. President, in the presence of the optimistic accounts and advices that have been received from the Philippine Islands, to find that there exists to-day there a condition of human slavery, and that a slaver loaded with human beings may be taken to one of our ports there and find refuge and find market. I am glad that the Senator is one of those misguided persons who object to these conditions; and if the Senator has brought out one of the incidents of this whole melancholy business which shows the actual conditions, he has done something for the benefit of the Senate and the country, too, in furnishing us the information. It had escaped me that such conditions existed there.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am surprised to hear any Senator on the other side, least of all the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is one of the best-posted men in this country, disclaim knowledge of what has been notorious ever since we took possession of the Philippine Islands. Slavery exists in Mindanao and other islands of the Sulu Archipelago; is known to exist there; nobody denies it; and yet the party which has gathered so much glory from the destruction of slavery in this country, which is in absolute control of our affairs, recognizes this, and does nothing to stop it. The mere keeping on the statute books of these laws, which were placed there when slavery existed in the South——

Mr. HEYBURN. And in the North.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; in the North, too.

Mr. HEYBURN. Eighteen hundred and seven.

Mr. TILLMAN. The law is there, and why do not the men responsible for the Philippine government enforce the law?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator says rather tauntingly——

Mr. TILLMAN. Not to the Senator from Maine, because we know his views, but I am merely speaking of him as one of those on the other side who know all about it, who can not deny it, who do not pretend to deny it, and yet the government which they put in power and hold in power does nothing to stop it.

Mr. HALE. I still insist that the Senator said rather tauntingly that slavery exists, present, operative in our possessions in the Philippine Islands, and by inference that nothing has been done to extirpate it.

Mr. President, I do not plead guilty to that knowledge. I see a great many things in the newspapers; I see letters from soldiers and sailors in the Philippine Islands that refer to this condition; I have indeed seen persons who have served there and have been fortunate enough to return with life and health to this country who have indicated it; but in the great volume or volumes of official reports that have been communicated to Congress and through Congress to the public, I do not remember that the existence and tolerance and continuation of human slavery in the Philippine Islands have been noted. It may be that somewhere in these reports, which disclose a harmonious condition, a peaceful condition, a prosperous condition, a virtuous condition, this blot upon the Philippine condition has been brought out. I do not say that it has not, but it has escaped me, and I have never felt that I had been informed or that the Government had knowledge that there exists to-day this old blot upon the human race and that it is tolerated and existing to-day. I have never known that.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question for information, for my memory is not clear about it. Was there not a treaty of some kind made between the representatives of this Government——

Mr. BACON. General Bates.

Mr. STONE. General Bates and the Sultan of Sulu, under the terms of which polygamy and slavery were both recognized and to be continued; and did not that treaty receive the ratification of the Senate and of Congress?

Mr. BACON. Not of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. HALE. I should doubt it, although I do not remember——

Mr. STONE. I did not mean in the form of a treaty.

Mr. HALE. I do not remember in my service in the Senate that any such infamous stipulation has ever been presented to this body for its action.

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it could have come here and have passed, either nem. con. or after discussion.

Mr. STONE. No; I was unfortunate perhaps in the use of the term "ratification." I did not mean that it was presented to the Senate in the shape of a formal treaty, but that it did come before the Congress, and before the Senate as a branch of Congress, in some form.

Mr. TILLMAN. My recollection, if the Senator will permit me, is that the Philippine government reported that an agreement or arrangement had been made with the Sultan of Sulu, by which these two relics of barbarism, slavery and polygamy, were not to be interfered with; and we even went further and put the sultan and his datos, or lords or proprietors or whatever you call them, upon our roll to draw salaries. I think the records will prove that if they do not draw salaries now under that stipulation or agreement they did draw them a few years ago.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if that anomalous, and I may monstrous, condition exists to-day and has received the sanction of this Government or of the Senate, it certainly has not been appreciated by me. It may be because I have been careless and have not watched the progress of things, but I have not been aware that in our beneficent work of civilizing and converting and building up the Philippine Islands as a community we have considered as one of the steps necessary in this march of benevolence and beneficence to recognize human slavery and polygamy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I will direct the Senator's attention to the fact that Congress a good many years ago passed a bill authorizing the President to govern the Philippine Islands as his best judgment might dictate—that is the essence of it—and that, in fact, the Philippine Islands are to-day governed by the Secretary of War under the orders of the President of the United States; and that is all the kind of government they have.

Mr. HALE. But, Mr. President, I do not think the Secretary of War, who is a man of very wide understanding, a good lawyer, and a patriotic man, has ever considered that that condition absolves him from reporting from time to time as to conditions in the Philippine Islands, which reports, either direct or through the President, are supposed to come to both bodies of Congress. I am not prepared to say that the War Department has suppressed important facts and conditions in the Philippine Islands which bear upon the public sentiment with regard to those islands. The presumption is that we have been told the whole truth, and that the government there is in a degree, you may say, almost despotic; yet I think it always has recognized, and I hope it always will recognize, the fact that every condition must be reported fully to Congress for its action.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I used to be a little more familiar with conditions in the Philippines than I am now, because I have not given the matter very much study or consideration in the last half dozen years, in fact; but I am quite sure that a very short while ago the condition of slavery in the Sulu archipelago was well known to the Secretary of War and to all others who took the trouble to investigate conditions there, and, furthermore, that those Mohammedans in that part of our possessions over there are a very bloodthirsty, cutthroat, dangerous sort of people, and that in a large measure our civilizing processes in the Philippines have been confined to Luzon, the island upon which, I believe, Manila is located, and which contains a large proportion of the population of the archipelago.

I am not ready to produce the evidence in regard to the instances of slavery there, but I am ready to make oath that, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, according to the latest reports which I examined on the subject, it did exist there then. I have never heard that it has ceased to exist. I do know that we carried the sultan and some of his noblemen—the datos—on our rolls as officeholders who drew pay, and that altogether the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution has been ignored.

I am very glad that the Senator from Idaho has revived an interest in slavery which appeared to be dying out, and that we will perhaps cause some active agencies in the War Department or elsewhere to take hold of this matter and tell us about it. If it has ceased to exist, I shall be glad to know it. If this statute is applicable to the Philippines, as the Senator from Idaho seemed to infer a little while ago, if I did not misunderstand him, of course we must leave it on the books until this latest relic of barbarism has disappeared from under the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me a moment, as I am called from the Senate? I desire to make a request that will not interfere with the Senator, if he wishes to proceed.

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the consideration of these provisions be passed over for the present, as the Senator from Idaho will not complete the bill, of course, to-day, in order that there may be further investigation in regard to the matter.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER in the chair). If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STONE. Before the sections are passed over I desire just a moment in which to say that during the past summer I spent some weeks in the Philippine Islands and I have some personal knowledge of the conditions there.

Referring to what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has just said, I will state that in the islands occupied by the Filipinos proper, by which I mean the Filipinos as contradistinguished from the Moros, the Igorrotes, and the Negritos, the uncivilized tribes, there is a reasonably high state of civilization. I am sure that there is no such thing as slavery in those islands. I mean now the islands inhabited by the Christianized and civilized Filipinos.

In the southern islands, in the Sulu archipelago, which are occupied for the most part at least by the Moros, I have not any doubt that there is to a limited degree a condition of slavery prevailing. I have not the remotest idea that any ship from anywhere loaded with human beings could be landed or would be permitted to be landed in any port or at any place in the islands. I do not think there is the remotest danger of the importation of slaves into any of the islands. I say I do not think any ships would be permitted to land that were loaded with human beings intended to be sold into slavery there.

I desire to say that I am sure to the limited extent to which slavery does exist it is not in accordance with the law or policy of the United States, but against both, and it exists because of the difficulty of rooting it out and extirpating it in the larger islands of the Sulu archipelago. Those islands are governed by the military; they have no semblance of local government, and it is difficult, almost impossible, for the military arm of the Government to take hold of a question of that kind and settle it entirely and properly.

Mr HALE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. I will take only a moment, and then I shall be through.

I wish to state an incident that came under my observation in the island of Mindanao. On one occasion a party with which I had the honor to be traveling visited a Moro village. We were received, as is usual with those people, somewhat ostentatiously by the dato of the village. I saw there with the dato, as a part of his household, a boy some 12 years of age, about the size of one of the larger of the Senate pages, a very intelligent and handsome fellow, and I was told by Americans residing there that he was a slave of this dato. When we left the little fellow followed us to the waters of the lake, and there was a longing in his face and tears in his eyes and a muttering in a strange language we did not understand, but it sounded like an appeal to us to take him away.

Now, that boy was held, I have not any doubt, in bondage, in practical slavery, and I was told that he had been so held from his infancy. In earlier times the Moros were a warlike people, among whom were many pirates who sailed up northward along the coast of the islands occupied by the Christian Filipinos and ravaged them and took their women and children prisoners. They took them home with them to their own island, made wives of the women and slaves of the children, and the descendants of those unfortunate people—some of them at least, I have not any doubt—are still held in a state of involuntary servitude.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator, as I am called away from the Senate, I have supposed that the condition in this respect in the Philippines is something like what he himself observed, and he was an eyewitness to conditions which show the situation.

I was surprised when the Senator from Idaho indicated that the conditions in the Philippine Islands were such as made it necessary for us to maintain these provisions prohibiting the fitting out of slavers and landing persons to be sold into slavery upon certain coasts of ours.

I do not think that to-day we can get at all the facts. In fact, events crowd so rapidly that it is impossible for Senators to remember all that has taken place here. My memory is infirm as to what action the Senate has taken upon the subject of slavery in the Philippine Islands. We may have in a way recognized these conditions and recognized the existence of slavery, bargained with it, traded with it, and recognized it by treaty, but if we have done so I have no recollection of it. The facts can be ascertained when the matter passes from the Senate to-day, as the Senator from Idaho has agreed that all these provisions may go over for the present. I ask the Senator from Missouri to excuse me for interrupting him, as I am called from the Senate.

Mr. STONE. In conclusion, I will say——

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will state that the entire chapter 10 relates to this subject, and if the sections under consideration go over, I think it would be better for the chapter to go over.

Mr. HALE. That will be better.

Mr. HEYBURN. And we will proceed to matters which are not controverted.

Mr. STONE. I will say simply in conclusion that I do not believe for a moment it is necessary to continue on the statute book the section under consideration in order to prevent the fitting out of slave vessels on Philippine shores or to prevent the landing of slave vessels on Philippine shores. I think either contingency an utter impossibility.

Mr. HALE. The Senator thinks the institution is local?

Mr. STONE. I think it is local.

Mr. HALE. And is not being extended.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I quite agree with what appears now to be the consensus of opinion, that it is necessary that a part of this chapter should be retained, in order that the laws of a general nature for the suppression of the African slave trade or to guard against its revival may be retained in force. I also quite agree with the proposition, which I think likewise meets with the general consensus of the Senate, that so far as these statutes relate to slavery in the United States they ought to be eliminated, because their retention is to a certain degree a recognition of the possibility of the revival of an institution which is now desired by no one.

I have looked through the chapter while the debate was going on, and I think possibly with the exception of four sections the act is of an entirely general nature, relates generally to the slave trade, and has no reference to slavery in the United States or any possession of the United States.

If I may have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill (I am sorry to say that there is a Senator between me and him, and I can not see him), I am making this statement simply with a view of suggesting to the committee, if I may be pardoned for doing so, what may be properly eliminated, because I understand that probably before we shall have the subject again under consideration the members of the committee, at least those representing this branch of Congress, will be considering the question.

I do not agree with the suggestion that the retention of any part of this chapter is necessary in order to guard against the revival of slavery in any of our outlying possessions.

There is no question, I suppose, about the main facts being true, as stated here to-day, that immediately after the Spanish war and the acquisition of the Philippine Islands there was a treaty made by General Bates with the Sultan of Sulu under the terms of which slavery as well as polygamy was recognized and was not prohibited. I do not know in what way the change was made, but I have been told by a military officer who was active in the Philippine Islands, and I know there has been a change to a degree; that that part of the treaty is no longer recognized as binding; that the United States does not recognize slavery in those islands, and that there have been the most active, and in some measure I may say harsh, means adopted and put into execution for the suppression of slavery. So there is no such general condition of it there and no such recognition of it there as would make it possible that there could be any effort to either fit out slavers in the islands or to bring slave cargoes to the islands.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] hands me the treaty, with which I was once familiar, and which, in fact, I think almost every Senator who was in the Senate at that time will very clearly recollect. It is the treaty made by General Bates with the Sultan of Sulu, in which there is said to be a very interesting set of signatures. This is the treaty in which, as referred to by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], a certain salary was paid not only to the Sultan of Sulu, but to numbers of his officials. But that is past, absolutely past, and it is not recognized now by the Government of the United States.

I repeat, I do not know in what way the obligatory features of the treaty were gotten rid of, but I know from an officer of high rank, who has been active in the operations in the Philippine Islands, that that has been absolutely annulled. The treaty has been denounced in that regard, and there has been an active suppression of slavery in the Sulu Islands by the military forces of the United States.

I know, furthermore, that some years ago, before the active operations by the Army of the United States, there was even among some of the Sulus themselves the abolition of slavery. There was a very celebrated dato in the town of Zamboanga, on the island of Mindanao, known very well to almost every one who has ever visited the Philippine Islands—Dato Mandy was his name—who abolished slavery in his particular jurisdiction; and I myself saw some of the practical workings of it.

So I do not think there are any conditions in the Philippine Islands to-day which would warrant the possible suggestion that the retention of any part of these statutes is necessary in order to prevent the revival of slavery in the Philippine Islands, to prevent any expedition being fitted out there for the purpose of engaging in the slave trade, or to prevent the landing of any cargo of slaves. I have no idea there would ever be any attempt of any kind of that nature.

I want to ask the attention of the committee to the fact that sections 244, 247, 250, and 268, if I am correct in the hasty reading which I have been able to give to it, are the only sections in this chapter which in any manner relate to the possibility of slavery in the United States or any possession of the United States. I think those sections should be eliminated. The remaining sections relate to the suppression of the slave trade generally. They are sections which would be found upon the statute book of Great Britain, as well as upon the statute book of the United States, and they relate not only to the attempt to carry on the slave trade by our own vessels, but by any foreign vessel. Any vessel engaged in it is denominated a pirate, a common enemy of mankind and of civilization, and any government is justified in dealing with it as they would with a pirate, regardless of the flag under which it sailed. So that I think those sections should be retained. But the four sections to which I refer relating solely to questions affecting the United States, or territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, should, in my opinion, be eliminated in order that the possible recognition of the fact of the existence of slavery might not be found in the statute books.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may interrupt the Senator a moment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator, I believe, was a member of this body when the treaty came before it.

Mr. BACON. I was.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, the treaty made between General Bates and the Sultan of Jolo?

Mr. BACON. No; it was never submitted to the Senate for ratification. It was sent to us as a matter of information, but never submitted as a treaty.

Mr. HEYBURN. If we take it only as a memorandum of conditions.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Article 10 of that agreement negotiated by General Bates reads:

Art. X. Any slave in the archipelago of Jolo shall have the right to purchase freedom by paying to the master the usual market value.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. "The market price"——

Mr. BACON. There is also—I have not read it in six years, but I recollect it—another provision that nothing in it should conflict with the thirteenth amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. In connection with that I should like to have it appear that in the communication sent to this Government by General Bates respecting the making of this treaty he recites:

The market price of slaves in the archipelago is insignificant, ranging from 30 to 90 dollars Mexican—

That is Mexican money, I suppose—and in some instances owners will be pleased to grant freedom to their slaves if they can escape the burden of supporting them.

I merely read that as a memorandum of the conditions I had in mind when I made the remarks in reply to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly, Mr. President, nobody would suspect for a moment that General Bates, or any other officer of the United States, desired to continue slavery in those islands. They were dealing with conditions, and I have no doubt dealt with them as best they could under the circumstances; but the fact remains that even the provisions read by the Senator from Idaho recognize the fact of the existence of slavery, and recognize the right of the parties with whom we were dealing to continue slavery, because they provided the machinery by which slaves could themselves purchase their freedom, which could only, of course, be reconciled to the recognition of the fact of the legal obligation of slavery.

But those are merely matters of history—what might be called "back numbers" so far as one part of it is concerned, for the slavery which exists there to-day is of a sporadic nature. It is that which is in some degree secret, or in inaccessible parts of the islands, and can not in any manner contribute to the possibility of any organized effort through an expedition either to export or import slaves in those islands, and consequently can not, in my judgment, find a sufficient basis upon which to rest the contention that this provision in the law should be retained to guard against such a possibility. Therefore, I hope they may be eliminated.

I want to say one other word, Mr. President, in this connection—one thought which has not yet been suggested. It is this: I recognize fully the fact that the statutes, so far as they relate to the general subject of the slave trade, should remain on the books. I recognize the fact that if there is any imperfection in that part of the statutes which relate to the subject they should be made perfect, and therefore that the revision of them is proper. But, Mr. President, when it comes to dealing with matters which relate particularly to the question of the possibility of slavery in this country, there are but two courses which may be adopted. One is to leave the statutes as we find them now. That would be the less objectionable course, if they are to be left in any shape, because they would simply be passed over as possibly superfluous matter. But if those statutes which relate to the possibilities of slavery in the United States should be revised and reenacted by the Congress, it would be very pertinent in its suggestion that it was recognized that there might still be a possibility that the law, even as it stood, was not sufficient, but that it must be revised and reenacted in order to make the law efficacious for guarding against such a possibility. Therefore, as to these particular sections which relate to the United States, if there is to be any recognition whatever, I would prefer that they remain as they are rather than that by revising them we should appear to be giving countenance to the possibility that there could be any reasonable apprehension of the revival of slavery, or its existence in any manner, shape, or form in the United States.

I do not think it is necessary that we should decide between those two alternatives, because, at the risk of repetition, I will repeat there is no such condition either in the United States or in any territory in the world subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as makes it necessary that those sections should be retained in any shape in order to guard against the possibility of a revival of slavery. Therefore, I hope that, while the remainder of the statute may be revised and put in the best shape possible and retained, just as Great Britain keeps upon her statute books, and as every other civilized nation, I think—certainly every other maritime nation—keeps upon its statute books laws with reference to the suppression of slavery, but that there may be eliminated the four sections which are not necessary.

I want to say one other word, Mr. President, which I trust the committee will pardon me for suggesting. Even if the committee should differ from us who think that there is no such condition in any of the possessions of the United States as makes the possibility of the revival of slavery, the general provisions of the law which would still remain upon the statute book if these four sections were eliminated would be sufficient to deal with such condition if it should arise.

I presume, Mr. President, the matter is now to be passed over and that it will come up for further consideration. Therefore, I have now nothing more to say about it. I have only occupied the time of the Senate in view of the fact that the committee will probably be considering the amendments to this chapter before we again have it under consideration in the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before we finally pass from this subject I want to say a word, and a word only. It has been suggested here that perhaps the committee should have reported in favor of repealing the various provisions of the law with reference to the traffic in slaves. Of course, the committee had that power; it was within the scope of its duties; but I think the Senate will agree that while the committee had the power to recommend the repeal of existing law, it was a power which should be exercised very sparingly and only for very good and very sufficient reasons. I find, in running over these various sections, that as late as 1874 it was deemed by Congress that they were not sufficient even at that late date to cover the various phases of the slave traffic. In 1874, on June 23, Congress found it necessary to supplement the then existing law with reference to slavery and enacted a law, the first section of which reads:

That whoever shall knowingly and willfully bring into the United States, or the Territories thereof, any person inveigled or forcibly kidnaped in any other country, with intent to hold such person so inveigled or kidnaped in confinement or to any involuntary service, and whoever shall knowingly and willfully sell, or cause to be sold, into any condition of involuntary servitude, any other person for any term whatever, and every person who shall knowingly and willfully hold to involuntary service any person so sold and bought, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding five years and pay a fine not exceeding $5,000.

As I have said, that law was passed in 1874, and it was deemed that existing laws were not sufficient to cover the subject. We do not have to go very far to find the reason for that. The law which was in existence at that time had reference to the importation of slaves of color, while in 1874 it was broadened so as to include all persons whomsoever.

It is not to be supposed that Congress in 1874, long after this general condition that has been spoken of here had passed away, at that late date would pass a law of that kind unless it was deemed necessary to do so.

Senators from the Pacific coast will bear me out when I say that there are to-day many cases of slavery on the Pacific coast among Chinese. Chinese girls are imported and are bought and sold for money on that coast.

Mr. BACON. But not compelled to service.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not for what?

Mr. BACON. Not for slavery in its ordinary purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not to labor.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The language of the act is "involuntary servitude."

Mr. BACON. But we have other statutes which would cover the case to which the Senator alludes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The statute, I have no doubt, was passed to cover that particular phase of the matter. I know of one particular case—because it came under my own personal observation in my own State—where a habeas corpus proceeding was brought against a Chinaman in one of the mining camps, against whom it was charged that he had imported two certain Chinese girls from China and that he had sold them to some other Chinamen in that mining camp. The case was brought——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recognize the fact that we have other statutes which entirely cover that subject.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know of any statute which covers every phase of the subject.

Mr. BACON. The Senator speaks about what occurred in 1874. It will not do——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was calling attention to that statute for the purpose of showing that long after the war it was deemed necessary by Congress to supplement the then existing laws so as to extend the slavery laws to a class of persons that were not comprehended within them at the time they were originally passed one hundred years ago.

Mr. BACON. The Senator draws a conclusion which I think is not warranted when he says that statute was passed in 1874 for the purpose of reaching the particular kind of case which he has just illustrated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not make that statement.

Mr. BACON. That is a mere supposition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And I think the Senator will find if he will look through the legislation of Congress from 1868 to 1876 a good many statutes which did not find their basis in any necessity of the Government, but which found their inspiration from political motives, and on account, if you please, to put the most charitable construction upon it, of a very great misunderstanding of some parts of the country as to conditions in other parts of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whether the Senator is right about that or I am right in my supposition—for, as the Senator says, it was only a supposition—Congress deemed it necessary at that time to pass that law. I am simply calling attention to that among other things. The case that I referred to—the Chinese case—happened only a very few years ago. So I speak of these matters because I think they illustrate that we ought to be very careful before we repeal any of the existing laws, and I do not think the Senate ought to undertake to do it upon a discussion of this character. If it is deemed——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, if it is desirable that these sections ought to be repealed, I think it ought to be done in the usual manner. Let a bill be introduced directed to that end, and let it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with power to investigate, so that they may communicate with the judiciary department. Perhaps there may be very grave need for the existence of these laws, and it seems to me that we ought not to attempt to repeal the existing statutes in this manner without some further investigation.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I do not wish to be misunderstood, and of course the Senator does not wish that I should be. My proposition is this: That the general provisions of the law with reference to the slave trade will absolutely cover every possible case which may arise, even if it is connected with this country. They would just as surely affect and control any question of importation of slaves to the United States as they would the carrying of a slave to Cuba or anywhere else. In other words, it would leave the law in its general provisions to be applied to conditions here as well as to conditions elsewhere; but it would simply eliminate from the statute book, without in any manner emasculating the law, provisions which relate more particularly to this country than to any other country. In other words, I think it ought to be left so that the law against the slave trade would apply in its terms just as clearly to any attempt to introduce slaves into the United States as it would if an American man-of-war were to arrest a ship going to any country in South America, and that there is no more reason why the United States should be mentioned than that any country of South America should be mentioned.

The general provisions of these statutes, other than those which relate directly to the United States, cover every possible phase of the attempt to revive or to carry on the slave trade. They cover a case where a ship carrying an altogether different flag seeks to carry slaves to Africa or to South America or to China, and would just as effectually cover the case of a ship seeking to bring them into the United States. There is no more reason why the United States should be mentioned in the law with reference to the suppression of the slave trade than there is that our law should mention South America or any country of South America, because the general provisions of this law give just as much power to the United States Government to suppress an attempt to carry a slave to South America as they do to bring a slave into the United States. It is not necessary to mention South America. Why is it necessary to mention the United States? The law is general. It treats every vessel which engages in the slave trade as a pirate. It matters not under whose flag it sails or from what country it is fitted out, and it matters not to which country it is going, it has absolutely as perfect power to treat it as a pirate and to treat the crew as pirates. With that general and perfect power as to any ship under any flag leaving any port in the world and going to any port in the world, why, when all the other ports in the world are omitted, should there be any mention of ports in the United States, when the law will just as thoroughly cover a case where they are coming to the United States as if they were going to South America?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that the four sections to which he refers are covered by any other provisions of law.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator will on examination——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In just a moment I will. The particular section to which the Senator referred deals with the subject of the slave trade within the United States. The other sections deal with the slave trade with foreign countries or the fitting out of ships and matters of that character.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me just to say one other word, I will complete all I have to say upon this subject.

I have called attention to some cases which existed upon the Pacific coast. I suggest to the Senator that the fact that the law may not be violated for a good many years, or the fact that it is very seldom violated, is no reason why it ought to be repealed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was unfortunately out of the Senate when this debate began, but I understood from something I heard when I came in that there had been some question as to slavery in the Philippines; that our old friend the sultan of Jolo and his treaty with General Bates had been revived on this floor, and that the question had been asked as to the existence of slavery in those islands. That question was very fully debated, Mr. President, eight years ago, and that treaty became very familiar to Senators. I am therefore surprised that the facts in regard to it should have been so quickly forgotten.

It is well known to all Senators who have taken part in the Philippines debate that in the island of Jolo, in the Moro province of Mindanao, among the Mohammedan inhabitants of the Philippines there existed what was known as debt slavery. General Bates made the agreement with the sultan of Jolo when he first took possession of the island, which, I dare say has been quoted here to-day, and which in a way might have been said to have recognized the existence of slavery there by a provision that the slave might purchase his freedom. That there may be no possible misunderstanding from anything that has arisen in this debate, I should like to put the facts upon the record. President McKinley refused to approve the Bates treaty and shortly afterwards slavery was practically abolished by Executive military order. When we came to pass the organic act, as it is called, the act of July 1, 1902, which occupied the Senate for many weeks of debate and of which I had charge upon the floor, the following provision was incorporated:

> That neither slavery, nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist in said islands.

That act of Congress is organic law and abolished slavery by law, which had already been practically eradicated or abolished by military order. But that was not all. On the 24th of September, 1903, acting, I presume, under the organic act, the Philippine Commission passed an act, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD with the remarks I am now making, by which a heavy punishment is imposed on everyone who buys, who sells, or otherwise disposes of any person as a slave, or who engages in the slave trade. I ask that the whole act be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The act referred to is as follows:

Act No. 8.

An act defining the crimes of slaveholding and slave hunting, and prescribing the punishment therefor.

By authority of the Philippine Commission, be it enacted by the legislative council of the Moro Province, that:

SECTION 1. Every person who buys, holds, sells, or otherwise disposes of any person as a slave, or who, directly or indirectly, causes any person to be held in involuntary servitude, except as provided by law, is guilty of slaveholding, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years and be fined not more than ₱10,000 Philippine currency.

SEC. 2. Every person who buys, captures, abducts, or receives any person with intent to sell or otherwise dispose of such person as a slave, or to cause such person to enter into involuntary servitude, or who knowingly aids or abets the recapture or detention of any person escaped from slavery for the purpose of returning such person to a condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, or who knowingly owns or is employed upon or has any interest in any vessel used or employed in the transportation of any person for the purpose of causing such person to enter into slavery or involuntary servitude in the Moro Province or elsewhere, is guilty of slave hunting, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned for not more than twenty years and be fined not more than ₱10,000 Philippine currency.

SEC. 3. Any vessel employed with the knowledge and consent of the owner in the transportation of any person from or into the Moro Province, or within the limits of the same, for the purpose of disposing of such person as a slave or of causing such person to enter into involuntary servitude in the Moro Province or elsewhere, and any property, shelter, subsistence, arms, animals, or equipments employed, with the knowledge and consent of the owner, in the trafficking in, hunting, capturing, or recapturing of slaves, shall be subject to confiscation, and upon due proof and after due sentence before the proper court shall be sold at public auction. The proceeds of such sale shall constitute a part of the funds of the Moro Province.

SEC. 4. Nothing in this act shall be construed as countenancing or recognizing the legality of slavery or involuntary servitude as heretofore existing in the Moro Province, or as exempting or excusing any person who may have heretofore committed any of the acts defined and punished in this act as slaveholding or slave hunting from prosecution and punishment under the laws of the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 5. Subject to annulment or amendment by the Philippine Commission, this act shall take effect on its passage.

Enacted September 24, 1903.

Mr. LODGE. Nothing could be more complete, Mr. President, than the abolition of the form of debt slavery which we found in those islands when they came into our possession. That is the record. It is a very simple and, I think, a very conclusive one.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I thought the Senator was through, but, as I see he is not, I will interrupt him simply to say that, if the Senator had been in the Chamber all the time during the debate, I think he would have found that while we did not go into details, substantially it had been stated, as he has now narrated it in detail, that while the original Bates treaty did recognize slavery, it had been in one way or another abolished by the Government and was no longer recognized and no longer in force.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is not a question of slavery being in one way or another abolished by the Government. President McKinley refused to approve the treaty. He then issued a military order against slavery, and that was followed by legislation here and in the Philippine Islands. Nothing could be more complete. It is an old story; but as the question has been raised, I think it just as well to make it explicit.

Mr. President, I have been listening to what has just been said, and I think this act of the Philippine Commission illustrates very well the importance of retaining the sections to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has been referring. This organic act, which may be taken as the constitution of the Philippine Islands, provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist; but that act is not self-executing any more than our Constitution is self-executing. So the Philippine Commission passed a statute in order to punish and to put an end to any attempt at slaveholding. I rather think it has all ended in those islands. I am certain that the slave trade is ended, and since we took possession of Mindanao and Jolo, I think it has been also extirpated in those islands. If it is carried on at all, it is only in concealment and furtively, without the knowledge of the Government.

The fact, Mr. President, that slavery has long ceased to exist in this country does not seem to me to justify the abolition of statutes such as I understand those to be about which the Senator from Utah has been speaking. There are people who may be guilty of the crimes which those statutes are designed to punish. The Senator referred to a case on the Pacific coast where the Chinese were involved some years ago. I was on a committee of the Senate which investigated the question of the importation of Italian boys into this country. I have been reminded of it by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I happened to be one of those who made investigation into what was known as the padrone system. The padrones were men in New York who brought boys out from Italy and let them out for various purposes—shoeblacks, and one thing and another of that sort—and the boys were held in a condition of practical slavery. We have tried to meet some of these difficulties by our immigration laws, but the fact that slavery has been abolished, the fact that it is a crime, does not seem to me to make it desirable, therefore, to do away with all the statutes which were designed to punish the crime and which make it a crime.

The declaration of the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution is not of itself sufficient; and in the same way in which the Philippine Commission has passed the statute providing for the punishment of the crime of slavery, which is abolished by the general provision of the organic act, so I think that statutes of similar nature on the statute books of the United States should remain in order to prevent crimes of that character, whether they occur among the Chinese immigrants or whether among the padrones who exist in New York and in some of our other large cities.

I was merely going to add, Mr. President—and I am again indebted to the Senator from Pennsylvania for the suggestion—that article 13 of the amendments to the Constitution provides:

SECTION I.

Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

That language is repeated in the organic Philippine act.

SECTION II.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

That clause contemplated legislation, the object being, of course, to have methods of punishing an infraction of the Constitution. The Constitution itself contains no method of carrying out its own provisions. I do not suppose a man could be indicted under a clause of the Constitution, nor his punishment defined, and it is necessary, therefore, that these provisions should remain in the statute.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment right on this subject, as I have before me the order issued by the authority of the President of the United States, Mr. McKinley, through the Secretary of War, to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, I will read it, in order that it may come in in this connection, so that the extent to which it was repudiated may be distinctly known. I have no object in the world except that the truth of history may be known.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the President, Mr. McKinley, whom I would in nowise do injustice, a man to whom I was personally very sincerely attached and whose memory I revere, did not approve that part of the treaty. He did not disapprove the treaty in toto, but accepted it with a proviso, and while refusing to be held responsible for the existence of slavery, nevertheless recognized the fact that it was there. I will read the order. It is quite short. It is addressed to Maj. Gen. E. S. Otis, commanding United States forces in the Philippines. It says:

SIR: The President instructs me to advise you that the agreement signed August 20, 1899—

Which immediately precedes the order—

between Brig. Gen. John C. Bates, representing the United States, of the one part, the Sultan of Jolo, the Dato Rajah Muda, the Dato Attik, the Dato Calbi, and the Dato Joakanain, of the other part, is confirmed and approved, subject to the action of Congress provided for in that clause of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain which provides "The civil rights and the political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress," and with the understanding and reservation, which should be distinctly communicated to the Sultan of Jolo, that this agreement is not to be deemed in any way to authorize or give the consent of the United States to the existence of slavery in the Sulu Archipelago, a thing which is made impossible by the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. At the time when you communicate to the Sultan the above-mentioned understanding, the President desires that you should make inquiry as to the number of persons held in slavery in the archipelago, and what arrangement it may be practicable to make for their emancipation. It is assumed that the market price referred to in the agreement of August 20, 1899, is not very high at present, and it may be that a comparatively moderate sum, which Congress might be willing to appropriate for that purpose, would suffice to secure freedom for the whole number.

It is needless to suggest that the inquiry should be prosecuted in such a way as not to create the impression that we now have authority to make such an arrangement, and in such a manner as not to create extravagant expectations.

Very truly, yours,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for just a moment. It is unfortunate the Senator from Massachusetts did not hear the entire debate. I myself took occasion to say—I was not the one who started that part of the discussion by any means; rather I was the last one who had anything to say on the subject—that no one would suppose for a moment that any officer of the Government of the United States desired that there should be slavery there or had desired that there should be, and that they had dealt with conditions which were difficult, and that they had done the best they could.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I said, not as exactly as I should, that the President disapproved the agreement made by General Bates. I meant, of course, the clauses relating to slavery. I never heard the rest of the agreement called in question at all. He did disapprove of the clauses relating to slavery, as the Senator has just read the order, and stated that of course that could not be recognized under the Constitution of the United States. It was put an end to then, and, so far as the slave part of the agreement is concerned, it was disapproved from the beginning.

Mr. HEYBURN. Pursuant to an understanding had with some Senators who have been obliged to leave the Chamber, I ask that all of chapter 10 be temporarily passed over and that we proceed with the consideration of chapter 11.

Mr. CARTER. I rise to ask if it will inconvenience the Senator if the Senate should proceed at this time to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator that if we could continue until half past 4 we would make some headway and probably pass some obstacles that would clear the way.

Mr. BACON. It is now a quarter past 4. There is some executive business, I understand, and all of us have work to do after that is over. So I hope the Senator from Idaho will not insist upon going on further this afternoon.

Mr HEYBURN. I will not insist to the inconvenience of the Senate, of course.

I desire to say at this time that after to-morrow I will necessarily be absent for probably not to exceed two days, and that during that time I shall feel compelled to ask the Senate to carry over the unfinished business in its place. I presume that can be done without difficulty under the rules. I was anxious to reach a certain point. But I will not, at the inconvenience of the Senate, ask that we proceed further. I therefore ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 28, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 27, 1908.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 27, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 24, 1908, was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14040) to authorize the county of Ashley, State of Arkansas, and her citizens, to wit, S. R. Bulloch, Z. T. Hedges, and others, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WALLACE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the said county of Ashley, and her citizens aforesaid, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a steel drawbridge and approaches thereto across Bayou Bartholomew, a navigable river, at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also the following amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "said" and strike out the words "and her citizens aforesaid," in the same line.

In line 4, page 1, strike out the words "they are" and insert in lieu thereof the words "it is."

Amend the title of the bill as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 strike out the words "and her citizens, to wit: S. R. Bulloch, Z. T. Hedges, and others."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 15219) entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909," which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. J. Res. 104, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes," approved March 9, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, continued in full force and effect for two years from this date.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the gentleman that when this act was passed two years ago I called the attention of the House to the fact that I feared it would affect the care of the Confederate mound at Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago. Since that time there is talk of absolutely ruining that place under the mandatory provision of the original act, and for that reason I want it taken care of when this joint resolution passes. Therefore, for the present, I shall object, simply in order to take care of that proposition.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, then I ask to have the joint resolution recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PARLIAMENTARY STATUS OF CERTAIN BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill H. R. 11776 and the bill S. 2872 should be on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] makes the point of order that the bills referred to are improperly on the Union Calendar, and should be referred to the House Calendar. The Clerk will read the titles.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11776) for the opening of Jefferson and Fifth streets NW., District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2872) to amend an act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan states that the two bills, the titles of which have been read, are improperly on the Union Calendar, and should be placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Neither of these bills appropriate any Government money or Government land.

Mr. MANN. Ah, Mr. Speaker, but they involve a charge upon the Treasury, when you put a man on the retired list.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This money is from the pensions of the men in the police department and in the fire department.

Mr. MANN. Well, here is a proposition to put a man on retired pay—not a pension at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but the General Government does not pay the expense.

Mr. MANN. Well, the General Government has to pay one-half of the expense and the District of Columbia the other half; and this is a proposition to create a new retired-pay list in the fire department. If that does not involve a charge on the Government, I do not know what would.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is too remote—simply because the General Government pays half the expense. This money is raised from funds of the fire department and police department. The same question was up last year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on page 2 the amendment proposed by the bill provides that the present chief engineer shall receive as retired pay a sum equal to one-half of the salary allowed by law at the date of retirement. That is not a pension; it is a retired-pay proposition; not as an amendment to the pension bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And that is paid from the pensions of these men.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in here showing that it is paid from the pensions of these men. It is a positive provision that a man shall receive retired pay.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is following the Army and Navy, and it will go all through the Departments if you do not check it.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the act of Congress that is proposed to be amended? This is a question of fact to be determined. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Michigan, and also the gentleman from Illinois, under the law as it now is, Is the Federal Treasury bound in any way or chargeable in any way for the relief of the policemen referred to?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not so understand. If I did I would not have made the point of order. Under those circumstances it would unquestionably go to the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read section 4 of the act which is amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, out of receipts from fines in the police court and receipts from dog licenses, a sufficient amount to meet any deficiency in the policemen's fund or firemen's fund: Provided, That the chief engineer of the fire department and all other officers of said department of and above the rank of captain, the superintendent, assistant superintendent, any captain or lieutenant of police, in case of retirement as now provided by law, shall receive relief not exceeding $100 per month; and in case of the death from injury or disease of any member of the police or fire department, if he be unmarried and leave a dependent mother, who is a widow, the same shall be for her relief during the period of widowhood, or if he leave a widow, or children under 16 years of age, the same shall be for their relief during the period of widowhood, or until such children reach the age of 16 years: Provided, That in no case shall the amount paid to such dependent mother or widow exceed $50 per month, nor shall the amount paid for a child exceed $25 per month.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Michigan, Where does the money that is required for these funds come from?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From dog fees, etc.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. From police court fines, fees for dog licenses, and an assessment of a dollar a month against each member of the department—half of the money out of the Treasury of the United States and the other out of the District treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands from the statement of the gentleman from Ohio the act that this bill seeks to amend is an act that amends another provision of the law which deals with the pension fund of the firemen.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Firemen and policemen.

The SPEAKER. Now, this original law the Chair has not before him; but the gentleman from Ohio states that the fund is supplemented by an assessment of a dollar a month from the pay of the firemen. How are the firemen paid—out of the Federal Treasury and the District funds?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. They are paid out of the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is this dollar a month ever paid to the firemen?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It is paid in by the Commissioners.

The SPEAKER. Retained by the Government from the salary of the firemen, in the Treasury, and never paid?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. It is retained, and paid into this fund.

The SPEAKER. Then it is money which would seem to be controlled like that under all legislation in behalf of the District, one-half from its revenues and one-half from the Federal Treasury; never, in point of fact, paid to the firemen, but retained by the Government from the money of the United States and the money of the District?

Mr. MADDEN. Then, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the amount of money retained out of the salaries of the firemen, the police court fines and moneys raised from sources of that kind are added to this fund from which this pension is to be paid, and the amount of money, even though it was never put in the Treasury of the United States, that is deducted from the salaries of the firemen would not be sufficient to pay the pensions that are required to be paid, and consequently there can be no doubt but that money out of the Treasury of the United States is required to be taken for the payment of these pension allowances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that there are several laws involved in disposing of the point of order. It seems to the Chair, at least so far as these particular bills are concerned, that it makes but little difference on which Calendar they are placed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; we care more about having the precedent established than anything else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that possibly he had better withdraw his point.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will withdraw it as to Senate bill 2872, but what about H. R. 11776?

The SPEAKER. The bill that the gentleman refers to, H. R. 11776, as it was introduced and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, did provide:

SEC. 3. That there is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

Now, the Committee on the District of Columbia reports this bill back with an amendment striking out the clause that charges the Federal Treasury with the payment of the damages or the expenses. The Chair submits to the gentleman that the bill that the committee recommends for amendment does make a charge upon the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair takes it that the bill is properly on the Union Calendar. If the bill introduced did not make a charge upon the Treasury, the Chair would sustain the point of order; but whether the House may adopt the amendment recommended by the committee the Chair, of course, can not tell.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business, with Mr. STERLING in the chair.

TEMPORARY TRACKS TO UNION STATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 10446) to provide for temporary street railway connection with the Union Railroad Station in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington Railway and Electric Company and the Capital Traction Company, of the District of Columbia, be, and they are hereby, authorized and required, jointly, to construct, maintain, and operate, by overhead trolley, temporary railway tracks for passenger service from the Union Station to the intersection of North Capitol and C streets north, said tracks to be constructed within sixty days from the date of the approval of this act and in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; said tracks to be maintained and operated by said companies to the satisfaction of said Commissioners and to be removed by said companies, after the construction of permanent street-railway tracks to said station, within thirty days after notice from said Commissioners so to do.

SEC. 2. That neither the Washington Railway and Electric Company nor the Capital Traction Company shall charge any extra fare for any passenger carried over the line herein provided for, but shall transfer from their existing lines of street railway to the temporary connection herein provided for without extra charge, any rule of either of said railway companies against issuing a transfer upon a transfer to the contrary notwithstanding.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "required" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Amendments are not in order as yet.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] made the report in this case, I yield to him.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the bill must be read for amendment. There are only two sections to it.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is in order on the bill.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that some gentleman ought to explain the bill under general debate.

Mr. SIMS. I will proceed to do that. If the members of the committee will give me their attention briefly, I think I can explain this bill so that it can be thoroughly understood.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I have an amendment which I would like to have read and considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] asks unanimous consent to submit an amendment to be read for information.

Mr. SIMS. And he desires to have it considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all companies or corporations which now are or shall hereafter be engaged in the operation of street cars within the District of Columbia shall have equal rights and privileges in relation to the passage of street cars over the tracks herein authorized and directed to be constructed upon payment of reasonable compensation for such use. In case of any disagreement between companies or corporations concerning the terms of such use or the sums to be paid therefor all matters at issue shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia. In determining what is a reasonable compensation for the use of such tracks no account shall be taken of the value of the franchise of any company or corporation involved in the determination; but such compensation shall be based solely upon the actual value of the physical property used and the reasonable cost of its maintenance.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the object of this bill as I understand it. It is well known to Members of the House who have been here in prior Congresses that a number of years ago we passed a bill, a comprehensive bill, abolishing grade crossings in the District of Columbia and authorizing the building of the new Union Station at an immense cost. The station is now approaching completion. The street car trackage in the District of Columbia, as heretofore built and constructed, has been with reference to two separate stations, known as the Sixth street station on the Mall and the other as the old Baltimore and Ohio station.

In October, 1907, the Baltimore and Ohio Company moved into the Union Station, and the November following the Pennsylvania Railroad Company abandoned the station on Sixth street and moved in.

The condition is that there are no street car facilities, or rather insufficient car facilities, for reaching the new station. People getting off trains on wet days, snowy days, stormy days, have to walk more than two blocks to the existing street car lines on C street, where there are no waiting sheds or other means of comfort, unless they employ hacks. It has come to my knowledge by information through Members of the House that very extortionate charges are being demanded of passengers who get off and do not know the regulations as to charges for hacks.

A bill for rearranging the street car system of Washington, or the District of Columbia, so as to bring them all within reach of the Union Station, has passed the Senate and is now pending before the District Committee of the House of Representatives. That bill is very important, and it ought to be well considered; there ought to be amendments to it, as I think, but on account of the great inconvenience suffered by the public there is a great pressure by the press of the District of Columbia and by the people who suffer this inconvenience to get the bill through as early as possible, to the end that the Union Station may be reached. That bill provides that the trackage in the permanent construction shall be completed within one year, or about that—I may not be exactly correct as to the date. But the same bill provides for a temporary overhead trolley down North Capitol street from C street, to be used while the permanent construction is being installed.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have recommended that if this permanent bill is delayed in any way that that section for temporary tracks be taken out of the bill and passed as a separate bill. That is the bill which I introduced, except, as provided in section 2, that transfers shall be issued upon that temporary structure, without reference to any existing regulation as to having no transfer upon a transfer.

If this permanent bill was up for consideration to-day and was passed to-day, the first work to be done under it would be this temporary structure of an overhead trolley for immediate use, which the bill provides shall be done in sixty days. Every hour that is gained in authorizing the temporary structure will be an hour gained in the convenience for the people in getting to the station, and, as it does not in any way conflict with the trackage in the permanent bill and will be so arranged under direction of the Commissioners as not to delay construction under the permanent bill, and, as the permanent bill is not reported and ready for the House—perhaps it may be reported by the next District day—if this bill is passed the two companies will be required under the bill to arrange a temporary structure and can go immediately to work on it, which will not conflict with the permanent trackage when that becomes a law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman his judgment upon this question. If we do not get provision for universal transfers now while this matter is pending and while its urgency exists, will we ever get it at all?

Mr. SIMS. I am urging with all my might universal and free transfers, at least on cash fares. But this temporary arrangement can not possibly serve, it can not possibly meet the requirements of the two great companies. When the general bill is up for consideration it will be more in order to offer a free-transfer amendment on that bill than it is on the present one. If this bill, which is only temporary and only provides that the two companies shall go a little distance down and back—if a point of order will not lie to such an amendment on this bill, it can not to the more general bill for permanent tracks. We have had hearings on that bill, and may have more, and we thought it best to let this measure come in and be enacted so we will have plenty of time to study and investigate and act upon amendments to the permanent bill when it comes to the House from the committee.

In other words, if amendments can be made to this, they can be made to the other.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This bill makes no limitation of time on the temporary track as to how long it can be used?

Mr. SIMS. No; it must be discontinued thirty days after permanent construction is completed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but unless a permanent construction bill is passed, it would last forever.

Mr. SIMS. The permanent construction bill has a limitation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but it is not yet passed, and we may never get to it. The permanent bill is not before us as yet.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me give the gentleman an illustration. Congress in its great desire for increased railroad facilities many years ago gave the Pennsylvania Railroad Company authority to construct a temporary track and to occupy certain portions of the Mall, and no other act ever passed. Now, that temporary structure became permanent, until finally Congress gave a large sum of money to the railroad company to get it off the Mall.

Mr. SIMS. That is correct.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Suppose you pass this bill to-day, and it goes through the Senate and is approved, and it becomes a law, it must become a permanent occupancy if no other bill passes superseding it. I would like the have the gentleman think of the proposition; that there ought to be some time fixed in the bill when, if there is no other occupation provided for, this temporary occupation shall cease.

Mr. SIMS. I have no objection to an amendment to meet that objection on this bill, saying that these facilities shall cease absolutely after a certain date, if the gentleman will make it sufficiently long in time to get permanent construction completed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My only fear in this matter was that all of us recognizing the absolute necessity for some facilities, as we do, for getting to the Union Station, the very fact of the great demand and the necessity for it will strengthen the position of the railroad companies to resist the passage of any other bill after they have once acquired this right. The people will have the service, the railroads possession and satisfied.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if this temporary construction could possibly serve the railroad companies, even in a sense of being of equal financial benefit to them, then there would be weight in the argument of the gentleman from Iowa, but I do not think it is possible. The facts are, I do not think they want this.

Mr. MADDEN. Why don't they?

Mr. SIMS. I do not think they do, because in the hearings they have given it no support, absolutely none. One of the objects in passing this now is to have sufficient consideration of the other bill. I will submit to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that in considering the other bill we can put an amendment on it that this service shall terminate after a certain date; but I have no objection, speaking as simply one member of the committee, to an amendment here, but not knowing just how long it will take to establish and install the permanent service, it would be hard, and be merely making a guess to put in an absolute date now. But I know how kind Congress has always been to corporations here when we have placed a time limit in any legislation respecting them. If they have not been able to comply with that time limit, we have always extended the time. I have no objection, as one member of the committee, to this bill being amended so as to require that these tracks shall be torn up and removed on a certain date.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman is aware of the fact that in the Fifty-ninth Congress this same bill providing for permanent trackage into this depot was passed, and an amendment which I introduced was placed upon that bill by this House, providing that the street car companies should not charge more than 3 cents fare per passenger.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The street car company then, instead of having that bill become a law, after the bill got to the other end of the Capitol, defeated it for the reason that it provided a 3-cent fare. I am anxious to introduce the same amendment in this Congress, but of course I recognize that notwithstanding it was the fault of the street car companies themselves that we have not tracks there now to carry the public to the different parts of the city instead of requiring them to walk three or four squares—I recognize that we ought to have a street car service there. If this is to be a permanent service, I would offer my amendment, but if it is to be a temporary service and the gentleman assures the House that we are to have an opportunity to introduce these amendments, I will withhold it. Do I understand the gentleman to give that assurance to the House by authority of the committee?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, upon that I could not say what the committee is going to do, because an amendment offered by a member of the committee in the committee and incorporated in the report would still be subject to a point of order, and any amendment that is subject to a point of order incorporated in the bill by amendment of the committee would be subject to a point of order equally if made by a Member on the floor of the House who is not a member of the committee.

Now, of course, I can not tell. I do not know what the chairman of the Committee of the Whole considering that bill will hold with reference to the point of order, if one is made. Personally I do not think the point of order would lie.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Are you willing for an amendment to be added to this bill providing this temporary construction shall only last a sufficient time to enable construction of permanent tracks under the bill which you say will be brought in?

Mr. SIMS. I am favorable to the free transfer. I have never supported the 3-cent proposition, from the fact that on account of there being underground trolley construction here, costing twice as much as the other, or overhead, I did not know, and do not know yet, but that the court might enjoin it, whereas I know that would not be the case in reference to the universal transfer and——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Did not the gentleman vote on the yea-and-nay vote for the 3-cent fare?

Mr. SIMS. I did because we were defeated on the other proposition, and if they will not give free transfers I will vote for that amendment again.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will you yield me time to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not it is the intention of the committee to bring into the House a permanent trackage bill during this Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It certainly is, and we hope to be able to do so on the next District day.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Are you going to bring in such a bill in such a parliamentary status that amendments will be out of order?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am unable to say what the committee will decide to do—I mean the District Committee.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Well, personally, speaking for yourself?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am willing to give the House a chance to pass upon amendments of this bill.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. You mean the 3-cent fare and the universal transfers?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Feeling as I do now, yes; I am willing to have amendments offered.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And let Members pass upon it for themselves?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question? I have not been able to hear the conversation over there and I do not know what it has been about, but I want to ask a question for my own information. I understand that this same section is contained in the bill that came from the Senate for the construction of the permanent tracks.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, it seems to me, and I ask whether it would not be, better to make an earnest effort to pass the bill for the permanent tracks with this section in it and not confine ourselves with this mere temporary business? I want to say to the gentleman in this connection I am not at all hysterical over this question of walking two blocks to reach the station. Not a great many years have passed since in going to New York City we walked from the ferry after leaving the Pennsylvania Railroad to the elevated road three or four blocks, then climbed up the stairs, yet I never knew men to get hysterical over that, as they seem to be here in Washington over the fact that they have to walk two blocks. It does not seem to me there is any occasion for hurry on this question so as to drive the House to adopt this mere temporary expedient rather than to pass the permanent bill and temporary bill at the same time. It seems to me it would be better to do so, and for the committee to report the permanent bill and try to pass it, and if that bill becomes then the law, why, it will be time enough to take up the question of walking two blocks to the depot for sixty or ninety days and pass this temporary relief for the footsore passengers who come out of a sleeping car and the close atmosphere there and who, I think, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, would be benefited by a walk of two blocks in the fresh and pure air after a night spent in a sleeping car. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to think there is any object in introducing this bill to delay action on the other, but the other bill is not here. We are going to try to report one for next District day. I can not speak for every member of that committee.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Would it be more than a delay of six days? Does the gentleman think that you can bring about the permanent trackage next week?

Mr. SIMS. The next District day is two weeks from now.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. So that you would only have an additional advantage of two weeks by passing this bill now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I suggest that after the bill passes the House it will have to go into conference. If the District Committee should not adopt the Senate bill for permanent trackage, we do not know how long it might be in conference.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. It might not be necessary to have a conference. The Senate does not always differ.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We may differ from the Senate.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If we put through a permanent trackage bill they may agree to it.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say further to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], speaking for myself as a member of this committee, that there is no purpose to delay the consideration of the other bill, but this bill, which is a section of the other bill, provides that this work shall be completed within six weeks. Therefore, it will be the first work that will be done, and it must be done under the permanent bill. Two weeks is one-third of six weeks, and if we were sure we could pass the permanent bill on the next District day, we may just as well have the advantage of two weeks time in putting down the temporary structure.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SIMS. But there is absolutely no assurance, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] knows, of when we can get the permanent bill through. In order to properly consider the permanent bill, in order to consider amendments that have been and will be offered, and in order to relieve the hysteria which the gentleman has, I think, very properly referred to, but which is being stimulated by every newspaper in the District of Columbia in order to rush and stampede Congress into passing, helter-skelter, pellmell, without proper examination and without amendment, a bill which the traction people wish rushed through, I am in favor of this temporary bill going through to-day. Let the Senate pass it, and give the nervous, hysterical people an opportunity to think that they will not have to worry more than five or six weeks longer.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that his committee have a day two weeks from to-day, and of course they can bring it to a test during that day. At the utmost it would not be a delay of more than four weeks, and I submit that it is better to wait for that and get the permanent bill, that finally we may have a decent passageway from where the cars stop now to the depot, instead of having an ugly trolley road put up there in front of that new magnificent depot, that has cost the railroad so much and the District and the country so much. No one knows how long it will be before we can get the permanent bill through after passing this temporary makeshift that, as the gentleman says, will remove this hysteria from the newspapers and the people of the District and the Commissioners of the District, and enable Congress, perhaps, to delay the thing beyond the gentleman's lifetime and mine.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, suppose we were passing the permanent bill to-day; that provides for this identical construction.

Mr. PAYNE. Exactly; and then you would have the horse before the cart. Now you are trying to put the cart before the horse, and putting a lame cart there at that.

Mr. SIMS. This kind of a cart, as the gentleman calls it, that you want considered and passed has the same thing in it. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] mean that there should be no overhead-trolley service at all?

Mr. PAYNE. That would insure the permanent trolley service in time—the underground trolley—and this temporary overhead trolley would have to get out of the way for that and there would be an end to it, but if you pass this bill no one knows how long you will have that overhead trolley there leading to the magnificent depot and on the line between the Capitol and the depot.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is making the very argument the street-car people are making here and want to see done.

Mr. PAYNE. I would rather walk than see that overhead trolley, every time.

Mr. SIMS. I want to state a little history of the legislation in the last Congress. A bill for permanent trackage to the Union Station was introduced in the Senate and House. The whole long session passed without any consideration.

The House bill went to the committee and we all know what became of it. Then in the winter the Senate passed a bill in the last days of Congress, and we put on it the smoke amendment, the 3-cent amendment, and the wide-tire amendment in this House, and it went to the other end of the Capitol and died of neglect. It never was considered.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And that will be the result with all these measures unless you pass it and get the measure out of the way, and then you can consider these others.

Mr. SIMS. At that time, as I believe, without any information—I believe it because it is along the line of such action here—the street car companies did not want that bill given early consideration; they thought they could bring it in in the closing days of that Congress and have it passed and then take it up and build the road during the recess. Now they come pell-mell and ask to rush it through in the beginning of the session, based upon the very reason that it was delayed before. I want to say to the gentleman from New York, I bitterly oppose putting street railroad tracks on that plaza, and the permanent bill, if not amended, will put two double tracks on the plaza. When we passed the bill to abolish grade crossings, and we agreed to have a station constructed of great architectural beauty and magnificence, without any obstruction to a view of the Capitol to people arriving there, and in order to do this we were asked to give what amounted to over $4,000,000 to the enterprise to beautify that plat of ground.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell us how close the tracks will be to the station under this bill, and where the tracks would be under the proposed permanent construction?

Mr. SIMS. Under the permanent bill it would be within 15 feet of the curb, and there will be four tracks. The construction under the temporary bill will only come down North Capitol street to near where the hacks stand, at the west end of the station.

Mr. MANN. How close to cover?

Mr. SIMS. I understand about 80 or 90 feet. It was where there were some wagons standing, that Commissioner Morrow told us.

Mr. MADDEN. About a block.

Mr. MANN. About a block from cover?

Mr. SIMS. About 70 feet. We were told when this new station was contemplated that it should be one of modern architectural beauty, and that when a visitor stepped out of his train he would see the Capitol without any obstruction. We gave over $3,000,000 in money, and land besides, and there were to be erected upon the plaza fountains and other things to beautify it. And now the proposition is to turn it into a street-car yard. Here is this bill for permanent construction we are asked to rush through without consideration and amendment, which provides for two double tracks in front of the station, in 15 or 16 feet of the curb line, and run in a loop all around the plaza. Instead of the visitor being able to see the Capitol without obstruction, his view will be cut off by numerous street cars.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to base his argument in favor of the legislation on the ground that he is opposed to the present conditions, namely, that people reaching Washington through the Union Station are obliged to walk two blocks before they get a street car.

Mr. SIMS. That is true, so far.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I understand the gentleman argues against the proposition of putting cars so close to the station and give the facilities which this will afford.

Mr. SIMS. That is true, so far as having cars in front of the station and looping around the plaza.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, I understand the gentleman is arguing in favor of a temporary street-car structure, to be erected along a street which is acknowledged by the gentleman to be a block away from the station to which he seeks to furnish facilities. Is that true?

Mr. SIMS. No. The temporary tracks will go down near the west end of the depot, about 75 feet away from one end of it, as was pointed out to us.

Mr. MADDEN. A block away.

Mr. SIMS. Seventy-five feet.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; it is a block.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; where the Commissioner pointed is about 75 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. How large a part of a block is it? It is the street running east and west, is it not?

Mr. SIMS. No; North Capitol street runs north and south, and this temporary track comes down North Capitol street, near the west end of the station, where the hacks will go when the station is completed.

Mr. MADDEN. But at all events it does not get to the station.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; it gets practically as near the station as the permanent trackage will be—that is, there might be 20 or 25 feet difference.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that the permanent tracks were intended to go right up to the station.

Mr. SIMS. Pass right up in front of it and pass within 15 or 16 feet of the curb.

Mr. MADDEN. And that this proposed temporary track would not go within a block.

Mr. SIMS. If I said a block, I misunderstood the gentleman, for it does go up within 50, 60, or 75 feet—somewhere along there.

Now, this is merely temporary and will be moved about by the Commissioners as work proceeds on the plaza. It does not damage the plaza or in any way hinder the treatment of it, because it is only temporary, overhead, and will be moved about as may be required. My proposition—but I have not the slightest idea that the House will accept it—will be that all cars coming in from the western side of the city should approach the Union Station below the level of the plaza near the west end, and the same with reference to cars from the eastern portion of the city—that they should come in below the grade of the plaza at the east end and not pass in front of the station at all and not girdle that plaza all around with street cars.

Mr. MADDEN. There are two questions I should like to ask the gentleman. The first one is, why should the committee think it necessary to make the first section of this bill mandatory? Why did they think it necessary to use the words "authorized and directed" in line 5, page 1, instead of simply using the word "authorized?"

Mr. SIMS. To make it harmonize with the same section in the Senate bill. The Commissioners recommended that if there was any delay in the permanent bill this section be passed as a separate measure, and, furthermore, as well as I could find out in conversation in a general way, the street car companies do not want to do this, except as part of the permanent bill.

Mr. MADDEN. How did the gentleman find that out?

Mr. SIMS. Because they have all the time urged the permanent bill and in a way have all the time opposed this temporary measure. Therefore we thought it necessary in directing the temporary work that it be as mandatory as possible.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be a good idea to let them have their way once and let the permanent bill come before the House?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman mean to intimate sincerely that they have not had their own way?

Mr. MADDEN. I certainly think they have had their way in this.

Mr. SIMS. I did not think the gentleman from Illinois was a new Member. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman says he does not think the street car companies are in favor of this bill, because they are advocating another. I should like to know, in his experience on the District of Columbia Committee, of which he is an old and influential member, if he has not sometimes seen these street car companies looking one way and walking another?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have seen them when I thought that was the case.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, will the gentleman answer this question. On page 2 of the bill this language is used. It says:

> Said tracks to be maintained and operated by said companies to the satisfaction of said Commissioners and to be removed by said companies, after the construction of permanent street-railway tracks to said station, within thirty days after notice from said Commissioners so to do.

If the committee believed that this was a temporary authority, why did they not fix their limit of time in this bill, during which the street railway companies could operate this temporary structure?

Mr. SIMS. I can state just what I said before, that I do not believe the street car companies will delay permanent construction one moment after it is authorized, because this does not satisfy their wants and demands.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not the committee say so in the bill?

Mr. SIMS. As I said before, I have no objection to amending it by saying thirty days, not to exceed so long a time, from the approval of this act.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman favor an amendment providing they should not operate the so-called "temporary track" after the 1st of January, 1909?

Mr. SIMS. The permanent bill, I think, provides for a later date than that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Twelve months.

Mr. MADDEN. That is, practically twelve months.

Mr. SIMS. But the permanent work might not be finished and they would have to tear this up before they got the permanent work completed.

Mr. MADDEN. The point I want to urge is this: If they are bringing a bill into the House for a temporary street car structure in good faith they should have some provision in the bill which indicates that it is a temporary structure.

Mr. SIMS. I will say this: I will support an amendment of the kind mentioned by the gentleman, and make it the 1st day of April, 1909. Let me say why I suggest that. There will be, as we all know, an inauguration of the President of the United States on March 4, 1909.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Will he allow me right there? The 1st of April takes it beyond the life of the present Congress. The gentleman himself may not be in Congress after the 4th of March, 1909, and a great many others may not be here, and it is not fair for this House to legislate on temporary subjects and make them cover so long a period that they become not only permanent, but forgotten by the men who enact the legislation.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say that I believe the street car companies are going to make the greatest effort to complete the work before the next Presidential inauguration, to enable them to handle the crowds. They will be just as anxious to get rid of the temporary work as we are. Now, if we put the date in the amendment the 1st of January, 1909, it may be that they will not get it done before the 1st of March or the middle of February, and here will be a hiatus of five or six weeks when no cars can reach the station. It will only make a little difference—make it the 1st of March.

Mr. MADDEN. Make it the 1st of February, because we will be out of here the 1st of March.

Mr. SIMS. I am trying not to bring about another situation similar to this just in advance of reaching the station by a permanent structure. The companies will have all they can do to get in there by the 4th of March, 1909. It is a large proposition, and there is a great deal of work to do. They have to order much of their material, which has to be molded at the iron works, and there will be necessarily some delay. I think that by the 1st of March or the 1st of April you will have it where they can get it completed. I do not want an overhead trolley service as a permanent measure or as an excuse for not bringing in a permanent measure.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman from Tennessee inform the committee whether it is the purpose of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in case this present bill passes, to report a bill for permanent construction of street car service.

Mr. SIMS. At the earliest possible moment.

Mr. BATES. Will the gentleman state how long, in his judgment, it will take the committee to formulate and report such a bill?

Mr. SIMS. I believe, like the chairman, before the next District day we will report some kind of a bill here. I do not say that we will report one that we will all agree to, but it will be one to consider and amend. We will have one in the House to act on. The gentleman must remember that I am in the minority and ought not to attempt to speak for the majority.

Mr. BATES. I am sure that the gentleman, being a veteran member of the District Committee, can reflect what he believes to be the good sense and judgment of the committee on these matters. There is a question I would like to further ask, and that is if the bill for permanent construction can be formulated and reported, why can not it be done and presented at once?

Mr. SIMS. So that it can be considered here to-day? That would be impossible. We have got to consider every section in that bill and the amendments that are pending, and vote on them, and finally make a report, which may not be a unanimous report when it comes.

Mr. BATES. If this bill, which seems to be a makeshift for temporary construction—will it not be true that it will delay for a long time the possibility of the permanent building of the so-called "permanent structure"?

Mr. SIMS. Not in the slightest, but it is expediting it. This feature is in the bill for permanent construction, and it is the first work to be done.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask this question: Did I understand the gentleman to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the railroad companies were opposed to the passage of this bill?

Mr. SIMS. They have not said officially or in the hearings that they were opposed to it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is the understanding of the gentleman that they are?

Mr. SIMS. My impression is that they are opposed to this being passed as a separate measure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, just a moment. I understood the gentleman to say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that the committee struck out the word "required" and inserted the word "directed," in order that the bill might be as mandatory as possible.

Mr. SIMS. And in accordance with the section of the bill as it has already passed the Senate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, where is there any penalty in this bill to inflict in the event of the street car company not carrying out its provisions?

Mr. SIMS. There is none.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And they are simply directed. It is the ordinary language of the directory statute, to do so and so, and there is omitted all penalty. Now, if they are opposed to the bill if enacted into law and there is no penalty, then they do not have to carry out its provisions.

Mr. SIMS. There is no penalty on this feature of the permanent bill, but there is a forfeiture of rights and privileges under the permanent bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But what is the use of passing a bill requiring a railroad company to do something to which you say they are opposed, while the bill carries no penalty whatever if they disobey?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, they are not opposed to having a temporary structure. They want that. It is in the permanent bill. They are opposed to its being enacted in advance of the other for the reason that, I believe, it is to hurry us up on the other and not consider amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I am disposed to vote against this bill for this reason, that I believe that when the right to go to the new depot is granted to these railroads it ought to be granted to them under certain conditions, and one of these conditions, at least, should be that they would give universal transfers in the District of Columbia. I believe that that is the position of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. That is my position exactly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But is it not a fact that if we grant them this temporary privilege of carrying passengers on this temporary railroad, without any limitation, there will be no moving cause behind them or the people of the District to force permanent legislation, to grant this right of universal transfers? In other words, when you grant these railroads the privilege of putting down these temporary tracks and the overhead trolley, won't they get practically as much business out of the traveling public then as they would if they put down a permanent track?

Mr. SIMS. I think not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And when that is the case won't you have the legislation in the District in a position where you won't be able to force them to accept the condition of universal transfers in order to get their railroad tracks to the new depot? I think that is the condition you will find yourself in if you pass the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious to provide for universal transfers as is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. That is one reason I am in favor of this bill, because, as the gentleman from New York said, there is a perfect hysteria here to get to the station as quickly as possible, and in order to get there they do not want us to consider any amendment whatever except such as the bill which has passed the Senate provides for, upon the ground that they have got to get there and get there immediately.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I don't know of any hysteria on the part of this House.

Mr. SIMS. And one other argument, that the railroads and Congress will be satisfied with such service as can be given by this temporary loop down North Capitol street is too unreasonable to be considered for a moment, as I see it.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is not the hysteria of which the gentleman speaks wholly a manufactured hysteria, a hysteria that belongs to those interested in the street railway companies?

Mr. SIMS. I know there is a great inconvenience to the traveling public. I have no doubt of it, but some gentlemen who have been using so much time in expressing sympathy for the public perhaps have never been there or seen anything or cared anything about it, but it has been used to magnify, to emphasize the situation, in order to rush this bill through early in this Congress for the very reason it was held back in the last—to prevent the consideration and adoption of amendments.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman if the growing hysteria referred to by gentlemen to give them the right to use temporary tracks ought to deprive Congress of the power of putting through the permanent bill, or, in other words, when you put this through and it becomes a law the street railway company will operate under it. You bring in your permanent bill and the House amends it in accordance with the desires of the majority of the Members. Now, according to the gentleman's statement a few moments ago, that bill if it goes to the other end of the Capitol and it sleeps for a hundred years, for a hundred years they will be using these temporary tracks, just as the Pennsylvania Railroad Company used the temporary occupancy of the grounds of the Government until we had to give [applause] something more than a million dollars to get them out of the Mall and into the new Union Station.

Mr. SIMS. We did not have to do it; we did it voluntarily.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We did it because there was a hysteria for a new station.

Mr. SIMS. That was confined strictly to the railroad company——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And we ought to preserve this hysteria until we get some permanent legislation. The hysteria will insure full and appropriate legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Hysteria is our most valuable asset now.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There was some talk about an amendment, so as to fix a definite time at which the temporary overhead trolley construction shall be removed. Now, what time would the gentleman accept as a definite date at which this temporary expedient should be discontinued?

Mr. SIMS. Not speaking for the committee, but just for myself as a member of the committee, I should say the 1st day of March, 1909. That would force them to get through in time for the inauguration, which I believe they will do anyway.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In case a permanent bill is not put through, would not Congress, as a matter of fact, be compelled to allow them to continue, because the people have been once accustomed to it, and it would not do to give it up and let the people walk?

Mr. SIMS. Now, Congress, Mr. Chairman, could pass a bill to do anything within its powers, but I have no idea for a moment that it would do it. Now, I do not think this is similar to occupying the Mall.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Congress gave the railroad the right to go and occupy the Mall, and they occupied the Mall for more than forty years without paying taxes on the property, and we paid a million and a half to two million to get them off.

Mr. SIMS. There was no hysteria back of that. It was power of some kind to influence Congress to bow down and give up that much belonging to the people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me ask the gentleman a question: The gentleman and myself I believe voted against the bill whereby the railroads were paid to surrender Government property.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; the gentleman from Mississippi did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood you now to say we were unable to get a majority of the national legislature on that occasion owing to the money power——

Mr. SIMS. Overwhelming power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if we give them this temporary matter, will they not have the same power to perpetuate their temporary arrangement hereafter and fasten this permanently upon Congress? Now, if that be true, can not they just as well maintain this abuse after we have given it to them as they maintained that other against which we both protested in a former time?

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Chairman, I said "money power." I did not mean money corruptly used, but I meant the great money power that could control matters all over the country. But you can not compare these street railway companies to the great steam railway companies that were interested in that matter. But I want to say, to be frank with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that if there has ever been one iota of legislation that has passed this House since I have been a member of that committee that they did not want, I do not know it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would suggest to the gentleman if the difference is not that the street railway companies do not give any passes?

Mr. SIMS. I am trying to get them to give free passes from one system to another when they collect a full fare.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman must recall that in the last Congress, when amendments had been placed upon that bill, the street car companies went before the Senate and fought that bill and defeated it, kept it from becoming a law. And that is the reason we have not a permanent street car trackage there now.

Mr. SIMS. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES], he may be entirely right, but I do not think he has included the whole proposition. I do not know what the street car companies did before the Senate committee in reference to that bill. We only know the result. There was an amendment on that bill applying the smoke law of the District to the steam railway companies, and they were fighting that, and I think that had much to do with it, ten times more, perhaps, than the street car companies did.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Did not the Senate pass that smoke provision?

Mr. SIMS. No, indeed; they did not.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And did it not come here with that on it?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir. Never have we been able yet to get our smoke measure through the Senate, requiring steam railways of this District to do that which anybody else has to do.

Mr. WALDO. Does this bill provide any way so that cars are going to run continuously to the depot, or merely a short line to run back and forth from the present track?

Mr. SIMS. Why, it has no regulation of that sort. It is to be operated under regulation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALDO. Is there any reason why this bill should not be amended to provide for the permanent route that cars must take, so as to run past that depot, and with a provision for the temporary connection?

Mr. SIMS. Let me say to the gentleman that until the plaza is completed, any temporary trackage must be subject to removal from one place to another in order to get out of the way of any work to be done, either in locating the trackage in the permanent bill or in completing the plaza. It is incomplete, the work is not finished, and any kind of a temporary track measure will have to be subject to removal, under control of the Commissioners, at one time occupying this space and at another time that space in completing the plaza or in putting down permanent tracks.

Mr. WALDO. That I understand, but what I wish to ascertain is whether this is to provide for the cars temporarily running in a continuous line past the depot, or whether it is merely to provide for what is called a "jigger" car, to run back and forth from the present line.

Mr. SIMS. It is to be subject to the control of the Commissioners, and what they will require, of course, I do not know. I naturally suppose and presume that they will require the best service that be given with the facilities afforded.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can say this, before asking the question, as everybody else can, that the location of the permanent tracks is a matter of paramount importance to the railway companies. Now, then, location of permanent tracks is subject to the approval of the Commissioners. As I read the gentleman's bill, permanent tracks could be constructed after we adjourn this summer and the location be in the discretion of the railroad company.

Mr. SIMS. No; the permanent bill absolutely locates the tracks.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One amendment, line 10, provides that these tracks shall be constructed in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners. That is the temporary tracks.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, as I said, the location of the permanent tracks is a matter of tremendous importance to the railroad companies.

Mr. SIMS. And the House will pass on that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. And then you go on and say that they—meaning the temporary tracks—shall be maintained and operated to the satisfaction of the Commissioners.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. This is not the permanent bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What I am on is this bill, and I am supposing that is a law. Now, if it is a law the location of the permanent tracks is left to the discretion of the companies.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is under the language of this bill.

Mr. SIMS. You are mistaken; I beg your pardon. The bill for the permanent construction locates them absolutely and does not leave it with the Commissioners.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But that is not the law. This bill says that they can locate the temporary tracks.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is to prevent them from locating them under this? It presupposes that somebody shall locate the permanent tracks. Suppose they put down the permanent tracks?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Wisconsin will understand that they can not put down a single permanent track until Congress authorizes it.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Is there any reason why the construction of the permanent tracks can not be commenced now?

Mr. SIMS. It can not be commenced now, because there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Is that the only reason why?

Mr. SIMS. That is the only reason; that is enough.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman explain the confusion in regard to having put in temporary tracks and then to put in permanent tracks?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know; neither does it make any difference, because the temporary tracks will be removed.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Why not have the two matters considered together?

Mr. SIMS. Why, we want it done in the permanent bill.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Why not bring in the permanent bill, if that is to provide for temporary tracks?

Mr. SIMS. We expect to do it just as soon as we can, but if this bill is passed we can get these tracks to the depot within thirty or sixty days, and we may not be able to get a bill for the construction of permanent tracks passed in six months.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Why not provide that they may lay the permanent tracks now?

Mr. SIMS. Because they can not until the law authorizes it.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. But why should it take longer to pass the permanent bill than it does to pass the temporary bill?

Mr. SIMS. The permanent bill covers four street car companies. There will be amendments offered to it, and it will have to go to the Senate, and then it may have to go to conference, and if it goes to conference there is no determining how long it will be there. A bill for the permanent trackage is before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and we can not tell when the permanent bill will be taken up.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the permanent tracks be laid where these temporary tracks are laid?

Mr. SIMS. The Commissioners will look after that, and they will be laid where they will not conflict with the permanent tracks. They may have them at one time at one place and another time at another place.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell me the status of the permanent bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANDIS. I ask that the gentleman may be given ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. A bill providing for permanent tracks has passed the Senate and is before the House committee. The committee has been having extensive hearings on the bill, and may have more. If anyone shall ask to be heard, we can not refuse. Now, then, we mean to take up that bill, as I understand the chairman, in executive session next committee day, which is next Thursday; but I can not assure you or anyone else how long it will take to consider it.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. How long will it take to put in the temporary tracks if they were authorized?

Mr. SIMS. I would be obliged to the chairman if he would state what time is provided in the permanent bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. About 12 or 13 months.

Mr. SIMS. And the prevailing idea is that it will take every moment of that time; and in the meantime we will have this there. No one can tell in advance how long it will take to provide the permanent tracks.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe, as an earnest advocate of a service which will relieve the travelers who go into and come out of the Union Station, that the most valuable asset he has, in his advocacy of this measure, is what he calls "the hysteria of the people?"

Mr. SIMS. Why, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LANDIS. I should like to have the gentleman answer that question.

Mr. SIMS. In all justice to the public, they ought to have opportunity to get to and from the Union Station without waiting eighteen months or two years for it.

Mr. LANDIS. That is true, and they are demanding it, and because of their insistent demand the gentleman wants to put in this temporary provision?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; that is one reason.

Mr. LANDIS. Now, the gentleman also recognizes the fact that there are a number of other questions that will come up in connection with the consideration of the permanent improvements?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LANDIS. Does not the gentleman recognize that if he makes a temporary provision, dilatory tactics can be pursued that may postpone the permanent improvement indefinitely, and that then, there being no hysteria on the part of the people, possibly many years may intervene before we get this permanent improvement? And can there be any objection to postponing this temporary provision until a bill providing for the permanent improvement becomes a law, and then bringing in a bill making temporary provision?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The temporary provision goes right side by side with the other.

Mr. LANDIS. I know it does. It is all right to pass them together, or pass first the law providing for the permanent improvement; but you are putting a premium upon dilatory tactics by this method you propose to-day, and a premium upon all sorts of moves that will tend to postpone permanent improvement.

Mr. SIMS. Nobody on the committee wants to delay that bill.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the way to delay it.

Mr. LANDIS. This is the way to delay that bill indefinitely. If this provision passes to-day, the gentleman will not live long enough to see this permanent improvement. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentleman from Indiana is exhibiting a little hysteria.

Mr. GRIGGS. I should like to ask the gentleman, in view of all these questions, if there is anything good at all in the permanent bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if the permanent bill is passed with the proper amendments, it is not only good, but necessary.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman, Is there any provision in the so-called "permanent bill" that imposes in any way an obligation on the railway company to give proper facilities to the patrons of these lines?

Mr. SIMS. Not as passed by the Senate.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there any provision in that bill where you can put on an amendment that would be germane in this House?

Mr. SIMS. Looking upon it as I do, opening up the whole situation, almost anything is germane, but I do not know what the Chairman will hold when the point is made.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is there anything in this bill whereby we can put on the amendment that you supported so efficiently in the last Congress, for a reduced rate of fares or for universal transfers?

Mr. SIMS. You mean in the bill we are now considering?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I mean in the permanent bill.

Mr. SIMS. There is no provision in the bill that has passed the Senate of the kind mentioned by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Indiana having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 23, 1908:

H. R. 251. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907;

H. R. 4891. An act to authorize the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; and

H. R. 10519. An act to authorize the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Celina, Tenn.

TEMPORARY TRACKS TO UNION STATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to say just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. It has been used by other gentlemen. The gentleman's hour has been exhausted.

Mr. LANDIS. This is a question in which we are all interested, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended until he concludes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] desire more time?

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not; I should much prefer that you use the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Chair does not understand that the time allotted to him will give him the right to yield to other Members.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand the Chair to say that I can not yield time to anyone else?

The CHAIRMAN. Except for an inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if I can be recognized on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand the Chair to say that I could not recognize anybody else?

The CHAIRMAN. Only for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know whether I can not be recognized in my own right?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not now, as the gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Michigan does not control the time?

The CHAIRMAN. No; he has the floor to conclude his remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want the fullest and fairest opportunity to discuss this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the committee that the gentleman who introduced this bill and the Committee on the District of Columbia have presented it to the House in the utmost good faith that it would satisfy for the present the people of the District of Columbia and the traveling public. I am quite sure that there are some Members here who do not clearly understand the situation. This proposed legislation is to construct a temporary trackage from the corner of North Capitol and C streets, running diagonally across to the Union Station, and the tracks are to remain there until the permanent legislation is enacted and until the street railway companies are able to do that work.

There seems to be an impression that the street railways can build this permanent work in three or four months. When the committee were at the Union Station last Saturday looking over the situation the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia informed us that it would take the railway companies some months to put in the proposed work there. You will remember that there has been a filling of 30 feet in front of the depot, and no railroad company, if granted the right of construction, would for a single moment think of putting it on top of this new work, but, as we are informed, they have got to go down 30 feet in order to put in permanent construction.

Now, the permanent construction that the committee proposes to report provides that the tracks shall go down Delaware avenue in front of the depot. Legislation is also proposed that would enable the people to go to the Union Station from the east, west, and north as well as from the south, and when you think it is an easy matter to agree on permanent legislation, I desire to call your attention to the fact that we as a committee, in the hope of bringing you a bill that will be satisfactory, are not able to agree on permanent legislation. Why? Because the Senate, in the first instance, have provided that the Capital Traction Company shall come from Seventh and U streets down Florida avenue over North Capitol street. I can only speak for myself, but I hope the committee will report permanent legislation from Seventh and U streets down Florida avenue to New Jersey avenue and New Jersey avenue down to the Union Station from the west.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will be glad to answer the question if I can.

Mr. HEPBURN. What certainty have you that these railroad companies will build these new lines? Did not the gentleman hear the manager of one of them say that he would not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I heard him say that he would not construct the trackage in the northeast. I am coming to that in just a moment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has the gentleman any method by which he can coerce them to build this construction?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can say that the president of the Capital Traction Company has appeared before the committee and said that his company would build the proposed extensions in the northeast, and he has said to the committee: "You needn't force us, but just ask us to build that in the northeast and we will build it." I believe the Capital Traction will build the extensions in the northeast if requested so to do, for they have been and are anxious to get into that field.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman heard some other man make another statement, I think, that he is not entirely satisfied of the truth of.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the District Committee will report a bill giving the companies an opportunity to do this permanent work, and, for one, I believe they are going to do it. I will say further that if they do not do it and Congress has the power, so far as I am concerned, we will try and see that they do do it. Now, just a moment about what I was saying about the service going down New Jersey avenue and North Capitol street. I now want to call your attention to another matter that we are in trouble about. The Senate bill provides that the road coming up from Anacostia shall build its line in front of the Library. We were out the other day looking the situation over, seeing if we could not find a street or streets where the tracks could come up some other way instead of in front of the Library. That is one of the things which is giving us concern.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that the passage of this bill would remedy that difficulty?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It will not remedy that one particular thing I am talking about, but I have said to you, in the first instance, that the District Committee have reported this bill to the House to-day in the hope that it would relieve the situation for the present, and we are willing that any amendment shall be offered here to-day putting all the safeguards around it, so that the railroads can not take advantage of it.

Now, just a step further, and that is this: You remember that the people of the northeastern portion of this city feel to-day that they ought to have what they call a "cross-town road." In other words, they want a road running east and west and north and south. The Senate bill as it is sent to us does not provide for that legislation. That is the legislation that our distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] referred to a moment ago when he referred to the statement of one of the managers of one of the lines of the street railway in that vicinity. Now, then, I can not speak for anybody else on the committee, but I do not hesitate to say that I favor legislation which will authorize the Capital Traction Company or the other company, I am not particular which, but I am in favor of legislation in behalf of the people that will authorize some company to build from Seventh and U streets down Florida avenue and from there down Eighth street to F street and down F street to the Union Station and from the corner of Eighth and F down Eighth street, so as to connect with the Capital Traction line from the south, thus giving the people of the northeast section that for which they have been asking for years.

Mr. MADDEN. The argument the gentleman is making is a good argument against this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, is there anything in this bill defining the meaning of the term "temporary?"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I don't think there is anything in the bill defining the word "temporary."

Mr. HELM. A "temporay" structure or a "permanent" structure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say this to the gentleman, that I understand that it is simply a structure that shall be erected there and remain until the permanent work is completed. We do not intend to give the railroads an unreasonable length of time to put that in, but in agreeing on that I want to say that we are not governed by our own judgment, but we take the judgment of the engineer of the District and ask him how long, in his judgment, after the railroads are authorized to do the work it ought to be completed.

Mr. HELM. Is there any possibility of the permanent structure or work being construed as "temporary?"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think so.

Mr. LANDIS. But the experience of the Congress in so far as it relates to the temporary improvement that was put in by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on Sixth street through the Mall——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, that is a steam railway. Of course there is no difference in principle.

Mr. LANDIS. Our experience, however, justifies the statement that the interpretation of "temporary" in that instance meant thirty years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I want to ask the gentleman this question, and that is whether he thinks for a single moment that he can serve in this or any other Congress and not have the people constantly after him to have permanent construction put in here, if we simply authorize this temporary construction from North Capitol street over to the depot.

Mr. LANDIS. I do not, and if I were on the District of Columbia Committee and wanted this permanent improvement, I would not sacrifice my most valuable asset, namely, the interests and demands of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is simply a difference of opinion. It may be weeks after the House passes a bill for permanent improvements before it becomes a law.

Mr. LANDIS. I will go ahead and answer the gentleman, as far as I am personally concerned, and say I am for this permanent construction first and for the temporary provision second.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senate bill provides for both, and we simply took the temporary provision out of it and offered it to the House to-day in the utmost good faith.

Mr. LANDIS. And after the temporary provision passes this House, as far as this legislation goes the Committee on the District of Columbia can lay aside their work and go fishing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House will not offer to the House a bill for permanent legislation?

Mr. LANDIS. They will in time, but it will be amended, and it will be referred, and it will be battledoored and shuttlecocked around——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We can not offer any legislation and guarantee it will not be amended on the floor of this House.

Mr. LANDIS. And at the end of thirty years possibly the people of the District of Columbia will get what they ought to have.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman allow me one interruption? I understood you to say a little while ago that you asked the District engineer how long it would take to construct this permanent construction.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did ask for his opinion.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But your bill does not reserve to Congress the right to say how long it is to be operated as a temporary construction, but it provides that they shall remove it within thirty days after the Commissioners shall say they shall do so, so under this bill they can stay a hundred years if the Commissioners did not tell them to remove it——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the gentleman desires to offer an amendment——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But the gentleman ought to have safeguarded this himself, and it ought not to be necessary for Members to offer such an amendment here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have confidence in the judgment——

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But the power ought not to be lodged with the Commissioners which belongs to this House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Power in regard to such matters is very frequently lodged with the Commissioners.

Mr. MADDEN. Where are the rights of the District safeguarded?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are safeguarded when we put it in the hands of the Commissioners, gentlemen selected by the President of the United States to look after the interests of the District of Columbia, and I believe the Commissioners will look after the interests of the District.

Mr. MADDEN. It is for this House——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I want to see if we can really reach the case. I apprehend the gentleman will say that if this temporary measure should pass and the temporary tracks should be constructed, it ought to remain there until there was a permanent provision made for street facilities to the station.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; if not, what is the use of putting them down?

Mr. MANN. Now, does the gentleman think that the street car companies will accept a bill for permanent street car facilities which include universal transfers and a reduced rate of compensation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to you, speaking for myself only, that I do not believe the street railway companies in this city will favor in this or any other bill a reduction in fares or an amendment for universal transfers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand. But does the gentleman believe that the street car companies will accept, as far as they can prevent, any bill which requires universal transfers or a reduction from a 5-cent fare?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman mean, if they will accept it?

Mr. MANN. Will they accept it as far as they can prevent?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have said to the gentleman that I thought they would oppose it.

Mr. MANN. Now, does the gentleman believe that he can put through this body or another body any bill providing for universal transfers and a reduced compensation if the street car companies are opposed to it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not say.

Mr. MANN. And then does the gentleman think that that being the case these temporary tracks ought to remain there until the street car company is willing to accept a reduced rate of compensation and a universal transfer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not think they ought to remain there until these people consent to that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman feels they ought not to be removed until we have permanent tracks. Does the gentleman think he can force by forcible legislation, as a practical proposition, the companies to accept permanent facilities with universal transfers and reduced compensation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not say. If I had my way——

Mr. MANN. I am not saying anything as to the gentleman's own way. Of course, I make no reflection upon him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If I had my way, the first thing would be getting the tracks to the Union Station, and adjust these other matters afterwards, for the reason that in the closing hours of the last Congress, when we sought to undertake legislation of this kind, we had the smoke amendment, the wide-tire amendment, the universal-transfer amendment, and the 3-cent fare amendment, and the legislation was defeated in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that I made a point of order on these amendments when they were offered in the House the first time, and they were not put in. Afterwards a rule came in permitting the amendments to be offered, and the amendments were offered in the House, and everybody knew, both before and after the rule came in, that if those amendments were inserted in the bill the bill would be as dead as a doornail. I made the point of order because I thought there ought to be a provision for street car facilities in this new building. Now, the gentleman proposes a temporay measure which will be as permanent as the hills.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Because the street car company will never agree to the proposition which the House insists upon, and without an agreement no permanent legislation can be enacted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman mean by that, now, that if we pass any permanent legislation it must include 3-cent fares and universal transfers?

Mr. MANN. I mean by that, without hesitation, that the gentleman can not pass any provision, any permanent bill, through this House without including a proposition in it for universal transfers and without a reduction of compensation. I am not stating my opinion, but I am stating what I believe to be a fact.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If the railroad will not accept that, what are we going to do?

Mr. MANN. If this bill passes they have the tracks there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are the streets made for the railroad or for the people?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about their refusing to accept it. Even if Congress has the power requiring them to accept it, the House has not that power.

Mr. McGAVIN. If my colleague [Mr. MANN] will yield for a moment, I want to say for his benefit, that when he says that no trackage bill will pass this House until it provides for a reduction of fares and for universal transfers, when the committee had these hearings and the officers of the different associations throughout the District appeared before that committee, I put the standing question to every man who appeared there, and they were universally of the idea that it was not reduced fares or universal transfers that they wanted, but they wanted facilities.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who are the men who appeared?

Mr. McGAVEN. I think about fifteen or twenty different associations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the great body of the people who fill the different cars at 4 o'clock in the day appear before the committee?

Mr. McGAVEN. They did.

Mr. MURPHY. I will ask the chairman of the committee if it is not the fact that every one of these gentlemen asked this question were men on the other proposition—men from the east side asking street-car facilities that they have not got? That question was asked, and they said that they were not there on that proposition, because they had one proposition they wanted. Is it not a fact that there was nobody representing the people generally in this city before that committee at all?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The board of trade, for example.

Mr. MANN. And there was no room for their accommodation in the committee room, and the gentleman does not appear willing that they shall have room.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We are quite satisfied with what room we have.

Mr. MANN. The people of the District of Columbia would like to have a place to have a hearing before you.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So far as I know, the people are not making any complaint about the room.

Mr. MANN. I hear of a lack of accommodation to be heard before the gentleman's committee, and I hope the House may have an opportunity to remedy that after a while.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. I believe this matter of getting down from C street to a place in front of the new depot has been given an exaggerated importance. There is no great demand on the part of the people of this District for that proposition. When you stop to think what it is, it simply means an extension of these tracks for about a block and a half. After you have got it the passenger has to walk as far from the car to the train that he is going to take as he does from C street to the farther side of the loop. There is no importance to be attached to this proposition. The people of this District are not clamoring for additional trackage. They are clamoring for a proper use of that which they have authorized. [Applause.] They are not clamoring to give these railroad companies additional facilities and giving them opportunity for further bond issues, out of which to build more railways and then to issue large amounts of stock as gratuities to themselves, but they are demanding that they shall no longer be permitted to rob the people of this District. [Applause.] That is the question for us to determine, and I believe, as firmly as I believe anything, that if you give them what they are asking for in this bill—and, by the way, all they are asking; they are asking for nothing more than that—you will have satisfied all their demands, and you will get no other opportunity to force them to a proper discharge of their duties as public carriers.

Mr. Chairman, I think that in this connection we ought to remember how much has been granted to these railways, and how illy they have requited the people for these grants. There is in this city to-day a single railway—there are but two—that has been built out of securities that they have been authorized to issue, still leaving them a colossal remainder for gratuitous distribution. One of these railways, from the report that I have last seen, has a capitalization of $28,000,000 and a trackage in this District of 29 miles. That report shows that they have a debt of stocks and bonds of nearly $1,000,000 a mile. Notwithstanding that fact, that company is paying 5 per cent dividend on more than $8,000,000 preferred stock; and they are coming to Congress asking for more facilities and still refusing to give anything like adequate service to the people of the District.

Mr. Chairman, I am speaking now about what I know. I take a car almost every evening between 4.30 o'clock and 6 at the corner of First and East Capitol streets. I tell you that until this last week, with two exceptions, since I came here in the middle of November last, I have never been able to get a seat when I went into that car. I remember looking at the register in one of those cars and saw that 127 passengers had been registered on that trip of that car.

I have had to fight my way all over the platform and into the car. I remember counting on one occasion. I found more persons on the platforms than there were seats in the car, and, still further, more persons standing, hanging to the straps, than there were seats in the car. More than three times the number of persons had been crowded into that car than could have seats.

I discussed that matter before the committee and was contradicted by a gentleman, one of the officers of one of the roads. He made the statement that on his road, passing the Peace Monument, they had a time card of thirty seconds. I asked the question if he meant to say that 120 of his trains passed that point in the same direction each hour? He said yes, emphatically, there was no doubt about it, that going either way on this road, in the vicinity of the monument, 120 cars passed each way within the hour. I sent my clerk the next day to make a count of every car that passed in each direction, those going toward the depot, those going toward the navy-yard, and those going around the loop. He did it, giving the time when each car passed him; and instead of there being 120, there were 70 going one way and 63 the other in the hour from 4.30 to 5.30 p. m., the time specified by the gentleman.

This railroad officer gave two excuses for the crowding of the cars. One was that the people of this District dishonestly crowded the cars in order that they might have free rides; that a car might be approaching empty, and they would not take that, but would crowd into the overcrowded car, with the expectation that they would be overlooked by the conductor. [Derisive laughter.] That was questioned by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. This railroad official reiterated that statement, and again the gentleman from Tennessee called to his attention the serious character of the charge that he was making against the people of the District. He then modified it by saying that some of the people did it, giving the committee to understand that the crowding was by the dishonest people who patronized his road in this city.

He gave as another excuse that the reason why the cars were not more numerous, stating that he was willing and they were anxious to furnish all the facilities they could, that there was a regulation by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that forbade them running closer than 200 feet; that they did that and, in their anxiety to promote the comfort of passengers, were often compelled to violate that regulation. If you make the computation, and if you suppose that they run their cars at the rate of 6 miles an hour—and they are authorized to run at a speed of 12—but at 6 miles an hour you will find that there are 500 feet between their trains, and on the Washington Electric road, under the same computation, you will find that the cars are more than 1,000 feet apart, or nearly a quarter of a mile.

You see what paltry excuses are made. You see the unwillingness there is to go to the additional expense of more cars and more motormen and more conductors in order that the people may have more comfort and approach nearer to the realization of their rights. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that no improvement will be had that you do not coerce from those companies. And looking at my experience of more than twenty years in this House no advance will be made except as you coerce it from the Committees of the two Houses on the District of Columbia. [Applause.] I make the assertion here that every advance, every step in progress, that has been made in the transportation of passengers in this city has been forced from reluctant management; and if you give them what they want, they know how to thwart your purposes in securing what the people want.

Gentlemen have said here that these companies did not have proper facilities. I want to remind you of the legislation that we had last year. I want to remind you of the extraordinary scenes that had to be indulged in, in order to compel the then chairman of this committee [Mr. Babcock] to give this House any opportunity to legislate upon this question. [Applause.] He was ready to introduce bill after bill that promoted the interests of the companies; but when it was attempted to ingraft some legislation upon those bills, although we had been promised again and again that opportunities would be given, points of order were made, and we had to defeat his bills until, under a rule, opportunity was given for amendment.

Two amendments were inserted. One was for the reduction of the fare and the other was for universal transfers. What was the duty of the corporations when that legislation was engrafted upon a bill that they wanted and that gave them large additional benefits? It was to acquiesce until the question could be practically settled whether within the limitations that we, any of us, would be willing to impose they could afford to make those reductions.

They ought to have trusted to the fairness of this House to believe that if that legislation was harmful, was destructive to property interests, that, in the interest of fairness, this House would repeal the destructive legislation. Not so. They absolutely refused to accept this very legislation with these other provisions attached. They would not accept the privilege of going to the depot because they said they would not make so much money.

We could have these facilities now that the gentlemen are so insistent upon if the railway companies had been willing to trust the good faith of this House, but they were unwilling to do that; they believed that if they could get delay in some way or other they could get a better hold, and they have got it so far as legislation has yet progressed.

I am utterly opposed to giving to these two corporations any new facilities until we can engraft upon the same legislation wholesome provisions of law that will compel at least an approach to decent observance of their obligations. [Applause.]

I say that much the largest estate that they have—putting tracks and all other facilities, real estate and all, on the one side—the most valuable asset that either of them have is the franchise that they have been given. The right of way through the streets of this city of nearly 400,000 people, practically free for all time, is an asset of most remarkable value, worth millions and millions of dollars, and so they would esteem it if an effort was made to take from them that asset. Having given them so much, we have a right to demand that they shall perform their part of the covenant. It was understood that when this great largess was bestowed upon them that the equivalent they would render would be complete accommodation of the wants of the people who desired the use of these roads. They treated that obligation with contempt. Every man that rides upon the cars knows that that is true, that the overcrowded condition is something that is remarkable.

I have a letter from an elderly lady who has to come to this city to meet her employment obligations every morning. She lives out in the suburbs. She tells me in this letter that without regard to the conditions of the weather she is often compelled to wait for many minutes while crowded cars pass her that she could not get on, and that on her homeward journey she has to fight her way into the car and out of the car on almost every occasion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is but one of tens of thousands of complaints if the people could only be heard. The gentleman from Illinois has told you that the great mass of the people that have come before the committee have not labored for lower rates or for the interchange of tickets; that is not what they are after. They want facilities; they want that for which they pay. When they pay their 5 cents, or 4½ cents, they are entitled to a seat in the car; they are entitled to a comfortable and expeditious ride. They are entitled to be exempt from the struggle that now is necessary on these lines in getting into the car and then standing in the dense crowd hanging on to a strap.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make a clamor for reduced rates, but I do insist that no legislation ought to pass until there are provisions made by which we can compel these roads to perform their duty and to give what the people of this District pay for.

Gentlemen are wonderfully solicitous just now for the accommodation of the people of Washington by building this little block and a half of track. How few of the people of the District of Columbia at the most are interested in that in comparison to the vast multitude who want such frequency of cars, such freedom from crowds, that they can be permitted to do their business with proper expedition and with some semblance of comfort. [Applause.]

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, for once I can agree with my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, as to the shameful condition of the railroad business in the city of Washington. It is little wonder that the people outside through this country are enraged at railroads when here under the Dome of the Capitol there is such treatment of the people as would not be tolerated in any other city in the nation. Why? Because in all other cities the people have the right of suffrage; they have the right to elect their own rulers; they have the right of controlling public-utility corporations which they have not here. Congress is the guardian of the people of this District of 300,000 people, and they look up to the Congress of the United States as their guardian. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a court of equity, there is not a probate court in the United States that would not discharge a guardian immediately for neglect of duties to his ward, had the duties been fulfilled no better than have the duties of Congress to the people of this District in relation to this matter we are now considering. Why is it? I believe the reason is because the Members of the House and the members of the Senate are not aware of the situation. I have taken the time and the trouble, although we have been crowded in doing this, to investigate the reports made a year ago and the reports made this year before our committee in this matter; and I want to say it is the most astounding case of ill treatment of people that I have ever looked into in my life. Let us take the statements of the officers of these traction companies. The statement of the president of the Capital Traction Company made before this committee one year ago gave as the cost of construction of a single mile of track of underground railroad such as we have on the best streets in the city of Washington, not to exceed $66,000 a mile. That is single track. That company is paying dividends on $600,000 a mile of double track, refusing to give the people decent cars, refusing to give them cars sufficient to carry them, refusing to give the people lower rates, or any accommodations that are not forced from them by this Congress of the United States.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is right when he says they have never done anything that has not been forced from them. They are in that exact situation to-day. The other corporation, the Washington Electric Company—I don't know that I have the name exactly right—is a corporation that was organized or rather reorganized a few years ago, taking up a number of companies and then reorganizing from that. The testimony before those hearings shows that the stock of the companies absorbed at that time was purchased at any figure, from 10 cents to 40 cents or 50 cents on the dollar. Under an act of Congress they were permitted to issue stock fully on that, and to-day they are attemping to pay dividends on all that stock, although they purchased it from the companies that sold it to the present owners for a figure away below par. Yet they insist to-day that before the people can have proper accommodations, before the people can have lower fares, before the people can have any rights, that they shall receive interest on this amount of stock that represents in many cases two, three, or four times the value of what was paid for it originally, and also several times what it would cost to build the lines now. This is the situation that we are brought up face to face with, and I am glad of this opportunity to-day to present some of these matters before you. I believe that if the Members of this House and the members of the Senate had before them and had the time to examine the reports made a year ago of the hearings before the committee and the reports of the hearings before the committee this time, they would be astounded by what they would see, and there would be no question whatever but what they would grant to the people universal transfers and a 3-cent fare with that. The testimony of General Harries is in these reports that the cost of carrying a passenger in the District of Columbia a mile is only 2½ cents or a little more. He puts it at a little more. The testimony or the statement of Mr. MADDEN, a Member of this House and an expert in those lines, before the committee is that the cost is about 2½ cents per passenger. The statement of President Dunlop of the other company before the committee a year ago is to the same effect, that it cost 2½ cents a passenger to carry them.

In the face of that, with these enormous excesses of capitalization, they seek to hold up the people of Washington and everybody else. You are the guardians of these people; you are the only persons to whom they can look. They have nobody else. And in the slow process of legislation here, how are their rights taken care of? The railroad corporations never sleep. No one desires to injure them, but there is little danger that anyone can. Shrewd, cool, calculating, deliberate men in charge of those organizations, men well versed in every phase of the railroad business, looking out for the interests of those corporations all the time. You come here and I come here as men unskilled in these matters to protect the rights of the people. Then I want right here to call your attention to another matter. It is not three weeks since we have been permitted as a committee to look into these matters at all. In that time we have had our other business to attend to as other gentlemen on this floor have. We have given all the best attention that we could to the bills upon this subject, but I want to say to you that we have not had time to properly consider that bill for permanent construction that has come before the committee. There are many things in it that need examination, and careful examination, too. We found on an investigation Saturday many things that needed to be remedied in the bill—in the Senate bill that is now before us—and every time we pick the matter up to consider it we find other matters that need attention. My friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] said to you that out in the eastern part of this city the people are demanding railway transportation which they can not get. What is the situation? Out in that neighborhood in which the gentleman from Iowa lives, if you want to take a street car to the other part of the town you have to pay two fares, or you must walk down to the Peace Monument to take that car or almost an equal distance. I have been informed that a great many men working at the Patent Office live out in the southeast portion of the town, poorer people who can not afford to live out in the great northwest among the magnates of the city. How are they taken care of?

They get up in the morning and they want to go to their work, and they have to pay two fares to the street railway, or walk across the city to do it. The poor people of the city of Washington are entitled to some privileges as well as the wealthy. These are matters that ought to be considered. We have not had the time to do it. Another matter to be considered is the matter that the gentleman from Iowa called your attention to, and that is the overcrowding of cars. Now, before our committee the statement of the presidents of these railroad companies was that the cars are not overcrowded, and here I give you a statement taken by a Member of this House of a condition which occurred at 5.30 o'clock of the evening of January 9, 1908. One car on the Washington Railway and Electric Company had 122 fare passengers on it going east. Just think of it! I have myself stood near the Peace Monument watching cars coming down the avenue to see whether they corresponded with the statement of the managers of these railways of these reports to the committee, and I found no such situation. I found it as the gentleman from Iowa found it. I have stood there with my watch in my hand counting, and I have found it as the gentleman from Iowa found it, that the people are not getting the service which they ought to have in the great city of Washington. Here, with every opportunity and facility, the center of the nation, a place where the people will come to for an example of good government, they find this condition of affairs. Why out in my own State in the district of my colleague, which adjoins me on the north, a city of only 30,000 people, under our railway commission of the State of Wisconsin the people are demanding a 3-cent fare in this city of only 30,000 people, and I think they are going to get it. Here in this great city of Washington, where strikes, failures, and panics never affect them, because the majority of the people draw their salary from the Government of the United States, here in a city that must continue to grow and increase for a thousand years, franchises are given to these companies without the payment of a dollar, only a single tax of 4 per cent a year upon their earnings is demanded. And such accommodations as you will find in no other city of the United States, little bobtail cars which used to be drawn by one horse or one mule years ago, doing service on the railroads of the national capital, a disgrace to the people of the United States to-day.

Matters in this bill requiring consideration are the matters of accommodation, facilities for transportation, the safety of the people, and the rate of fare to be charged, and the location of these tracks, these permanent tracks before this magnificent depot. They are important questions now. In the bill which passed the Senate is a provision for four tracks directly in front of this depot, the nearest one of them 16 feet from the curb of the depot. The condition that will probably result in times of great crowds, such as an inauguration, are such as may well induce the fear that numbers of people will be killed on those tracks in front of this marble depot, which will be a marble tomb for them. There is the situation as it came before us last Saturday. There the ground has been filled for 30 feet directly in front of that magnificent depot. In the minds of some of us these cars should go below and the people enter these cars under roof without stepping into the rain at all, so that nobody would have to cross over these tracks. Another provision is that street cars cross this grand capitol park in front of the magnificent library.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MURPHY. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. Is the gentleman in favor of the adoption of this bill?

Mr. MURPHY. Well, with all the light that has been put upon it to-day I do not know that I would want to say I am. I am in favor of such action as can be done safely.

Mr. BATES. I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that Members of the House are seeking illumination from members of the District of Columbia Committee. I have been waiting in vain to hear whether the gentleman expresses himself as being in favor or against the pending legislation.

Now, just one word, if you please. I apprehend that all the gentleman has said against the street car service in the city of Washington is true, and it could be said of New York, Pittsburg, and other large cities of the country, but has the gentleman given these arguments before his Committee on the District of Columbia, and has the District of Columbia Committee considered these very defects which the gentleman has pointed out so ably before the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MURPHY. I will say in reply to the gentleman that we have had no opportunity for doing that. He will see that there is a report of hearings before that committee, of other gentlemen. That committee has been engaged with these other matters, and we have not had time to present these matters before that committee, and in the urgency, the demand to force out something, this bill comes before the House to-day. That is the situation.

Mr. BATES. One other question, if the gentleman please.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir; with the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. BATES. In the judgment of the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, would this four-track extended service to the Union Station be operated by the street-car companies at a loss or at a profit?

Mr. MURPHY. It certainly would be operated at a profit. Any extension would be operated there at a profit.

Mr. BATES. And the gentleman thinks an independent proposition of investment by the company would be operated at a profit?

Mr. MURPHY. No question about it whatever. The people who to-day walk from that depot, a great many of them, would not continue to walk. The people who take hacks from that depot would take the cars, who do not take them at all now. There is no question about it that it would pay.

Mr. BATES. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a growing need and a growing demand, not on the part of the railway companies, but on the part of the people—the men, women, and children—who walk in the slush and mud there to-day, for this extension, and I trust that the gentleman's committee will in their wisdom report a suitable bill for the permanent trackage. I want to ask the gentleman this further question: How long will it be, if this bill is defeated, before the Committee on the District of Columbia will be able to report a bill for permanent construction?

Mr. MURPHY. I can say as to that, sir, that I am only a minority member of that committee. There is no desire to postpone matters, but there is this desire in that committee—that we shall have time to investigate these matters. Perhaps in two weeks it could be reported. I will say I can see no reason why in two weeks, or four weeks at most, the permanent bill can not be reported. And if this matter were postponed for that time I do not know that any great harm will be done.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman think it will take until a year from next March for these railway companies to put in a permanent construction?

Mr. MURPHY. I think it will take nearly that time, for this reason: The peculiar construction that must be directly in front of that depot will have to be put in mainly on a curve. Every inch of the metal work there has got to be figured, every foot of it, down to the finest point. It has not the character of ordinary railway construction. I have no doubt, in the present condition of manufacturing establishments in this country, for that peculiar work it will take some time for the companies to get it out anywhere. It will take quite a period of time to put in those tracks. I think it can be put in within a year. I see no reason why permanent tracks should not be in there by the first of next January or the first of next February.

Mr. BATES. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that if the temporary track arrangement was legislated on at the same time the permanent track legislation was acted upon it would meet all the needs?

Mr. MURPHY. In response to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] I will say that I think it would, and I see no objection to that in case we have time on that committee to properly consider this matter and bring it before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 9121. An act to authorize a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa;

H. R. 11330. An act to authorize the Chicago, Indiana and Southern Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the town of Gary, Ind;

H. R. 11331. An act to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio and Chicago Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River at or near the town of Gary, Ind.; and

H. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution to amend the act of March 4, 1907, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to use for rent an increased proportion of the appropriation made by said act for rent for the Bureau of Forestry.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 456) to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 7.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Flathead River, Montana, from the mouth of the same to the city of Kalispell, with a view to dredging and cleaning out a channel carrying 4 feet of water from the city of Kalispell to the mouth of said river and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

Senate concurrent resolution 8.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the portion of the Yellowstone River from the city of Glendive, Mont., to the mouth of said river, with a view of cleaning out the channel thereof, so as to maintain a 4-foot stage of water therein, including a lock, at the United States Government dam, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey of the entrance and harbor at St. Augustine, Fla., with a view to determining the necessity for and cost of construction of necessary breakwaters, etc., to protect the Government works at St. Augustine, Fla., from damage from erosions and encroachments of the sea.

Senate concurrent resolution 16.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made at Depere, Wis., for a turning basin; also for the purpose of deepening the present channel between Green Bay and Depere and making it a 20-foot channel clear through from Green Bay to Depere, and to submit estimates for the same.

Senate concurrent resolution 17.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Oconto Harbor, Oconto, Wis., with a view to providing a 20-foot channel and turning basin in said harbor, and to submit estimates for the same.

TEMPORARY TRACKS TO UNION STATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk a clipping taken from the Washington Post this morning, which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An interesting story was told last week bearing upon the probable action of certain leaders in the House with respect to this bill. There need be no fear, it is said, that Chairman Fowler and his committee will not report the Aldrich bill promptly to the House, and that this measure will go through the orderly course of committee procedure without recourse to the device of sending it to the Ways and Means Committee or considering it without sending it to any committee whatever.

It was said that Speaker Cannon was so firmly convinced of the necessity of speedily passing a measure containing the vital principles of the Aldrich bill that he thought seriously of deposing Mr. Fowler from the chairmanship of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Speaker understood Mr. Fowler's opposition to that bill and his great desire to have his own currency measure adopted by the House. Mr. Fowler, however, it is said, saw the handwriting on the wall, and gave the Speaker to understand that he would abide by the will of the majority of the House, and would report the measure when it came over from the Senate. With such an understanding the Speaker reassigned Mr. Fowler to the headship of the committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, every word, from the first to the last, of that publication is utterly and absolutely false.

When Speaker CANNON called me in and advised me of the fact that he was going to appoint the Committee on Banking and Currency, after telling me that all of the published statements to the effect that he intended to displace me were a pack of lies, the only suggestion he made at all was that he thought it would be unwise to bring any measure into the House before the holidays, on account of the sensitive condition of the public mind.

No allusion of any kind whatever was made to any bill in this House or any other. I replied to him as follows: "I agree with you; and more than that, I believe that any measure that attempts to affect the present situation or to deal with it in any way would be unwise, not only before the holidays, but useless and unwise for this entire session." And that is all that was said.

I sincerely hope and firmly believe that no Member of this House would permit the putrid purpose of securing place, however exalted, to paralyze his patriotism and destroy his devotion to his country. [Applause.] The man who betrays the principles which he truly believes will best conserve the interests of his country is as foul a traitor as he who, in uniform, upon the field of battle, turns and shoots down his comrades defending the Stars and Stripes. Such an imputation is an insult to the Speaker and every Member of this House. I denounce it as false, and, as I believe, maliciously false.

Mr. Chairman, what I said to Speaker CANNON with regard to temporary legislation I thoroughly believe. After the panic of 1873 a panacea was offered to General Grant in the way of more greenbacks, and he vetoed it. In 1893 the panacea was offered to Grover Cleveland of more silver, and he vetoed it; and I hope that this House now, under exactly the same conditions, will be as intelligent and brave as those two men were in their day.

The importance of this question, Mr. Chairman, can hardly be appreciated. We are dealing with bank resources amounting now to $19,645,000,000 in this country, while the banking power of all the rest of the world amounts to, according to the same calculation, $30,500,000,000. In other words, we have in the United States two-fifths of all the banking power of all the world; and we produced last year products of various kinds valued at $25,000,000,000.

Now, everybody knows that there is something wrong, radically wrong, and those who have studied the situation know that we have the worst financial and currency practices in the world instead of the best.

What is the acute and most urgent question before the American people? What is the question that will not down until the people themselves have settled it?

What is the immediate and direct cause of the present deplorable situation? What is the cause of the most disgraceful incident in the business life of the Nation?

It is a bond-secured currency which bears no relation whatever to the business of the country.

What was the origin of this bond-secured currency?

In 1863, when Secretary Chase wanted to raise money to carry on the war, he devised this scheme of basing our currency upon Government bonds; and, by imposing a 10 per cent tax upon bank-note circulation, compelled the bankers to buy the United States bonds and issue circulation based upon them. It was a bond-selling scheme in its inception, and it has never been anything else but a bond-speculating scheme.

From 1882 to 1891 this bond-secured currency, though the country was expanding and growing in every direction, fell from three hundred and sixty-two millions to one hundred and twenty-five millions, and this I say in the face of the fact that the period was one of prosperity and expansion. It contracted two hundred and twenty-five millions simply because it did not pay to hold the bonds.

From 1891 to 1900 you will find upon investigation that the bank notes often decreased from July to December, when they ought to have increased from two hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five millions of dollars simply because it paid to sell the bonds, and the bankers did what they ought to do for their stockholders as a matter of business. Again, you will find that in the same nine years from January to July, when the bank-note currency ought to have decreased from two hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five millions, the circulation actually increased, because it paid to buy the bonds, and the bankers did what was for the interest of the stockholders of their respective banks.

In other words, a bond-secured currency bears no relation to the business of the country, but increases and decreases according to the profit or loss in buying or selling the bonds.

Mr. Chairman, if the principle or practice, rather, of basing a currency upon bonds were a wise one, is it not altogether likely that some other nation would have adopted it during the past forty-five years? One country did adopt it, that enterprising country across the Pacific, Japan. But the Japanese Government adopted it only overnight. They found this bond-secured currency utterly unfit for their country and discarded it and adopted credit currency. So we stand alone in all the world in having it, and we have it only by tradition and not by adoption as a principle.

The present panic, how did it come about? Every fall, beginning with July and up to the 1st of January, it has been demonstrated that the central cities of the country send into the farming districts about three hundred millions of currency. Last fall, when this demand was urgent, there coincidentally happened a financial difficulty in New York that precipitated a run on the banks and probably from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000 of currency was seized, so that the New York bankers not only were utterly unable to send money to the West, but were even compelled to adopt clearing-house certificates.

Therefore our whole system of currency exchange broke down from one end of the country to another in a time of prosperity, when the prices of all commodities were high, and people wanted to buy them. You could not sell a bale of cotton and transfer title; you could not sell a fat steer and transfer title, or a bushel of wheat and transfer title, because your current exchange had completely broken down.

Now, gentlemen, if you had had the kind of currency that you ought to have had, and if the banks of this country could have sent their credits into the country districts; if they could have converted their book credits subject to checks into current credits, which passed without indorsement, we never would have had the troubles of this last summer. It is a certainty that the banks in these central cities were owing the country banks more than $300,000,000. That was an absolute debt, subject to check or draft. They held their reserves against $300,000,000. Now, if they could have converted this $300,000,000, which is a debt against which they hold reserves, into a current credit, and have held the same reserve against the current credits that they held against the order credits, they could have paid off every one of these banks throughout the country and have moved the crops and no one would have ever known that the crops were being moved nor that a bank had closed its doors in New York. They would not have increased their debt one single dollar; they would not have increased their reserves one dollar; and it would have been simply a matter of bookkeeping—the president of the bank saying to the cashier, "Send out our bank notes, charge the country banker, and credit the cashier of this bank." That would have been all there was to the transaction.

With a view of impressing upon the members of the Senate and the House of Representatives the fatal mistake of pursuing this policy any further, especially of passing the boundaries of Government obligations, I addressed the following letter to each of them:

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: While we are trying to think ourselves out of our deplorable currency condition, it seems as though we ought to take some note of the observations and conclusions of the leading economic authorities of the world and of what they are thinking and saying about us.

Paul Leroy-Beaulieu, the leading economic authority of France, has this to say in the New York Evening Post of December 31, 1907, in its annual financial review:

"It is true the American monetary system can not stand on its feet. Something of course must be done; and I hold to President Cleveland's principle that the United States must work out the separation of bank and state; but any immediate action in this matter is difficult, if only for the reason that the public funds used by the national banks could hardly be capitalized elsewhere at anything like a 2 per cent rate. In this connection I have been surprised to learn of a possible future loophole to permit the national banks to issue bills against other than Government funds. It seems to me that this would remove the very necessary limits which the possession of Government funds established; if railway or even municipal funds for example should possibly take their place, it might lead to dangerous inflation."

In the London Economist the following recently appeared:

"How and when the American coach will be pulled out of the mire in which it has been sticking for the last eight weeks is a problem that becomes more pressing every day. The present situation is a peril to financial and commercial interests all the world over. The best that can be said is that the realities are beginning to be appreciated on the other side of the Atlantic. * * * A great part of the American currency is inconvertible. The issues of bank notes in the United States are not based upon sound principles. The so-called security of bond deposits is no proper security at all. It is a device which originated in a desire to give an artificially high value to the Government's debt and enable it to borrow cheaply. The American people are saddled with an unsound currency because the American Government when it was hard up wanted to make a market for its bonds."

And also the following:

"The American public has become so hardened to the idea of bond-secured currency, with no proper relation to gold, and therefore no automatic elasticity, that we fear there is little chance of creation of simple, sound, and uniform system of currency. If American bank notes are issued to an unlimited extent on security of railway bonds, we may have to study again the history of Law's Mississippi scheme, and of the French assignats, which were proudly described as paper money based on the firm foundation of landed property."

If the observations of these leading economic authorities are true, it must be self-evident that we are at the parting of the ways now precisely as we were in 1896; and that to adopt the principle of using bonds as the basis of our currency will be far more disastrous in the end than it would have been to adopt silver as our standard of value in 1896.

Very truly, yours, CHARLES N. FOWLER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not desire to be interrupted now to answer any question, but when I have finished I shall be very pleased to answer questions.

The next important question that we want to consider in this country is that of our bank reserves; and I want to say that there is, in my opinion, nothing that is fit for a bank reserve except gold, and that in any country, whatever the standard of value may be, the reserves should be coined out of that standard of value. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let this be understood once for all. If it is cotton, then coin them out of cotton; if it is wheat, coin them out of wheat; if it is copper, coin them out of copper; if it is silver, coin them out of silver; but if it is gold, coin your reserves out of gold.

Now, what is the fact about the reserves of this country?

Mr. Chairman, having called the attention of the House to the immediate cause of the panic last fall, which I believe was distinctly a currency panic, I shall now proceed to point out the fundamental defects in our financial and currency practices, which I will not dignify by calling principles or systems. I believe that certain of these defects are most serious and must inevitably, sooner or later, lead to commercial disasters, compared with which the experiences of the fall of 1907 may be regarded as a pleasing recollection.

First, I desire to call the attention of the House to the appalling condition into which the reserves of the banks of the country have already come.

I tried to make an estimate of the amount of bank notes, which are nothing but mere promises to pay based upon other debts, Government bonds due twenty-five years from now, which have found their way into the banks of this country and are being held as reserves. I estimated from the information that I could get last year that there were over $200,000,000 of bank notes so held.

Last Saturday, in a conversation with the Comptroller of the Currency (Mr. Ridgely), he said to me, "Mr. FOWLER, I do not believe that there are more than $150,000,000 of bank notes, of which we now have $700,000,000—I do not believe there are more than $150,000,000 of them in circulation."

This leaves $550,000,000 of bank notes in the reserves of the banks of this country, one-half of all the cash reserves now held by the banks being in mere promises to pay.

Think of it gentlemen. Now how does that come about? I will tell you. A gentleman recently told me that he knew of a trust company that had taken $3,000,000 of the bank notes of one single bank and locked them up so that that bank could make its 1 per cent and over on its circulation, and that another trust company had $2,000,000 of the bank notes of another bank locked up in the bottom of its reserve.

And so, all over this country, the men who have national banks go to the State banks and trust companies and place their national-bank notes in the reserves of these State banks and trust companies, until, according to Comptroller Ridgely, they have crowded five hundred and fifty million of gold out of our reserve, for remember that every dollar of bank notes in our reserves has displaced and crowded out just that amount of gold.

It may be asked why the national banks desire to lodge their notes permanently in the reserves of the State banks and trust companies. It is because they make a profit of about 1 per cent, sometimes more and sometimes less, according to the price of the bonds, and therefore desire to keep their notes out permanently.

A perfect parallel to this process may be found in the fact that from 1793 to 1834 a differential of one-half of 1 per cent in favor of silver crowded every dollar of gold out of this country.

The required reserves of our national banks average about 20 per cent. My investigation last March, the result of which I tried to give to this House, and which contained a prophecy of precisely what would happen last fall, but which was not listened to very patiently because, as I suppose, people dislike to hear unpleasant things, disclosed the fact that the banks of this country, outside of the national banks, only held 6.35 per cent in cash. According to Mr. Ridgely's opinion, above referred to, probably a half or two-thirds of all the reserves held by the State banks and trust companies, insignificant as the amount was, was in these bank notes—mere promises to pay the debts of the banks.

The following letter I have just received from the Comptroller of the Currency and read it because it discloses the high average of the reserves required by the national banks and the very great and unfair advantage the State banks and trust companies now have over the banks under national supervision:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 25, 1908.

Hon CHAS. N. FOWLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry by telephone, you are respectfully informed that the percentage of reserve held by the national banks during the year 1907 was at the lowest on March 22, being 20.74 per cent, as you will note from the following:

1907.	Reserve held.	Reserve held, including excessive credits with reserve agents.
January 26	21.53	26.87
March 22	20.74	25.45
May 20	21.22	25.79
August 22	21.33	25.56
December 3	21.31	24.72

On December 3, 1907, the net deposits subject to reserve requirements aggregated $4,906,684,057.73. A reserve was required of $978,104,566.40, equaling 19.93 per cent. * * *

Very respectfully, WM. B. RIDGELY, Comptroller.

Mr. Chairman, in the second place, I desire to call the attention of the House to the 346,000,000 of United States notes still outstanding, mere promises to pay, mere pieces of fiat, issued during the civil war, more than forty years ago, and under the stress of supposed necessity. They have never been paid and canceled, nor retired by funding, simply because neither the Republican party nor the Democratic party has ever had the political courage to do its duty and eliminate this ever-threatening danger.

These United States notes have remained to this day a disgrace to our economic wisdom, a monument to our political cowardice, and what is more, a serious menace to our national credit. Nay, more, they have been a constant source of unsound thought, because their existence has led many to the conclusion that our bond-secured bank notes were fit for bank reserves, on the theory that if the greenbacks were proper reserves the bank notes necessarily must be, because secured by Government obligations.

Mr. Chairman, all of us remember the horror of 1895, when the credit of this nation hung over the precipice of dishonor, and when we were certainly within forty-eight hours, possibly twenty-four hours, of national repudiation, for apprehension had set the endless chain of greenbacks to work, and our one hundred million of gold had dwindled to forty-one million of dollars.

At that critical moment Mr. Cleveland had the intelligence, the courage, and the patriotism to grasp this monster by the throat, and, against the protests of practically the entire Democratic party, appeal to that great financier, Mr. Morgan, through whose aid our national honor was maintained by controlling the exchanges until we could recoup our gold. I, for one, thank God that a man like Grover Cleveland was President of the United States that year.

Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House I will read a letter just received from the Treasury Department giving the actual condition of the Treasury on the 8th day of February, 1895, when the contract was signed with Mr. Morgan, and also on the 12th day of February, 1895, when our net gold in the Treasury fell to $41,340,181.11.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 25, 1908.

HON. CHARLES N. FOWLER,
Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of this date (by phone) relative to the issue of $62,315,400 in 4 per cent bonds of the United States dated February 1, 1895, you are advised that the contract for the sale of these bonds in exchange for gold was executed February 8, 1895, and that the first deposit of gold under the terms of the contract was made at New York on February 11, 1895.

The Treasury holdings of gold on February 8, 1895, was as follows:

Gold coin	$52,093,118.07
Gold bullion	43,288,961.05
		$95,382,079.12
Less gold certificates in circulation		52,599,019.00
Net gold in Treasury		42,783,060.12

On February 12, 1895, the net gold in the Treasury amounted to $41,340,181.11, the lowest point reached since the resumption of specie payments January 1, 1879.

Respectfully,
J. F. MELINE,
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Mr. Chairman, who can tell when this slumbering danger shall again threaten the credit of the nation and shake the finances of the Government and the commerce of the United States to its very center? Do we not know that we are carrying 700,000,000 of bank notes, 600,000,000 of silver, and 346,000,000 of greenbacks on a mere pin point of gold amounting to only 150,000,000? And yet it is suggested that we may with safety add 250,000,000 more of Government guaranty of paper, 500,000,000 more of Government paper; yes, a billion more of Government paper, which must in the very nature of things lead on to other hundreds of millions and billions more of fiat.

The people of this country, in Congress and out of it, seem to be thinking of isolated facts, of isolated circumstances, not at all realizing that great laws, as certain in their operation as the law of gravitation, must inevitably control the situation and that the measure of our misfortune and misery will be in the degree of our folly.

Mr. Chairman, the third fundamental defect in our Government practices to which I desire to call the attention of this House is the handling of our Government funds.

Think of it, gentlemen; instead of our Government receiving payment and paying its own obligations as all governments, States, cities, and business establishments do, we are actually withdrawing from the channels of trade daily the reserves which ought to continue in a normal relation to the business of the country.

If any corporation or large business house pursued the practices of this Government, I think it should and would be mobbed inside of a week for doing it.

The subtreasury system of the United States has been a curse to the commerce of the country ever since it was established; and it has been more of a curse in recent years than ever before, simply because the business of the country has grown to such proportions and the Government transactions are so large that our practices amount to a threatening commercial earthquake.

Not only is this true, but it is a constant source of suspicion, a source of hatred, and a source of sectional rivalry. Indeed, I do not know of anything in this country that has constantly aroused such a bitter feeling between the various sections of the country as the distribution of this money forcibly withdrawn from the business of the country, and I was on the point of saying forcibly put back in times of stress.

A desperate effort is being made at this very time to get evidence to show how favorite cities, possibly favorite banks, have obtained an advantage by securing an undue share of the public funds. The bank which the Secretary of the Treasury honestly believes needs it most undoubtedly gets the money, but the opinion, the conviction, which necessarily must result from the impression made on the Secretary by the arguments advanced and the showing made controls his action. If the applicant is eloquent and powerful and his influence very great, the Secretary of the Treasury, being human like the rest of us, is moved naturally just as all the rest of us would be.

Mr. Chairman, the United States Government should receive its revenues by check and draft of national banks and deposit its money every day by check and draft and withdraw it from the bank by check and draft precisely as any other business institution does, and should cease to be a disturbing factor in the business of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to pull one million, five million, ten million, twenty-five million, fifty million, two-hundred and fifty million dollars of the reserves of this country out of the channels of trade without disturbing our business conditions most disastrously. Nor is the withdrawal of the reserve from the channels of trade much more unfortunate in its ultimate effect than the thrusting of this vast sum back at places and at times wholly without reference to the actual commercial requiremens.

You will observe, gentlemen, that I speak of commercial requirements. These transactions have no natural connection with the commercial movements of the country. The transactions of the Government have become so stupendous that the public welfare demands a rational disposition of the public revenues.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fourth fundamental defect, which is the banking system, or banking practices, rather, of the country.

Our banking system is individual and is the counterpart of that characteristic which, I think, distinguishes our people from those of all other countries in a marked degree, and that is our individualism. The American citizen is the most positive, characteristic, and individual human being in the world. He is the outgrowth of our political institutions, and, therefore, naturally so, and our banking practices are in perfect keeping with that individualism. It is the individual system, the unit system.

We have in this country to-day, national and State banks and trust companies, 19,746 independent and individual institutions. Their position depends in some instances almost entirely upon the standing of the officers of the bank, the capital varying all the way from nothing up to $25,000,000. The deposits of these commercial banks are now in excess of $13,000,000,000, while the number of depositors now runs into the millions. Of the national banks there are 6,620, while of others there are more than 13,000.

Now, gentlemen, this individual banking system can never stand alone, because just as quick as a rumor sweeps across the country every man who has a dollar deposited in any bank, except one of the very largest capital, compares at once its deposits and its reserve. He fears it can not pay, and he begins to doubt whether any bank will survive. The result is that there are runs on banks all over the country.

We must coordinate all our banking institutions, gentlemen, and bring them into one harmonious whole, so that while we gain all the power of a great central bank—indeed, the greatest in the world—we shall lose none of the individualism of the American bank, which is a source of local pride and will be a great source of power in the development of American resources, American character, and American institutions.

Up in New England you have a grand system of mutual savings banks. Go down to Boston, and you will find trust companies doing everything a bank can do—indeed, everything they are authorized to do under the proposed bill. It is a trust company, it accepts deposits for savings, it does a commercial business, it has time certificates, it does absolutely everything that a bank can do. A national bank in the same town can only do a commercial business.

Go to New York, and the trust company does everything except strictly discount business. Go to Philadelphia, and a trust company, I believe, does everything that a national bank can do and all that a trust company can do, and it takes savings deposits besides.

Go into a trust company in Detroit, Mich., and you will find that it can only do a trust business, because the State banks anticipated the encroachments and limited the powers of trust companies, so that a trust company can not do anything except a strictly trust business. Go out to Chicago, and you will find trust companies doing anything that any bank can do, wherever it may be located. Beyond New Jersey and New York in the United States there are only twenty-five mutual savings banks in the United States. All the rest of them are stock companies run for profit.

So what have we in this country? You have banks doing business with no reserves, banks with 5 per cent reserves, banks in some States with 10 per cent reserves, and in others with 15 per cent, and the result is that these institutions can do all kinds of business, act as executor, administrator, guardian, and trustee, accept savings accounts, and do a general commercial business, in many cases carrying only such reserves as their own sweet wills suggest or such as may be required by State statures, ranging all the way from nothing up to 25 per cent.

Such a condition must inevitably lead to a constant warfare between the different banking institutions of the country, and ultimately destroy the national system, if it does not resort to these same sources of profit, because the other institutions, having to carry very slight, if any, required reserve, can pay such a rate for deposits as to ultimately undermine national banks doing a strictly commercial business.

In the face of this destructive competition there has developed recently in the evolution of American banking this practice or device. A national bank—the First National Bank of Chicago is an illustration, and it is one of the greatest financial institutions of this country, and its president is, I think, the greatest banker, distinctly so speaking, in the United States—probably started the scheme because of the pressure of other banking institutions doing all kinds of modern banking, as I have pointed out.

Mr. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, has organized the First Trust and Savings Bank, which occupies the floor below the First National Bank proper. The capital of the institution downstairs is, I think, a million dollars, all of which I presume is in the vault of the institution upstairs. This annex to the upstairs institution now has, I think, about forty millions of deposits, and, considering the length of time it has been doing business, is quite the most remarkable of its kind in the United States.

These two institutions I am confident are managed with the greatest of skill and absolute integrity. But this practice is sweeping over the country, and other national banks have taken it up as a method of meeting the competition of the various State institutions which have such a decided advantage over the national banks.

The other day I called the attention of Comptroller Ridgely to the fact, and he said: "Yes, it is being done; and in some cases I am going downstairs or upstairs, as the case may be, and examining these savings banks and trust companies."

Now, will Mr. Ridgely tell us what right he has to go into a savings bank which is carried on under a State law, or into a trust company which is conducted under the State law? None whatever.

So, as you go about the country investigating this question, you will find the national bank on the corner and a savings bank around the corner and the back ends of the two institutions in happy and convenient conjunction; so that when the national bank examiner appears he gets all the best securities of both institutions, and when the State bank examiner appears he has the pleasure of seeing the same best securities.

Mr. Chairman, this thing went on to such an extent in the New England States a few years ago that in Massachusetts and Connecticut at least, and possibly in other States, they passed laws absolutely prohibiting any national bank and savings bank from occupying the same building or from having any connection whatever.

So, too, you will find some unholy alliance with a trust company up the street, down the street, or across the street. These practices were illustrated to an astounding degree by Mr. John R. Walsh in Chicago within the last two years.

Mr. Chairman, is it not high time that the American people know what is actually in the bowels of both of these banking institutions which are working in such happy harmony with each other?

The people should be deeply interested in their own affairs; and we should legislate for the people and absolutely protect the people if possible, realizing that the banks can and will always take care of themselves.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I am far from the exact truth when I say that the unfortunate experiences through which we have been passing during the last three months had their beginning and were precipitated by conditions that were wholly due to this character of banking in New York City.

What was the situation? The trust companies of New York had been making war upon the national banks of New York for years, just as I have pointed out, by bidding up on deposits. The Knickerbocker Trust Company, because, of course, it was not compelled to carry adequate reserves, would take a deposit from anybody, practically, and give 4 per cent on it. Its required cash reserve was just 5 per cent. Of course it could take deposits from the national banks who could not possibly afford to pay more than 2 in reason. The story of the Knickerbocker was only the story of several others. Hence a feeling grew up in that city that amounted to actual war between the national banks and the trust companies which had withdrawn from the clearing-house association because, forsooth, the national banks insisted upon their carrying larger reserves.

When this trouble came on and the Knickerbocker appealed for help at the conference to consider the application, one president of a national bank said: "If I had my way I would let every trust company go to the wall—I would make an example of such banking methods." To this Mr. Morgan replied, "You don't know what you are saying. There is a leak in the dyke, and you can stop it now by putting forth your hand. Later on you may throw your dead body into the breach without being able to stop the flood."

What might have happened in New York City, what might have happened to the whole country, no one will now ever know. Mr. Morgan, a giant of giants, the Hercules of finance, a banker statesman, a banker patriot, a man with a great heart as well as a great intellect, stood like Gibraltar protecting the nineteen billions of resources of our banks, protecting the occupations of 25,000,000 American men and women, protecting the national welfare against the consequences of a more destructive, terrific, and appalling cataclysm than has ever swept over the commerce of any country.

Is it wise to remain in a position where you must depend upon some one man? And who will take his place when he is gone? Is it not high time that we had a scientific, sound, and wise system of finance and currency; one that can stand alone, one that can stand the strain of contracting credit when the hour comes?

Mr. Chairman, the fifth fundamental weakness or defect in the present financial and currency situation grows out of the fact that the national banks are the owners of practically all of the 2 per cent Government bonds, or seven hundred million of them, which, including the premiums, represent seven hundred and fifteen millions of dollars.

Suppose we should have a war, a great war, calling for the issue of two or three billions of dollars of bonds? The rate of interest must necessarily rise to 4, probably 5, per cent. What would be the price of our 2 per cents? Would they fall 20, 30, or 40 per cent? Thirty per cent would mean a loss to the national banks of this country of $200,000,000. The banks would not be the only losers. The people of this country, with a third of the national banks going down, must be the ultimate sufferers.

Now, gentlemen, these are the great fundamental and serious defects of our financial and currency practices—I will not call it a system. It is not entitled to the name. The time is now ripe, the opportunity at hand when we can eliminate every one of these defects and secure a scientific, sound, and wise financial and currency system. It can all be done in three or four months, and nobody in this country need know that it has been accomplished, except the banks, who will do the funding of the bond-secured notes, the United States Treasurer, and the Comptroller of the Currency. Once in operation, I feel confident that we should have, all things considered, the best banking and currency system in the world.

I hope and believe that my exposition of the proposed measure will demonstrate that it will achieve the following results:

First. It will unify our banking system.

Second. It will provide that our bank reserves shall be in gold coin or its equivalent.

Third. It will establish a simple and scientific monetary system with gold coin, or its equivalent, as bank reserve with guaranteed bank-credit notes redeemable in gold for our larger bills, and with silver for our smaller bills and subsidiary coins.

Fourth. It will secure an absolutely free issue of credit currency redeemable in gold coin, always adapting itself to the ever-varying needs of trade; never too great, never too small, always just adequate to the requirements of business.

Fifth. It will establish in the United States Treasury such a guaranty fund as will absolutely protect all depositors, and thereby prevent panics and the hoarding of money.

Sixth. It will completely divorce the operations of the United States Treasury from the trade and commerce of the country, and thereby prevent them from being a disturbing factor in our business.

There are those who think a central bank would bring the desired reforms and is what we want in this country. I have thought a good deal upon this subject. It may be possible, but after a long and serious consideration of the subject, I do not believe that these defects and evils in our present system can be eradicated through a central bank. I do not believe that a central bank is suited to this great country of ours. I do not believe it is suited to the people of this country. I believe that this country is too partisan a country to ever be a proper place for a healthy and normal development and proper administration of a great central bank. Our political institutions, in my judgment, are not suited to a great central bank.

Mark this now: France has a central bank, the best in the world. Its charter was drawn by that matchless intellect of his time, Napoleon. France has 204,000 square miles of territory. Germany has 208,000 square miles. Either of these countries can be dropped into the grand old State of Texas, which has 265,000 square miles, and leave us with the square miles of Illinois to spare. The United States has 3,742,000 square miles. The distances are so great and the products of our country are so varied that I do not believe that a central bank could meet the requirements of our vast business interests and treat them as they should be treated.

There is another thing. Every one of these great central banks of Europe is presided over by the greatest economists, by the most successful business men, the profoundest scholars, and the wisest statesmen of their respective countries. Is there any man here whose imagination will suffer him to believe that you can establish such an institution in this country so far as he has watched the political forces of this country?

Mr. Chairman, in the orderly discussion of this question and in the accomplishment of the things that are to be desired, the first and most important thing, as a matter of soundness, is to unify the banking interests of this country, bringing them under one uniform law and common administration, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to the Gulf.

That this can be done let no man doubt, and that, too, without friction or shock, and only with the more wholesome, uplifting, strengthening, and reassuring effect to the business interests of this country and the reestablishment of absolute confidence, which has been literally shattered by our bond-secured currency, because it has utterly broken down in a time of prosperity, when no other possible excuse can be given for our inability to transfer the title of a bale of cotton, a fat steer, or a bushel of wheat, although the consumers at home and abroad were anxious to secure them at high prices.

Mr. Chairman, the unification of our banking interests can be secured without any possibility of doubt if the following powers are granted to the national banks:

First. Allow the national banks to issue credit notes, converting their deposits subject to check into current credits redeemable in gold coin.

Second. Allow the national banks to guarantee their deposits by establishing a guaranty fund in the Treasury of the United States which will exceed $500,000,000 within the first year.

Third. Allow the national banks to act as guardian, executor, administrator, and trustee.

Fourth. Allow the national banks to accept savings-bank accounts.

Fifth. Allow the bankers themselves of each commercial section or zone of our country to examine and supervise the banks of their respective sections.

Mr. Chairman, with these provisions placed upon the statute book no State bank or trust company can stay out of the national system; and if they can not stay out of it because of its advantages to the people, they ought to come into it. That is self-evident.

Mr. Chairman, with the banking institutions of our country all under one uniform and harmonious administration, the banking business will be unified, our reserves will all be alike in quantity and quality. There will be nothing but gold or its equivalent in our bank reserves, and these should and would be sufficient to prove our credits and protect our depositors.

This accomplished, we naturally turn to the subject of the administration of this unified banking system.

Mr. Chairman, after much deliberation I have become convinced that in working out a scientific banking system for the United States it should not only be sound, but wise, from the standpoint of American character, our political institutions, and the needs of a vast country, with products almost as varied as those of all the rest of the world.

I have become convinced that the autonomy or independence of each individual bank in this country ought to be preserved, and also that local self-government ought to be vouchsafed to the banking institutions in all the commercial zones of the country, precisely as political self-government was secured to the respective States of the Republic. How successful I have been in working out this thought and practically applying it the sequel of the plan will show.

Mr. Chairman, the organization of the system is this: The Comptroller of the Currency, for additional reasons, which will subsequently be disclosed, shall select certain cities of the United States, which shall be known as "redemption cities," where the notes of the banks of the country shall be redeemed. Of these cities there will probably be in the neighborhood of twenty, and, for the purpose of my argument, I will assume that the number is twenty. All of the banks that may redeem their notes at any given redemption city so selected shall be and constitute a redemption district.

Mr. Chairman, to be more explicit and illustrate the principle or process, let us assume that the city of Boston is a redemption city and that New England is a redemption district. Then every bank in New England which redeems its notes at Boston becomes a unit of the district precisely as every citizen is a unit as a voter—the bank with $25,000 capital votes on equal terms with the bank of $10,000,000 capital. All the banks of New England constituting that redemption district, under a call by the Comptroller of the Currency, will meet upon a day fixed and at a place determined upon, and proceed to elect a board of managers, consisting of seven members, for that district, precisely as you elect a board of managers for a clearing-house association.

Would they elect the same class of men that Boston and New York and Chicago select as their clearing-house board? Certainly they would. Having elected a board of seven men, the seven men then select one of their number as chairman of that board, who in turn becomes a deputy comptroller of the currency. Now, this board supervise the banks in that district. They employ the examiners. They direct them, and the examiners are paid by the Government out of a fund created and not by the banks as now in the form of fees. This board of managers meet every month at least, but they may meet oftener.

I apprehend that you are confident that this board would know what was in the assets of the banks, especially when they came to realize that that New England district was to pay 10 per cent of the loss of any failures that occur in that district. That would make every banker in the New England district a guardian of the banking interests of New England, and he would invariably report to this board of managers whatever he saw that was wrong.

I apprehend that the examinations made by this board would be very different from the examinations that are being made to-day. I think I may assume that if we had had such a board in New York City, the Knickerbocker Trust Company never would have failed; and that the National Bank of North America, which closed its doors this morning, never would have failed; and that all the consequences flowing from those failures never would have been visited upon this country.

Mr. Chairman, mark this and note well the last step in the proposed organization. The chairman of the board of managers of the redemption district of New England, together with the chairmen of the other nineteen boards of managers of the several redemption districts, will constitute a general board over which the Comptroller of the Currency shall preside, and this board shall meet at least twice every year; possibly this should be more frequently, say, at least every three months during the year.

It will be observed that the twenty representatives of the various boards of managers will come from all sections of the country and bring with them impressions, advice, and opinions and all the conservatism of their respective boards.

Mr. Chairman, is it too much to hope and believe that through this board, representing as it does all sections of the country and all the varied business interests of the United States, we shall have a great conservative force to keep in bounds, direct, and control the commerce and business generally of the United States in a manner and to a degree that will prove most wholesome and advantageous to all the people?

Mr. Chairman, having thus completed the organization and perfected the system of redemption at the various cities selected by the Comptroller of the Currency, we should be ready to carry the funding operation provided for in the measure into effect.

Section 11 reads as follows:

SEC. 11. That upon the completion of the organizations of the several bank-note redemption districts, as hereinbefore provided, any national bank may retire all of its present bond-secured note circulation by depositing with the United States Treasurer an amount of the present bond-secured notes and of lawful money, which, together, will be equal to its entire circulation now outstanding, and may thereupon take out for issue and circulation an amount of bank notes, which shall be known as "national bank guaranteed credit notes," equal to its paid-up capital without depositing United States bonds to secure the payment thereof as now provided by law: Provided, however, That before any national bank shall have the right to retire its present bond-secured circulation and take out "national bank guaranteed credit notes," as in this section prescribed, it shall first, unless located in its redemption city, make arrangements with a national bank which is located in its redemption city for the redemption of its bank notes in gold coin or its equivalent; and shall deposit in gold coin, or its equivalent, with the Treasurer of the United States an amount of money equal to 5 per cent of its average deposits during the preceding calendar six months, and in addition thereto an amount equal to 5 per cent of the "national bank guaranteed credit notes" it proposes to take out for issue and circulation.

From the most casual reading of this section it will be observed that there can not be the slightest disturbance to the business of the country, but, on the other hand, immediately a most wholesome reassurance, because thereafter no depositor of a national bank can ever lose a dollar. Nay, more than this; there will come a consciousness that thereafter there will always be springing into existence currency to meet every demand of trade, and a currency panic such as we had last fall will become impossible.

Mr. Chairman, while I shall not take the time of the House to read a statement from the Government actuary, I shall include it at this point of my remarks for the information of the Members of this House and the people of the country who desire to know just how the bill actually affects the banking institutions of the country.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNMENT ACTUARY,
Washington, January 27, 1908.

DEAR MR. FOWLER: As you requested, assuming that we are dealing with a country bank, which is required to carry a reserve of 15 per cent, of which 9 per cent may be kept with a reserve agent, the following will show the result before and after the bill (H. R. 12677) went into operation:

	Under present law.	Under H. R. 12677.
Capital of country bank	$100,000.00	$100,000.00
Circulation	100,000.00	100,000.00
Deposits	2,000,000.00	2,000,000.00
Bonds deposited	100,000.00
Cash reserve:
On deposits	120,000.00	120,000.00
On circulation	6,000.00	6,000.00
With reserve agents—
On deposits	180,000.00	80,000.00
On circulation	9,000.00	4,000.00
With Treasurer of United States—
On deposits		100,000.00
On circulation		5,000.00
Bonds sold		100,000.00
Interest received:
On bonds	2,000.00
On deposits		1,050.00
Expenses:
Tax	500.00	2,000.00
Expenses, general	62.50	62.50
Available loanable funds	2,785,000.00	2,885,000.00

Respectfully,

JOS. S. MCCOY,
Government Actuary.

POSTSCRIPT: By section 15 of the above-mentioned bill, as soon as the guaranty fund in the United States Treasury amounts to $25,000,000, all of the bonds now deposited by the national banks with the Government to secure Government deposits shall be returned to the bank. So that the full effect of this feature of the bill is, first to buy all the 2 per cent bonds at the actual price paid for them (see section 18), and, second, to return all other bonds to the banks.

Mr. Chairman, if, as I confidently believe, the State banks and trust companies should become national institutions, 5 per cent of their deposits, now exceeding $13,000,000,000, and 5 per cent of the probable amount of credit notes taken out, $1,000,000,000, will establish a guaranty fund in the United States Treasury of $700,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, what would be the effect upon the banking interests of this country? What would be the effect upon the business interests of this country? What would be the effect upon the depositors of the country? What would be the effect upon the hoarders of money throughout the country? What would be the effect upon the foreigners that come to our country and are advised of the fact that there is a guaranty fund of $700,000,000 in the United States Treasury to protect the depositors in our national banks?

Mr. Chairman, in a subsequent section of the bill it is provided that 80 per cent of the vast sum so deposited in the Treasury to guarantee deposits shall be invested in the 2 per cent bonds of the United States Government, which are now held by the national banks to secure their circulation, and any other 2 per cent United States bonds which they may have held on the 1st day of January to secure Government deposits held by them. It is to be observed for the information of the House and the bankers of the country, that the 5 per cent of the deposits and 5 per cent of the note issue is a part of the required reserve of the bank, as is illustrated in the statement of the country bank prepared by the Government actuary, to which I have already called your attention.

Mr. Chairman, let us consider for a moment what the annual income will be which is to be added to this guaranty fund after paying the expenses of the redemption agencies.

First, probably 1 per cent on the $700,000,000 will be derived from the bonds and other resources, $7,000,000; second, the tax upon the circulation, amounting to a billion, at 2 per cent per annum, amounts to $20,000,000; third, the interest on Government deposits, at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, will probably amount to $3,000,000, or a total of $30,000,000.

The expenses for redeeming the notes will probably be about the same as the Government paid last year for redeeming national bank notes, which was 98 cents per thousand; or, calling it $1 per thousand, and estimating that the redemption of our notes will equal those in Canada, where the principle is the same, or ten times during the year, we shall have a fixed charge of $10,000,000.

The cost of bank examinations under the Comptroller last year amounted to $425,000. Let us assume that, in this case, it will be a million, for the examinations ought to be more frequent, $1,000,000, or a total expenditure of $11,000,000, leaving a net balance of $19,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, since provision has been made to guarantee all deposits and note issues, it becomes interesting to know what the losses have been during the last forty-four years, or since the establishment of the national banking system.

There has been a total loss to the depositors in those forty-four years of only $33,183,290, or an annual loss of $771,704. The tax upon the average of deposits payable on demand to pay all these losses would only have been thirty-seven one thousandths of 1 per cent.

Since the net amount left in the Treasury from the income account would be about nineteen millions for the first year, it would last about twenty-five years.

The insurance of deposits is a matter that has been discussed somewhat throughout the country, and I want to give the subject a little time in order that it may be thoroughly understood. Ten years ago I introduced a bill incorporating this principle, but making it optional with the banks to insure their depositors.

On Wednesday, March 31, 1897, I used this language, referring to this subject: "The principles that control in the vast operations of both life and fire insurance are identical with those upon which this provision rests. But my mature thought impels me to the conclusion that in neither is there so much need of averaging risk and escaping the consequences of misfortune as in the proposed remedy for the crash and widespread ruin that almost invariably follow bank failures to-day."

Mr. Chairman, life insurance is nothing but cooperation, to which each one contributes something. In life insurance a man must die to win. If he lives out his allotted time, he pays in full for his insurance. If a man dies who has insured his life, his family only are affected, and, materially speaking, are provided for to the extent of the insurance.

You insure your house. Suppose there are ten residences in the block; yours may be a stone house, the next a frame house, the next a brick house, and the remainder may all be frame houses. On the other half of the block there may be a woodworking establishment, which greatly endangers all of the residences. If you live in the stone house, you find that your insurance rate is exceedingly high, and upon inquiry ascertain that it is so because of the frame house next your own, and especially because of the woodworking establishment on the other half of the block. Yet you readily pay your insurance because of the danger of the neighborhood. This is the application of the law of cooperation so long established and so beneficent in its results that no one now stops to question the wisdom of it.

Mr. Chairman, if there is one reason why this man should insure his life and that man his home, I assert that there are a thousand reasons why the bank deposits of this country should be guaranteed.

I assert that all deposits in our banks are involuntary. Now, why are they involuntary? Because no one has the privilege of putting his money where it will earn a fair rate of interest—say 5 per cent—absolutely free from risk and at the same time be able to recall it if he should desire to use it. Therefore he must choose some bank, and the very fact that it requires a choice between banks implies a risk which he must take.

To illustrate the force of this statement you may take a city that has ten banks. The man who is in business deposits his money in one of these banks because he must have the convenience of a bank to carry on his trade. While, as a matter of fact, he has ten banks to choose from, in the last analysis, he must take one of them, even though he has little confidence in any of them. Therefore, he is of necessity an involuntary depositor.

Reduce the number to three banks, and he must make a selection of one of the three, although he may have misgivings about all of them. Reduce the number to two, and he is driven to the choice of only one. But there are many places in which he is compelled to use the only bank in the village where he resides. Therefore I assert that there is no question as to the fact that every bank deposit is involuntarily made, at least wherever it involves a choice, and especially where there is no choice.

Mr. Chairman, think of it. There is not one person in ten thousand in this country to-day able to have a bank account who can understand a bank statement. And of those who can understand a bank statement and explain its various items not one in ten thousand, again, has any idea whatever about the true inwardness of the bank at which he is doing his business. How can he know? He can not examine the loans and discounts of the bank. If he has any information at all, it must be such as he obtains from a statement of some member of the board in whom he has confidence. In the last analysis it is absolutely a matter of faith, and blind faith at that. The depositor is always wagering or betting the total amount of his deposit, whatever it is, that the bank is safe.

The deposit, therefore, must always necessarily be an involuntary one, since a thorough knowledge of the assets is essential to an intelligent exercise of choice, which is absolutely impossible in every case except that of an officer of the bank.

Widows and orphans are constantly putting their money into the banks of the country. Why do they put it in a particular bank? Simply because some friend tells them that he does his business there. Can you say that they ought to exercise their judgment? What would their judgment be worth? It is not a question of discretion; it is simply a question of confidence, and that, too, in the word of some one director who may in fact know absolutely nothing about the real condition of the bank, but, in turn, has perfect confidence in the president or cashier who is managing the concern.

When a bank fails it is not as though a man's life had passed out or his home had burned down. When a bank fails widows and orphans lose all they have in the world—a competency is wiped out and beggary follows.

The State and the taxpayers are interested in preventing such misfortunes. A merchant may be keeping his account at a bank, relying absolutely on the institution to protect his interests, and if, by chance, he is an employer of a hundred men, 500 women and children may be dependent upon his employees.

Again, a manufacturer who is employing a thousand men, with 5,000 women and children depending upon them, keeps his account at a bank. If the bank fails and the loss to the manufacturer is so great as to destroy his business, 5,000 women and children are without support—the children may be driven from the public schools through the need of proper clothing.

This is not all. The ramifications of credit are so extended and intricate that the business of the whole country is affected from one end of it to the other by bank failures, and no man can estimate the consequences, direct and indirect, growing out of them.

I assert again, after the most mature deliberation, that if there is one reason for insuring life or home, there are more than a thousand good reasons, nay more than 10,000 good reasons why the depositors of the banking institutions of the United States should be insured.

Mr. Chairman, if, as I have demonstrated, in case the proposed bill should become a law, we should have approximately seven hundred million in the United States Treasury guaranteeing the deposits in the national banks, panics in this country would forever be at an end. They would be a thing of a bitter past. May God hasten that day!

Only a short time since, when talking with the president of one of the very largest banks in New York City, he said: "An old gentleman, Mr. So-and-so, came in here with his wife and daughter and, sitting down at that table, demanded that the whole of his deposit, amounting to $800,000, be paid him in gold. This he took downstairs and locked up in the safe-deposit vault.

"Another man came in and, sitting down at that same table, demanded what we owed him—$1,500,000—and he took that downstairs and locked it up.

"Yesterday a lady came in and drew a thousand dollars, which she said she wanted to use in a trip to southern California. One of the officers of the bank remarked that she had a lot of money now and could go and have a good time. 'Yes,' she said, 'I have plenty of money; I have $300,000 downstairs in a box.'"

Mr. Chairman, it is confidently believed that more than two hundred and fifty million of reserve money was locked up in New York City alone on January 1, 1908. What does that mean, gentlemen? It means a contraction of credit ranging all the way from one billion to one billion and a half.

A Member of this House told me the other day that a suspicion existed in a Pennsylvania town that some workmen who were down in a coal mine intended to blow it up. A search was instituted, and, as a result, $32,000 in actual money was found upon the persons of the miners.

It is known that thousands upon thousands of foreign laborers in this country have been purchasing domestic post-office orders for their savings—losing interest simply to be safe, as they would be with the guaranty proposed, and as they know they would be.

Mr. Chairman, it is altogether likely that, as a result of the conditions which have prevailed throughout the United States during the last few months, such a pressure will be kept up that sooner or later we shall have a postal savings bank in this country in order that the masses of the people may have a safe place in which to put their savings; and then the Government of the United States will have to become a large buyer of bonds to invest these accumulations. For one, I am utterly and absolutely opposed to the Government of the United States doing anything for the American people that the American people can do for themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, more than all this; the States are already taking this matter up, and Oklahoma has already passed a law providing for the guaranty of depositors. The legislature of Kansas has been called in extra session for the express purpose of considering the same subject, the banks on the southern boundary of that State having complained that they were losing deposits.

Day before yesterday I received a letter from one of the leading bankers in Nebraska, who said that just as certainly as Kansas passed such a law Nebraska would also pass it; and, although he doubted whether the governor would call an extra session for that purpose, he knew that at the next session of the legislature such a law would be passed.

I believe that such legislation is a form of socialism, and I am utterly opposed to it.

Mr. Chairman, we are occasionally met with the statement that the guaranty of deposits would lead to unsound banking. Can anyone think of a man the day that he gets his life insured purposely running under a street car to have his legs cut off? Can you imagine a man who, because he has insured his house, allows it to go into disrepair? Can you think of a banker, because he had insured his deposits, going into the directors' room and saying, "Gentlemen, we have insured our deposits to-day. Now let us proceed to make some rotten loans."

Is it possible that it will not occur to these directors that their losses must come out of their profits, out of their reserves, out of their capital, out of their reputations? Will they not realize that they can get nothing out of the guarantee until the last dollar of profits, surplus, and capital is wiped out, and the stockholders have been assessed in double the amount of their stock? Until their reputations have been injured, if not gone, and some of them possibly have started on the road to State prison?

Mr. Chairman, can anybody think that any board of directors of a bank would be less solicitous, anxious, honest, and wise after they had guaranteed the deposits than they were before?

Mr. Chairman, only the other day I saw in a bankers' bulletin an objection to the proposed measure; and knowing the writer to be a very intelligent man upon this subject, and he happened to be in this city on that very day, stopping at the New Willard, I proceeded to investigate the ground of his objection. Before finishing my conversation with him, having told him that his objection was not in accordance with his known view, he finally admitted that the reason he could not support the bill was that his partner owned 2,000 shares of the stock of a certain trust company, and therefore, of course, he could not support the feature referred to. I knew that as well as he did after he had told me that his partner owned that much stock in a trust company, which probably wanted to carry 5 per cent instead of 20 per cent of reserves, and so to that extent imperil the banking situation generally.

Mr. Chairman, the oldest bank president in some town, or possibly the president of the largest bank in some town, may say that he will not have the advantage in the future to which he believes himself entitled if deposits are insured; therefore there will be two classes who will oppose this principle. But banks, like other business institutions, will gain not by mere age and respectability, or by mere bulk of capital, but rather by ability to meet the requirements of their customers. Square dealing and capacity will tell for just as much after deposits are guaranteed as before.

Mr. Chairman, is it not too high a price to pay to lay upon the altar of some man's ambition all the business interests of this country and still continue the habit of panics, the destruction of credit, and waste of business? On the one side there are personal ambition, vanity, the supposed advantage of a few hundred men; on the other side millions of depositors with 16,000,000,000 of deposits to their credit in our banks, and the families of 20,000,000 of American toilers. Which side shall we choose? Where does the duty of Congress lie?

Mr. Chairman, so far, without a single exception, I have proved to my own personal satisfaction, actually or morally, that these objections to the guaranteeing of deposits have come from distinctly selfish motives. These, I assert, must yield to the greater good.

Mr. Chairman, the currency now used by the rest of the civilized world is credit currency, with a single exception. That exception is Great Britain, and if Great Britain to-day were not the clearing house of the world she would have a panic almost every week, if not every week, of each year instead of every month. As it is, you find that she has often suspended the bank act and asked the Bank of France to help her out of her troubles.

All the rest of the world—Germany, France, Austria, Belgium, Holland, Scotland, Ireland, Japan, and Canada—have credit currency, $4,000,000,000 of it; yet we have not one cent. Can we enter into competition, half armed as we are, with the commercial world?

Gentlemen, the currency of commerce must be coined out of the productions of the country. Mark what I say; a true currency is coined out of the productions of the country, but it is the right of the people to say that that currency shall be maintained upon a gold basis by redeeming it in gold coin. If a man has a right to have a loan, as soon as he is granted that loan, say of $10,000, he ought to have the option of having a book credit subject to check or the current credit of the bank.

Mr. Chairman, the people create the bank and therefore the bank should be their servant. The bank should give us our credit in the form in which it suits our requirements and be compelled to buy gold enough to prove all these credits and protect all their depositors.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to illustrate this principle by taking the city of Dallas, Tex., which we will assume is a redemption city. A vast quantity of cotton is raised in that section, and, as is well known, it is a very expensive crop to produce; and when the picking, ginning, and baling time comes it takes an unusual amount of currency, probably much more than the amount of the capital of the banks of that section. Will anyone say that the farmers of Texas should be compelled to pay the express on currency from St. Louis, Chicago, or New York and return when if the privilege were given them the local banks could convert some of their book credits which are subject to check into note or current credit and save all this expense?

Mr. Chairman, take the city of Pittsburg in the last panic. What happened in this greatest manufacturing center of the world? What would the Pittsburg banks have done without credit currency which they created without authority of law? How much did they issue? Forty-eight millions of credit currency, much of it in one, two, three, and ten-dollar bills.

What did the banks do all over the country? They did precisely what nature told them to do. They created current credits, basing them upon the products of the land and the shops. This is precisely what the Bank of England always has done when she has been compelled to suspend the bank act; she has based her bank notes, or created a credit currency, upon the products of Great Britain. I use this expression of course economically, for it only needs to be stated to be appreciated that the commercial discounts in our banks are economically speaking the title to all the consumable commodities in the country.

Mr. Chairman, during the last currency panic—for it was distinctly and absolutely a currency panic—we probably issued in the United States two hundred and fifty millions of credit currency; and we have already found, precisely as I said sixty days ago, that as soon as the need of it was over it would all disappear as naturally as it came into existence.

Mr. Chairman, during the panic of 1856 and 1857 the 500 banks then doing business in the New England States increased their circulation from forty-nine million to fifty-five million and the deposits fell correspondingly from thirty-nine million to twenty-five million; and the very next year, 1858, the circulation had fallen from fifty-nine million to thirty-six million, and the deposits had increased from twenty-five million to forty-seven million, illustrating with what perfect accuracy the book credits, when the pressure for currency came, passed into credit currency, and, when the pressure was over and the panic had subsided, the credit currency immediately passed back into book credits subject to check.

Mr. Chairman, this illustration is a complete answer to every possible objection to the issue of credit currency by banks generally, and by any number of banks, whatever their capital, whether twenty-five thousand, two hundred and fifty thousand, five hundred thousand, or twenty-five million.

Mr. Chairman, what happened in New England in that trying period, in conversion of one form of credit into the other and reconversion into the same form again, has been happening every year up in Canada since the establishment of the Canadian banking system, which, by the way, Canada took from the State of Massachusetts before the civil war.

Mr. Chairman, I have been informed by Members of this House who live along the Canadian border that many Americans took their money out of our banks and placed it in the banks of Canada during the recent currency panic—a sad commentary, indeed, upon the practices that we still permit to exist, and a full and comprehensive reply to those who think that a credit currency involves any danger whatever to the banking interests of any country.

Mr. Chairman, the variation of this change from one form of credit to the other in Canada averaged, in 1906, $3.29 per capita. The same variation or change from book credits to note credits would give the United States an expansion and contraction every fall of about $300,000,000, but, unfortunate to relate, we have not 1 cent of current credit.

Mr. Chairman, another illustration of the mathematical adaptation of credit currency to the present requirements of trade is found in the fact that every three months in Germany there is an average conversion from book credits into note credits and back again from note credits into book credits of $120,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, in the face of these illustrations and the experience of New England before the war, with its 500 small banks, of Canada, with its 35 banks and their sixteen hundred branches, and of the Bank of Germany, with its quarterly variation of $125,000,000, can any Member of this House rise in his place and say that the board of managers of the redemption district covering the territory surrounding Dallas should not have the right to say that a bank with a hundred thousand capital and a hundred thousand of credit notes out, and a million of deposits, may convert fifty or one hundred thousand of its book credits or debts into fifty thousand or one hundred thousand of current credits or notes and thereby make it possible for the banks of Texas themselves to meet the requirements of the trades people and farmers of that great State?

In such a case the reserves of the bank have not been changed to the extent of a single dollar. The debts of the bank have not been increased to the extent of a single dollar. They have simply responded to the people of Texas in giving them credit in the form in which their peculiar business demanded it.

Mr. Chairman, I assert, therefore, that the board of managers of any note-redemption district, whether it is at Dallas, or Boston, or San Francisco, or Pittsburg, or New York, ought to have the right to say to the banks of their respective localities, you may convert your book credits subject to check into current credits and supply the needs of the people, whether it is to gather crops or to meet pay rolls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PRINCE and Mr. WALDO rose.

Mr. PRINCE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for thirty minutes.

Mr. WALDO. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended, so that he may conclude his remarks.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes; that he may conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, we have been practicing a species of barbarism in this country ever since General Jackson destroyed the Second United States Bank.

Mr. Chairman, nothing so grotesque can be found in the administration of the financial affairs of any nation, State, city, or business institution as the practice of this Government in daily locking up a portion of our reserve money. The reserve money of the country should not be drawn from the channels of trade. It should be allowed to flow to the place where it is demanded normally and naturally without interference on the part of this Government, which sustains no relation to the discounts or exchanges of the country.

The proposed bill provides, Mr. Chairman, as I have already pointed out, that the Government shall receive checks and drafts of national banks for the revenues due it, shall deposit its money from day to day as everyone else does in the course of business and shall check the same out as everyone else does in the course of business.

Mr. Chairman, the banks of this country will take care of the business of this country if they are only permitted to do so. Certainly the Government will incur no risks, since it will hold approximately five hundred millions in cash and bonds to protect itself against loss.

Mr. Chairman, I have already pointed out the danger which we are constantly incurring by continuing the existence of the United States notes, which ought to have been paid or retired long ago. This bill provides that after the accumulation of the guaranty fund shall amount to $25,000,000 the excess of the accumulations shall be turned into the reserve fund until the amount of gold coin in that fund shall be $346,000,000, when the United States notes shall be converted into gold certificates. Can anyone doubt the wisdom, indeed the importance, of eliminating these United States notes as soon as possible from our monetary system?

Mr. Chairman, there is not imposed upon the United States Government the additional obligation of a single dollar in this bill, and yet we shall pay into the reserve fund in the course of ten years two hundred millions of gold, paying off the demand obligations of the United States to that extent.

Mr. Chairman, I assert that the proposed measure, without the slightest shock to business, indeed literally unobserved and unnoticed, will accomplish the following purposes, which no one will deny should be achieved if at all possible:

First. It will relieve the banks from the danger of holding seven hundred million of 2 per cent United States bonds.

Second. It will relieve the commerce of the United States from the burden of carrying nine hundred million of its capital in fixed investment by paying the banks cash for all their 2 per cent bonds and returning to the banks all of those securities now deposited with the Government to secure Government deposits.

Third. It will provide a perfectly sound credit currency, which, while always being redeemed in gold coin, will invariably meet the ever-changing demands of trade in every locality of this great country, never being too great, never too small, but just adequate to our business requirements.

Fourth. It will put a guaranty fund of $700,000,000 in the Treasury which will absolutely prevent panic and stop the hoarding of money.

Fifth. It will convert the United States notes into gold certificates.

Sixth. It will remove the Government forever as a disturbing factor in the trade and commerce of the country.

Seventh. It will insure adequate reserves in gold coin, to prove all of our bank credits and protect all of our deposits.

Eighth. It will insure the autonomy of every individual bank throughout the land, and guarantee local self-government of the banks in every commercial zone through a board of local managers just as completely and distinctly as self-government is maintained through our several States.

Ninth. It will give to this country through the union of the twenty boards of managers, representing all sections of our country, the greatest conservative financial power in the world; giving to all the banks the benefit of the caution and advice of men representing every section, and so conserve the commercial interests everywhere. We shall be bound together by a common guaranty fund which will soon reach a billion of dollars, and also by a common purpose to make our banking business what it should be; the equalizing influence running through the years and preventing in a large measure the overexpansion of credit due to speculative prices, which is always a source of danger.

Mr. Chairman, so long as there is in this country a demand every fall for an extraordinarily large amount of currency, now exceeding $300,000,000, and so long as we are compelled to use our legal reserve money, gold, gold certificates, United States notes, silver and silver certificates, to supply this demand instead of using current credit, we shall never escape the extremes of 1 per cent and 100 per cent money; and, so long as we have these tragic variations, we need not hope to share in any part of the world's exchanges. But, sir, give us the reforms that will be effected by the proposed measure and the United States will at once challenge the world for its financial supremacy, and the bills of exchange drawn in every nook and corner of this globe will bear the signet of the eagle and not of the lion and the unicorn.

And finally, sir, a matter which should never be forgotten, nor overlooked by any nation, should not escape our attention now, particularly now, and that is this: Is our financial battle ship of the best modern type, or is it an old sailing vessel with a rotten wooden hull?

Sir, you may appropriate money enough to outstrip in equipment at Annapolis the naval schools of the world; you may meet the demands of the most fearful and cautious, passing in your naval expenditures the fifty-million mark every year; you may send out your fighting monsters under the ablest and best trained men that ever stood upon the bridge of a battle ship; you may build up the finest military school in the world at West Point, and educate a small army every year in the science of war; and you may train a million militiamen at the cost of the States; yet I tell you now that the one thing above all others that this nation needs, if you would be prepared for the issues and events of a great war, is a financial system that will not break down when the first shock comes, but through which the wealth and productive power of this country can be utilized with the greatest economy to the Government, and with absolute safety to our people.

Mr. Chairman, let us remember the warning of this day; the fortress of all fortresses, the army of all armies, the battle ship of all battle ships is the efficiency of your Treasury. [Prolonged applause.]

Now I am ready for your questions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand that the gentleman states that the cause of the present panic was the congestion of bank reserves in New York City.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The accumulation of the bank reserves?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not say anything of the kind. The gentleman was never further wrong in his life.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I misunderstood the gentleman. I understood him to say that the bank reserves, the reserves of the banks, coming to New York and being drained out of there without credit currency to take their place was the cause that brought about the present panic.

Mr. FOWLER. No; I don't think I said just that. I said this, that when the panic struck New York and the people of New York run upon the banks, and took away about $125,000,000, they did not have the currency with which to respond to the demands from the West and South.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman if the people in New York did not run upon the banks of New York because the reserves in the banks in New York had fallen below the legal limit, by being drawn into the West to move the crops?

Mr. FOWLER. I don't think so. I don't think there were any runs on any national banks in New York City except the Mercantile. I will make one other exception, the National Bank of North America, which they run upon because of the association of certain men with that institution; but I don't think there was a run on any other national bank.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The object of the gentleman's emergency currency——

Mr. FOWLER. I don't have any emergency currency. I am utterly opposed to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of his asset currency.

Mr. FOWLER. Credit currency. Let us call it a scientific name.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. His credit currency—it is to relieve the banks——

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir; it is absolutely for the advantage of the people and not of the banks at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is to meet an emergency.

Mr. FOWLER. Not an emergency. I do not admit there is any such thing. It will prevent an emergency. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is trying to correct an evil. Now, does he not admit an emergency exists to-day, or is there an emergency to-day?

Mr. FOWLER. No; not to-day at all. There is more reserves in the banks than there has been for seven years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then no emergency exists?

Mr. FOWLER. There is no emergency, but there was a great demand for money, and the banks in different parts of the country hoarded it through dread.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If by law we prohibit the reserves of the country banks from being deposited in the reserve centers would that not prevent the strain that has largely caused this panic?

Mr. FOWLER. It would lighten it but not affect the result of this thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You know the drain on the New York banks from the Western and Southern banks——

Mr. FOWLER. My candid opinion is, if the country banks had not said to their country people around them, "My money is in New York and you can not get it," there would have been a run on thousands of banks in this country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman this. So far the information I got from my section of the country, if these reserves had been in their home bank there would never have been occasion for the issuance of clearing-house certificates by the banks of the South and West in their need.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think it would have any effect whatever. Clearing-house certificates are issued by a bank in any locality, whether Chicago or St. Paul or Alabama or anywhere else, if the people become frantic and demand immediate payment. The bank must protect itself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think reserves should be maintained in the banks where the law requires it?

Mr. FOWLER. They are, and I can show you by last year's statements that the national banks had a large excess over what was required by the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They did not have it when the emergency came——

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but did not have it when it was over. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. As I understand the gentleman from New Jersey, his plan gives such advantage to all State banks as to make it an object for them to incorporate as national banks.

Mr. FOWLER. All other than national; yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That includes savings banks.

Mr. FOWLER. If they choose to do so.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But would they not be compelled to do so?

Mr. FOWLER. It would be a matter for them to say entirely; it is optional.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is not the aim of the measure to make the business of banking so much more favorable under this law than under any State law that they would incorporate as national banks?

Mr. FOWLER. If they are savings banks in the gentleman's State, I certainly think they should be brought under it, because then we would know what was in their reserve; we do not know now.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will say that in my State they are all safe.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose they are just as safe as anywhere else, and no safer.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The 5 per cent that it is proposed shall be deposited applies to the currency issued and to the deposits as well?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman believe that currency secured by the deposit of 5 per cent of its volume, when that 5 per cent is mingled with another fund which is also security for deposits——

Mr. FOWLER. What is that?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. You have 5 per cent of the average of your deposits? That is what the gentleman's plan suggests.

Mr. FOWLER. No.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is to be deposited in this fund?

Mr. FOWLER. But they have the same reserves in the banks that we have now, less that amount.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is, it is to be deducted from——

Mr. FOWLER. The reserves are identical with what they are now, except this, instead of banks carrying 5 per cent in a reserve city they carry it in the Treasury at Washington.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The part that is reserved to secure deposits?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, certainly; to guarantee deposits.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. And 5 per cent of the notes issued?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir; and the same reserves also in the bank and with reserve agents that they hold to protect deposits.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman believe that would be accepted by the people as a sufficient assurance that all currency would be safe?

Mr. FOWLER. I think that they would think it was a thousandfold as much as required as soon as they looked it up and found out that it would have taken for forty-four years a tax of only thirty-seven one-thousandths of 1 per cent each year upon our deposits to pay the losses.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentlemen believe that the business community would go through that process of calculation?

Mr. FOWLER. They would not have to do so. I have done it for them. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. One other point in regard to this. The tax on the amount of currency issued is 2 per cent, I believe?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. And with that tax a bank could issue currency up to the amount of its capital, and with the approval of the officials of the redemption district an unlimited amount?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Would not taxation at such a low figure inevitably lead to inflation?

Mr. FOWLER. No more than paying interest on deposits at 2 per cent, for, if the gentleman will think long enough and study this question thoroughly enough, he will find out that there is absolutely no difference between a deposit and a credit note. Again, there can be no inflation where the note can not be held as reserve; any bank holding any of them for that purpose must pay 10 per cent per day.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Well, that is a question on which there is room for some difference of opinion.

Mr. FOWLER. The Bank of France, to illustrate, has a billion of notes out, mere current credits, payable to the people, and has only one hundred million of deposits subject to check. The New England banks before the war ran right along with forty millions of one and forty millions of the other, and it is a matter of history, and I can give the gentleman forty cases, if he desires them, that wherever there is absolute freedom of transfer of a deposit subject to check into a note issue the habits of the people will always determine whether there are more notes out than there are deposits. For one hundred and forty-three years in Scotland they never had a deposit subject to check, but the farmers and merchants exchanged their time obligations with the Scotch banks for their duebills.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The bank has the right to issue notes. Now, what will be the cost to the bank?

Mr. FOWLER. Just the same as it is to-day if the Government would produce——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is, it is 2 per cent tax and one-fourth, or 15 per cent, in the way of reserve, is it not?

Mr. FOWLER. What does the gentleman mean? Does he mean the cost of the note?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is a very simple question. Suppose a bank desires to issue bank notes. What would be the expense to the bank upon that issue of bank notes by tax and otherwise, and what is the probable income which it could derive from them?

Mr. FOWLER. The cost to the bank would be simply the same that it is for the deposits where they pay 2 per cent plus the cost of the notes up here at the Treasury Department—for the notes themselves.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That is, the engraving.

Mr. FOWLER. Just the same as the deposits. The reserves are the same or identical with the deposits. There is no difference in the reserves, and the only additional cost is the cost of engraving the notes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What is the probable average income throughout the country that could be derived from the issuance of these notes?

Mr. FOWLER. It would depend on how long you could keep them out.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. What is the gentleman's estimate as to the average?

Mr. FOWLER. I have watched the bond-secured currency so long that I do not believe I could make an accurate guess of the right system. Now, for instance, if you want to know what I think about this bond-secured currency, if it was what it ought to be, we would retire between the 1st of January past and the 1st of July about three hundred millions or three hundred and fifty millions of them and put them away. But you will not retire one of them. They will crowd themselves into the reserves of this country and undermine our financial system precisely as I have already demonstrated they were now doing.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I disagree with the gentleman in regard to that. But is it not an easy computation to arrive at the approximate amount to be realized from those notes?

Mr. FOWLER. I have no way of arriving at it until you try the system and find out how many notes you need in January and July and all the intervening months, nor can any other man. I do not know what the increase or decrease would be; but I only know this, that this currency would always be perfectly coordinated to the requirements of trade down to a cent.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Would not the income to be derived from the issuance of bank notes where the tax is only 2 per cent—with reserve, it is true—be so great in times of high rates of interest, or even fair rates of interest, that it would inevitably lead to inflation?

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman's question is based on a thing that never occurs in banking, and that is this: When a man borrows he does not borrow notes. Your question is based upon a false assumption, on the borrowing of notes. He borrows credit, or the right to have money. Now, if you should use these notes as reserves, then there might be something to your question; but if the bank holds these notes overnight as reserve it must pay a 10 per cent tax, and so for every day it counts them as a part of its reserve.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It is an additional resource of the banks of just that much.

Mr. FOWLER. What?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The bills that it might issue.

Mr. FOWLER. No more than any other form of taxation. There is no currency in this world, and I challenge you to name one, where there is any tax at all, except the 5 per cent tax on the notes of the Imperial Bank of Germany; and I will tell you now that the circulation of the Bank of Germany in 1898 and 1899, the two years previous to the increase from $66,000,000 to $112,000,000, which occurred in June, 1901, was just what it was afterwards in the years 1900, 1901, and 1902. Therefore it is self-evident that the tax had had no influence whatever upon the amount of the circulation. The demands of trade alone have determined the amount of bank notes in circulation.

There is no tax on the notes of the Bank of France worth mentioning, nor on those of Holland, nor of Belgium, Scotland, Ireland, or Canada. There was no tax imposed on the notes of the banks in the Suffolk System, no tax on the notes of the State Bank of Indiana, State Bank of Iowa, State Bank of Missouri, nor the notes issued by the banks of Louisiana, and I challenge you to show where there has ever been a credit-currency system that has ever failed; if you know of any such case, now is your chance. [Applause.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand the gentleman to compare the banking power of the United States with the banking power of all the rest of the world very much in favor of the United States?

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman state what his statement was?

Mr. FOWLER. It stands about $20,000,000,000 to $30,000,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any country in the world that has the banking power of the United States?

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any country in the world where the banking power has increased more in the last forty years than in the United States?

Mr. FOWLER. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How, then, can the gentleman argue that this bond-secured currency system of banking, such as we have had in this country, is so detrimental to this country and its banking power when it has grown more rapidly than that of all the balance of the world?

Mr. FOWLER. I want to go back to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. He asked me if the provision made here for this rate of tax would not be a greater advantage to the banks. Banks are instrumentalities; by them the title to property is transferred from the time you begin to produce it until the time it is consumed. They serve for the transfer of the title of commodities produced by the farmer from the beginning to the end, precisely as the railroad carries the actual commodity, and every dollar of expense that may be laid upon the banking business of this country will be a tax upon labor, a tax upon the farmer. And you may just as well pass a law to compel the railroads of this country who carry the products of the farmer to build their cars out of mahogany as to raise your tax on circulation. It must all be paid by the farmers. You may as well say to the farmer in Texas that he must have a wagon with silver tires in which to haul his cotton to market as impose a high tax upon currency, because it is through the currency alone that you are going to move the crops of the farmer, and he will have to pay the interest that the banks charge him. The Texas farmers would have to pay for their silver tires, would they not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman how he can explain that the bond-secured currency of the United States is so bad a banking system when he makes the statement that the banking power of the United States is greater than that of any country in the world, and that during the existence of this bond-secured currency system it has grown faster than the banking power of any nation in the world?

Mr. FOWLER. We do a great many things notwithstanding some things, you know. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, let me ask the gentleman another question. Did the banking power of the United States grow more rapidly before the establishment of the bond-secured currency than it grew after the establishment of the bond-secured currency?

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that reminds me——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. FOWLER. I think probably the percentage was higher. I was going to be fair with the gentleman. I think if you will look it up you will find that the percentage of increase was higher before they had it. I was going to illustrate the point to save the gentleman. A man once said: "The population of our town in the last two years has increased 100 per cent." I said: "How many people did you have to begin with?" He said: "We had a hundred and now we have two hundred."

We did not have so many people—we did not have so much banking then. It would be easier to make a larger percentage then than it would now. But if you will take the banking of the United States and the rest of the world since 1890, there has been nothing like it in the history of the world, neither here nor abroad; and the banking of other countries has grown almost pari passu with our own, barring the exception of the fact that the country itself has grown so enormously that it demanded the use of this increased banking capital. Mulhall estimated the entire banking power of the world at $16,000,000,000 in 1890; we had about $5,000,000,000, or one-third; the total is now about $50,000,000,000, and we had $19,600,000,000, or two-fifths.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the gentleman one more question, whether it is not a fact that 50 miles from the Scotch line, Scotch notes of the Scotch banks are at a discount.

Mr. FOWLER. Of course they are. They do not belong down in that country. But why does the gentleman ask me that question? Does he refer to this bill? Is he making a comment on my proposition? Does he not know if he has read the bill that the notes will be good everywhere without charge or discount?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Because it has been the history of this country that when we have had banks of issue without security bank notes were at a discount as soon as they got outside of the town where they were issued.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a very interesting statement; but if the gentleman had been living and been in business in Cincinnati or Cleveland, in Detroit or in Chicago from 1830 to 1860, he would have found that the bank notes of the Suffolk System of New England were always at a premium of from 1 to 5 per cent, because that was a true credit currency system, every dollar of it redeemable in gold, and that is the only kind I am for. [Applause.] The same was true of what was called George Smith's money of Chicago. It sold at a premium in every eastern city, and the notes of the Bank of Missouri were so good that they were extensively counterfeited in California in an early day, 1849 and 1850.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] allow me a question? I merely want to ask him, for the information of the committee, whether his plan proposes the issue of currency notes against deposits, or simply against the capital and resources of the bank?

Mr. FOWLER. Against the credit of the bank.

Mr. COCKRAN. And the resources of the bank?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Assuming that the banks availed themselves of the privilege, has the gentleman computed to what extent it would increase the actual circulation of bank notes in the country?

Mr. FOWLER. I think if this bill went into effect, it would raise the reserves of the trust companies about $600,000,000, and that that amount of gold certificates and gold, taken from the pockets of the people, from the cornfields and the wheat fields, would be replaced by the credit notes of the banks.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman mean that the bank-note circulation would be increased by $600,000,000? I am merely asking the gentleman if he can give the committee a computation as to the amount.

Mr. FOWLER. I think that if we had a credit currency now, these $700,000,000 of bank notes would contract and disappear to a large extent, just as the clearing-house certificates have and just as the bank checks have disappeared. Just making a probable guess. I think that would decrease to-day approximately $300,000,000, and that $300,000,000 would come out again next fall, between July and January, to move the crops.

Mr. COCKRAN. I understand perfectly the elastic feature of the gentleman's proposal.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; but I want to make that point, because the statement bears on the question of whether there would be an increase, or how much it would be.

Mr. COCKRAN. What I desire to ask the gentleman's attention particularly to is this: In the late panic he has said with a great deal of force that about $150,000,000 were withdrawn in New York City alone and secreted by the owners. I suppose the gentleman is aware that the only reason that amount was not quadrupled or increased still more largely was because the banks would not give up anything more?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the depositors had had their way, the amounts withdrawn and hoarded would probably have been ten times greater?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, assuming that this system which the gentleman describes were in operation, that appetite for withdrawal would not be diminished if confidence in the solvency of the banks was destroyed and in the honesty with which financial institutions are managed.

Mr. FOWLER. There would be no such conditions in New York with the provisions of this bill in operation, as I tried to point out in the case of New England and the panic of 1857. The currency issue continued and rose because the people wanted something to pay their current accounts. The currency rose from $50,000,000 to $55,000,000 in 1857, and from $55,000,000 it dropped to $36,000,000 in 1858, and the deposits went from $37,000,000 up to $57,000,000, the two forms of credit changing places twice in as many years. That is the strongest illustration possible to prove the adaptability of current credits to the requirements of trade. The people want in panics something current, and if they knew that the notes were secured by a fund of $700,000,000, or any great sum, in Washington, no one would refuse one of the notes.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is speaking about a popular doubt as to the value of the currency. But suppose to-day a condition precisely similar to that of last October, where there was no doubt as to the value of the currency, but grave doubts about the solvency of the banks and about the statements put forth as to their condition. Suppose that condition was to be revived, how would this plan tend to check the appetite for hoarding which the gentleman says, if it had gone on unchecked last October, would have amounted to perhaps ten times the volume actually reached?

Mr. FOWLER. If they could convert bank credit into a note credit, they would take the note home and keep it.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the banks were authorized to redeem all their obligations by issuing currency notes, it would be very simple, but I fancy the gentleman would hardly go to that extent.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; this bill provides that the board of managers—although they may have taken out an amount equal to their entire capital—the board of managers in a redemption district can permit an issue of any amount of notes they think necessary.

Mr. COCKRAN. The net result of this plan, then, is that under certain conditions the bank can discharge its obligations to its depositors by issuing additional obligations?

Mr. FOWLER. No; not additional. Just a moment, if the gentleman will pardon me. Not by issuing additional obligations, but simply by changing the form of the debt from one subject to check to one that is current.

Mr. COCKRAN. And so they pay their debts by creating new ones?

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. They simply convert the debt into another form—it is the same debt.

Mr. COCKRAN. So that in its last analysis it is a plan which would bring about a millennium where every bank can discharge a debt by creating another. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. No, it does not do that. It does not create a new debt, but simply changes the form of the debt.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is it; it doesn't reduce or discharge the debt; it is a plan by which the bank is relieved of discharging its debt——

Mr. FOWLER. No, not all; hold on a moment.

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me finish the sentence. As I understand it, this plan simply proposes that the bank be relieved of paying its debt and empowered to get rid of it by creating a new debt.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all; their notes, every one of them, are redeemable over their own counter in gold.

Mr. COCKRAN. If that is what the gentleman means, it is one of the most comprehensive plans that ever came under my notice.

Mr. FOWLER. That was the intention. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. I want to ask the gentleman if this is how the plan would operate. A bank depositor having $10,000 on deposit approaches a paying teller's window under such conditions as we had in New York last October and demands $10,000 in cash. The bank has already issued notes enough to equal its capital. Can that bank then discharge this obligation by issuing another note?

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is what I want made clear. I thought the gentleman said it could.

Mr. FOWLER. They are not a legal tender to anybody. They are a legal tender to the Government and between the banks. That makes them pass everywhere current throughout the United States, but not a legal tender to any person, and they can not be forced upon anybody by a bank, certainly least of all others upon a customer.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then we get back to the original difficulty. The depositor, having made a demand for his money with a view of hoarding it, how does the bank get out under this plan any better than it could before?

Mr. FOWLER. Well, if the depositor did not want a note, he could get the money.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is, assuming the bank had the money.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose if that ever happened they would do just what they do now; but with a free issue of currency, redeemable in gold and secured by $700,000,000 in the United States Treasury, what happens now would not happen then.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is it. Then your bill would have no effect whatever. [Laughter.] That is precisely what I feared.

Mr. FOWLER. As I have just said, if by any possibility it should occur, as it never has with the Bank of France, which has a perfectly free bank issue, and as it never happened in the Suffolk System, the banks here would do just what they have done and just what the Bank of England does, which enjoys no credit currency at all, but simply issues notes against gold.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman made that statement on his feet. It seemed to me to be slightly inaccurate according to my reading of the history of that institution. I understood the gentleman to say that Great Britain has shifted her currency to a system of credit currency at each emergency. I may be wrong about it, but my recollection is that the Bank of England never but once actually suspended payments——

Mr. FOWLER. Never but once?

Mr. COCKRAN. Never but once.

Mr. FOWLER. What did it do in 1847, 1857, in 1866, in 1890?

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is speaking of the crisis following the Overend, Guerney & Co. failure in 1866?

Mr. FOWLER. I am speaking of the four instances in which they absolutely suspended and simply issued Bank of England notes, without reference to gold.

Mr. COCKRAN. There was one occasion when that actually happened.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, four times; and they have prepared to do it twice besides those occasions, with the desired effect of stopping the panic.

Mr. COCKRAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I think we will not differ in a statement of fact about this. There were three occasions when what was known as a suspension of the bank act was authorized. One was in 1846; another in 1857. The third was at the suspension of Overend, Guerney & Co., in 1866, I think. I am speaking entirely from memory. The gentleman knows, because his familiarity with these subjects is undeniable, that under the law governing the Bank of England, outside of the £18,000,000 in notes which the bank may issue on the credit of the debt the Government owes the company for every £5 note in circulation, there must be actually 5 sovereigns or their equivalent in gold bullion in the vaults of the bank. Now, the suspension of the bank act, which occurred three times by permission of the Cabinet, on its assurance that the permission would be subsequently ratified by Parliament, authorized the bank to use the gold in its vaults which did not belong to it, but which properly was applicable to the redemption of outstanding notes, and which by that permission the bank was allowed to apply to the satisfaction of its ordinary bank debts. I do not think the gentleman will differ with me on that. That is, as I understand, the history of these transactions in England. On three occasions this permission was given. Once only it was actually used——

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, I did not yield the floor for a long discussion of this question.

Mr. COCKRAN. I merely asked the gentleman if he differs from that statement of historical facts.

Mr. FOWLER. They have suspended the bank act, as I recall it, four times, and they issued currency or bank notes without reference to gold coin in 1857.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman mean that the suspension of the bank act authorized the unlimited issue of paper by the bank and not the mere right to use for its banking debts the gold that under the law was ordinarily applicable to redemption of notes? What was meant by suspension of the bank act?

Mr. FOWLER. The right to loan and issue bank notes without reference to the gold——

Mr. COCKRAN. Was it not the right to use for its banking purposes this other gold, which it held merely as agent for redemption of outstanding notes——

Mr. FOWLER. No; if you want to make a speech you can at some other time——

Mr. COCKRAN. I was endeavoring to get information.

Mr. FOWLER. I have answered you two or three times.

Mr. COCKRAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to give him credit for having made a most exhaustive statement and a most interesting presentation of his plan. If I have asked these questions, which were intended to test its practicability, it has been with an earnest desire to support it, because in general I am a believer in the principle of asset currency, but under stricter limitations than those the gentleman appears to have imposed in his bill, judging from the statement he has made to us here.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Take a bank that is chartered under the gentleman's bill, say with a hundred thousand dollars capital, and it issues $100,000 of currency. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if under the provisions of this bill it is not within the power of a majority of the directors of the financial zone in which that bank is situated to cause that bank, that has already issued currency equal to the capital stock, to issue an unlimited amount of money, even to the extent of a billion dollars?

Mr. FOWLER. The right to issue any currency they may see fit; but I suppose that if the bank put out one of its notes it would do so when it got another good note in its place, and it could only issue when it had first obtained the amount of gold to protect it, such as the law requires. If it was in the country, 15 per cent; if it was in the city, 25 per cent.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But back of that money would be only 5 per cent in gold.

Mr. FOWLER. Back of what money?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Back of the additional currency issue. I am talking now about the additional amount of money issued over and beyond its capital stock.

Mr. FOWLER. It is precisely the same.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I am speaking of the second and third issues.

Mr. FOWLER. They have the same right to issue notes they would have to take deposits, for there is no difference between a deposit and a credit note; not a bit. In the case of deposit they must have the reserve, and in a case of the credit note they must have the reserve the same as the deposit.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But do you contend to the House a second issue of currency under the provisions of this bill would be as sound as the first?

Mr. FOWLER. Absolutely immaterial which dollar came first; they are all equally sound, because they are all equally protected by the gold reserve and the guaranty fund.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I understand they are all equally protected by gold reserve, but the point is, do not you put it within the power of a majority of the directors in that zone the opportunity to impair the character of money that is issued by giving the right to issue an unlimited amount of money?

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. In the first place, the banks never issue any money, only current credits, which are redeemable in gold coin. The first safeguard is the gold reserve; the second safeguard is the guaranty fund in the United States Treasury; the third is the fact that the banks in each redemption district must first pay 10 per cent of the losses; the fourth safeguard is the capital of the bank and the character of the directors. There is no more reason for limiting the issue of current credits than there is for limiting the deposits of a bank upon the same conditions.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Now, say the banks of the country were capitalized at $600,000,000 and had issued $600,000,000 worth of currency, which is equal to their capital stock. They have deposited the reserve that the act requires. Now, the managers in each of these financial zones gives to each bank the right to issue 100 per cent more money; then you have $1,200,000,000 and have not but $600,000,000 of capital paid up; what becomes of the last $600,000,000 issued?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not quite follow the gentleman's question. But there is no money issued at all. It is strictly a question of issuing the bank's credits, maintaining always the same reserves against the bank's credit, for it is simply changing the bank's credit subject to check into current credit; that's all.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The question I put to the gentleman was this: Under the provisions of your bill the banks organized and capitalized at $600,000,000 can issue $600,000,000 in currency. They have issued that now. They have gone to the directors in the respective zones in which the banks are situated and have said, "We want to issue more money." I say it is within the power of four men out of seven, being a majority, to give to each bank in the United States the right to double its issuance of money, and instead of having $600,000,000 issued they might give them the right to issue $1,200,000,000, and then you would not have any capital stock which was the equal of the first $600,000,000 to help liquidate that last $600,000,000 when pay day came.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think much of capital in banks at all. I think reserves and the liquid assets are the life of a bank. The Bank of France has only $35,000,000 capital and has outstanding $1,000,000,000 of notes, or about thirty times as much as its capital.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But there is only 5 per cent——

Mr. FOWLER. Just a moment and I will explain to the gentleman. I do not think as much of the capital as I do of the reserve and liquid assets. The Bank of France, for instance, has $35,000,000 capital, but it has $500,000,000 of a reserve. I presume it has real estate worth more than its capital. The gentleman seems to be laboring under this delusion, that a bank would issue a credit note for a thousand dollars without getting something back for it of equal value. In other words, if a bank received a deposit for a thousand dollars, does the gentleman think it will lend it out without getting something in return? A bank will no more give a man a thousand dollars of its notes than it would give a man some other man's deposit amounting to a thousand dollars.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman might make that argument as to banks if we did not have failures of banks and runs on banks every day, if we did not have depositors going around and beating at the doors of the banks and asking for their money; but our experience with banks shows that you have got to bridle their power, and especially so when you give them the right to issue unlimited money that the laborer must take and the farmer must take——

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman call that money?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. You make it legal tender of the Government, do you not?

Mr. FOWLER. Of course to the Government and to the banks, so as to make it good everywhere and not subject to discount.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Then, if it is not money, why not let the banks issue their checks?

Mr. FOWLER. What difference is it to the depositor whether he has a credit at the bank that he can check for a thousand dollars or whether he has got the bank's note for a thousand dollars? Can the gentleman tell?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. There is this difference. Instead of being the depositor that has this, it is the laboring man, and unless your money is good enough for the laboring man to put in his pocket and rest content with it, it is not good enough for the American people, and they will not be content to take it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that if a bank was run as it is to-day and loaned out its credit they would be as safe as they are to-day, especially with $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 in the guaranty fund to protect it? Does not the gentleman think the currency that is redeemed in gold is a safer currency than the national bank-note currency was when it was worth only 35 cents on the dollar?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I do not think any currency is good when the only thing you have got back of it is 5 per cent in realty and speculative assets, and will bring God only knows what when the crisis comes. Another question that I desire to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman's last question or remark is based upon something that does not exist at all in the bill, and has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But the gentleman does admit, however, if I understand him, that these four men, a majority of the directors of the redemption agency, could give to a bank the right to issue unlimited amounts over its capital stock. Is that true or false? Can they do that?

Mr. FOWLER. It could issue currency just as it could take deposits, on precisely the same terms.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. There is no provision of that sort in the gentleman's bill. Is there any such provision in the bill?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly; I say that they could issue currency precisely as they could take deposits; with the consent of the board of managers, in unlimited amounts, as they could take deposits.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. You provide in this bill that the bank shall pay 2 per cent tax. Is that right?

Mr. FOWLER. Two per cent tax on the circulation?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But that does not get into the Treasury of the United States and go to the people, does it?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir; it goes into the guaranty fund, and that currency fund retires the demand notes of the United States Government, amounting to $200,000,000.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But, wait a minute. Now, you charge these banks 2 per cent tax for issuing this money, do you not?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And you put that into the hands of the Government as trustee, do you not?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Now, suppose a bank has issued $200,000,000 of money and it pays 2 per cent on it. Suppose it wants to go out of business. Now, has that bank got the right under this bill to go and demand from the Government the tax that has been paid?

Mr. FOWLER. Not a penny of it. It can withdraw its 5 per cent, which is a part of its required reserve, but no part of the tax paid. It can only withdraw its 5 per cent, provided it has no debts of any kind and the Comptroller of the Currency permits it.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Out of this fund of which this 2 per cent is part, do you not make that fund pay interest to the banks on their reserve, 5 per cent for deposits and 5 per cent to secure redemption?

Mr. FOWLER. Under the bill they get 1 per cent on that 5 per cent.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Do you not take from this fund that you say belongs to the Government and pay the banks interest on what you have had them to deposit as a reserve fund?

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all; the 5 per cent deposited is a part of the required reserves upon which now, if held with a reserve agent, the bank gets possibly 2 per cent.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I say that a provision in your bill does that very thing.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Well, I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will pardon me. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] asked if in your bill you did not make the Government of the United States pay interest to the banks for part of this very reserve which was deposited by the banks in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FOWLER. I said that they paid them 1 per cent interest.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood you to say that you did not. I find here section 22——

Mr. FOWLER. The bill here provides that they are to be paid 1 per cent on the reserve funds in the United States Treasury.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I read:

SEC. 22. That every national bank may count as a part of its required reserve the amount it shall have deposited with the United States Treasurer in accordance with sections 11 and 14 of this act, and shall be entitled to receive interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent per annum, payable annually on the 1st day of July each succeeding year.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. That was my contention, and you said to the contrary.

Mr. FOWLER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Then I misunderstood you, as gentlemen on this side have misunderstood you.

Mr. FOWLER. That is very simple. That refers to the 5 per cent of deposits, and 5 per cent of note issues with the Government, which are a part of their required reserves now in the banks, and the Government pays them 1 per cent on that reserve; but not 1 per cent on the 2 per cent tax that they have paid in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like now to ask the gentleman my question, and it is this: What was the reason for fixing the amount of capital stock of the bank as the limit of the amount of currency that can be issued by a bank in the first instance?

Mr. FOWLER. Simply an assumed figure, that is all.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it be true, as I understand the gentleman, that the subsequent currency issued by permission of the directors controlling that particular financial zone is based on the same credit as that which is first issued, why should this first limit be made, and why not let the banks issue without regard to the capital stock?

Mr. FOWLER. Because the banks have to have an organization. They want to take out a certain amount of currency, and we fix it at the amount of the capital, because they are required to put up 5 per cent of the amount taken out. Now, they are not compelled to take it all out. If subsequently they should consult the managers who are supervising the redemption district, they could take out additional currency. So that was simply a question of administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understood the gentleman right, these issues that may be made up to a sum equal to the capital stock of the bank and those they may issue by the permission of these directors in the financial zone will be based upon the same credits and require the same reserve in the banks behind them. Now is that true or not?

Mr. FOWLER. It is true, but I want to qualify. You say the same credit. I would not say the same credit, but I should say similar credit.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean the same credit, in regard to any particular credit, but, as I understand it, both of them must have a reserve of 15 per cent——

Mr. FOWLER. That is right.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the country, and 25 per cent in cities.

Mr. FOWLER. That is right.

Mr. SHERLEY. And that is all upon which they are issued?

Mr. FOWLER. Except that it is the credit of the bank, and of course no bank is going to incur a debt which it must pay without taking something in return for it. I know the gentleman understands this, but there has been some talk, and the gentleman is just on the point, and so I make that statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that, but if there is no difference between these notes, in the security that lies back of them, between those that are issued as a matter of right by the banks and those that are issued by permission of the directors, why have the permission of the directors at all? And if the theory of your bill is based on the idea that your issuance will be in response to trade demands and that there will be absolute redemption when the condition of the trade prevents the notes staying out, because banks must redeem in gold upon presentation, then why have you not simply taken your limit off and left it to trade conditions to say what shall be the volume rather than to the directors in a zone?

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman states the principle with absolute accuracy. That is exactly my position.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not your bill, as I understand it.

Mr. FOWLER. But you have to draw a bill with some view to passing it, and also recognize rules of administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understand the gentleman, he has compromised with his position to the extent of limiting the first issue to the amount of the capital of the bank.

Mr. FOWLER. That is all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question on this point of redemption? I understand the basis of the gentleman's bill is the fact that there shall be 5 per cent of gold to redeem this outstanding currency.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no; the reserves against the bank notes are precisely the same reserves that are held against deposits. There is no difference between the two.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But does not your bill provide that there should be 5 per cent of gold for the issuance of these notes?

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much gold do you hold to redeem these notes?

Mr. FOWLER. Whatever the law requires now. If it is a country bank it must have 15 per cent, with the privilege of carrying some of it in reserve cities. In the central reserve cities it is 25 per cent in cash, and in those cities that are reserve cities and not central, 25 per cent, with the privilege of 12½ per cent in the other cities.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman referred very eloquently in his speech to the fact that Mr. Cleveland, when he was President of the United States, saved the country from a panic by redeeming the greenbacks. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You did not say he saved it from a panic, but he saved the situation.

Mr. FOWLER. He saved the credit of this nation when he gave free silver its first stunning blow. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one minute. What Mr. Cleveland

did was to attempt to stop the endless chain—the run on greenbacks. At that time we had $347,000,000 in greenbacks out, and we had $100,000,000 of gold in the Treasury, and yet the people of the country, not having confidence enough in the fact that we had gold, one for four, in the issuance of greenbacks, had a run on the Treasury and started the endless chain; and would not we do the same with the banks when they only had one-sixth of gold to secure the notes? What is the difference?

Mr. FOWLER. The Government has no liquid assets with which to pay anything; but a bank, if it is a commercial bank, should practically have all of its assets in liquid shape.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Government has the whole power of taxation.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the power of taxation worth in a panic?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is good to raise gold, as it did raise gold. It was good enough to get gold.

Mr. FOWLER. No; it did not get gold on taxation; it raised it on the credit of the nation, with a promise to pay.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What was the credit of the nation based on but the power of taxation? There would not be any credit for the nation if it did not have that.

Mr. HARDY. Just one question. I think there is a misapprehension as to a portion of the gentleman's bill. I understand that the first and general underlying proposition is to place the deposits and currency of the bank on the same footing?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I understand the holder of a deposit certificate and a currency bill of the bank may go to the bank and demand gold?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. If the bank fails to pay, the Government guaranty of $500,000,000 steps in and takes up the demand?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. If the bank continues to fail it goes into the hands of a receiver?

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no; you can not resort to the Government guaranty fund in any case until the bank has actually failed.

Mr. HARDY. I understand.

Mr. FOWLER. But the gentleman made a statement that implied that you could resort to this in case it made a loss.

Mr. HARDY. No; in case of failure only.

Mr. FOWLER. The profits, reserve, and capital must all be wiped out and the stockholders would have to be assessed before the guaranty fund could be touched.

Mr. HARDY. I understand it as the gentleman does. Now, I want to ask this question: Is there any reason why the debt of the bank on its currency issue should be more sacred than the debt of the bank to its depositors?

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all. I do not make them so.

Mr. HARDY. Your bill is designed to put the depositor and the holder of the currency on the same basis?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; and with a fund at Washington that guarantees both alike.

Mr. HARDY. And only in case of failure?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; without preference then.

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FORNES. The question I desire to ask is this: Did I understand the gentleman's objection to a central bank was the vast extent of our territory as compared with those territories where they are established—in England, France, and Germany?

Mr. FOWLER. That was only one observation I made. There were several others. I would say that the main objection to it is the fact that in this country of ours there is a political situation that is unmatched by any other country in the world, and I should say that the political situation is the most serious objection of all those made.

Mr. FORNES. Does the gentleman say that owing to the political situation we could not use the same financial institution that has proved to be so satisfactory in other countries?

Mr. FOWLER. I think that if there was a central bank in this country the power of the bank would be sought by political parties, and I am afraid it would be used by political parties for political purposes.

Mr. FORNES. Assume that you could take the power out of political influence.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it possible to do that in this country?

Mr. FORNES. And suppose on account of the vast extent of the country you establish ten branches, each branch to have the power of the central bank, these branches to be established in designated cities like San Francisco, New Orleans, and so situated throughout the land that they would come into the same class that the gentleman's system proposes?

Mr. FOWLER. It is impossible for a central bank, through its branches, to reach the customers, because the gentleman must remember that when you have a central bank in the United States it is never going to do any direct business.

Mr. FORNES. Suppose it did the business of a general clearing house.

Mr. FOWLER. How could that bank or any of its branches give relief to a man way up in the pineries of Washington, where they have a small bank and want some currency or want to convert their credit subject to check into a current credit to meet a pay roll with?

Mr. FORNES. He could reach the branch at San Francisco, which possesses the same power as the central bank.

Mr. FOWLER. How long would it take him to go down to San Francisco to get the credit or cash for his pay roll? This would be accomplished only by rediscounting some of his paper, when he could just as well convert it himself into a current credit.

Mr. FORNES. He could do it by having the exchanges the same as they have in the banking system through what you may call the "clearing-house" system.

Mr. FOWLER. How long would it take a man to go from some particular point, two, or three, or four hundred miles, to your clearing house?

Mr. FORNES. How much longer would it take him to go under the central-bank system than under your system?

Mr. FOWLER. He would not have to go at all. He would simply wire the managers of the district or call them on the phone and get back an answer in an hour or less, possibly, because they would have his reports on file and would know all about him.

Mr. FORNES. But suppose the central-bank-system branch would have two directors in every branch city where it is established, would they not understand the condition of that country and would they not be able to give an answer by wire as under your system?

Mr. FOWLER. I think it would be very impracticable and be very far removed from the business of this country, as compared with the proposition that I have presented.

Mr. FORNES. You think it only impracticable, but it might be possible?

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, it might be possible to carry on the business that way, but not at all as desirable.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In case it should be found that it would be impossible to so change our system as to retire the bond-secured currency and issue in its place the convertible currency the gentleman speaks of, or the credit currency, would it not be a step in the right direction if some law could be passed whereby the deposits of banks were rendered absolutely secure and guaranteed by the Government, as provided in the gentleman's bill, even if that were all that could be done? In other words, would it not be a step toward the gentleman's ideal conception if every deposit in every national bank was rendered absolutely safe by the guaranty of the Government?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not approve Government guaranty, but if we could compel the banks to guarantee, it would be advantageous, but the trouble is there is no uniformity in our banking, and some States require no reserves, some of them 1 per cent or 4 or 5 per cent, and this interchange of national bank notes into trust companies for the purpose of locking them up is undermining the banking of this country, and we want it uniform, and we want enough reserves in gold to make our credits absolutely sound.

Mr. HARDY. Now, the point I want to get at is this, if the law was passed that all national banks shall have a guaranty deposit, won't that unify the system of national banks and cause all other banks to come into the field of the national-bank system; and when they have done that, won't all your credit currency be a thing not needed, practically, for the deposits are made absolutely secure?

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no; you need currency, because you can not use the gold certificates and other reserve money to handle your crops and make up your pay rolls.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, the great stayback of your proposition is that your currency and deposits would not be liable to be questioned because guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not get the question of the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, the reason why there would not be likely a run on your banking system would be the fact that every man would have confidence in the guaranty of the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly, the $700,000,000 guaranty fund.

Mr. HARDY. Whether that applied to the currency or to the deposits.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Address of Hon. Charles N. Fowler, on the financial situation, before the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, at Chicago, December 10, 1907.

Mr. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE ILLINOIS MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION: More than seventy years ago a Green Mountain State young man, after marrying the best woman that ever lived, came across the Great Lakes; and, passing through Chicago, then a most uninviting place, went into the interior of this State, selected a prairie farm, skirted by beautiful woodland, and planting his family altar near a splendid spring which came bubbling up from a great ledge of limestone, there, with only a single neighbor within a dozen miles, built the log cabin within which I was born.

Whenever I revisit this old stamping ground of my childhood, I lay me down by that goodly spring, and again, as in the hot summer days of my youth, nurse at the bosom of mother earth, forgetting almost a half century of an active life.

Again, after my college days, I came to this city, and, almost within a stone's throw of where I now stand, became a student at the Chicago Law School, graduating there in 1879.

Your invitation, then, to come here upon this occasion was the voice of old friends and neighbors calling me home; yes, it was something more—it was the call of my country, and patriotic duty compelled me to accept.

Under present atmospheric conditions I feel as though I am in a measure upon the witness stand, and that you are entitled to know whether there is any reason for discrediting the statement of the witness.

In these days of surprise, doubt, fear, suspicion, hate, malice, revenge, and reprisal, I feel constrained to divest my hearers of any possible thought of me as in any way identified with the banking, railroad, or so-called "trust" interests, in order that my words may not be misinterpreted through a misapprehension.

A MANUFACTURER TO MANUFACTURERS.

More than twelve years ago, when I began this campaign for a gold standard and currency reform, I disposed of what bank stock I then had and have not owned a single share since. Nor do I own a single share of railroad stock or a railroad bond. Nor do I own a single share of stock or a bond in any one of the so-called "trusts."

I am essentially one of you, a manufacturer, and have been employing about 500 men, although I regret to say not so many just now. Therefore we may have a heart-to-heart talk and my words be taken for what they are worth from the standpoint of the manufacturer.

PATRIOTIC DUTY.

If I saw the Government of my country going wrong, radically wrong, and pursuing a policy that must inevitably lead to financial disaster, commercial ruin, to immeasurable losses to the people, to national discredit and disgrace, and yet did not earnestly protest and do all in my power to prevent these consequences, I should be untrue to myself, unworthy of the trust reposed in me, recreant to my duty, and a traitor to my country.

If upon this occasion I shall show you that we have been going wrong in our finances ever since the civil war, and that the fundamental evils then incorporated into our financial and currency practices are now leading us directly, unerringly, inevitably, and swiftly to conditions that will certainly outparallel the difficulties, disasters, and disgrace that may have ever visited any civilized country, what will your duty be? What is more important, what will your action be?

True patriotism and love of country find their finest exhibitions in the civic walks of life; because here there is none of the glamour and glory of war, very little public inspiration, and their compensation comes in the silent consciousness of duty done.

Are you patriotic, loyal and self-sacrificing enough to fight for such a reward?

THE UNITY OF THE COUNTRY.

As in 1896, certain sections of our country were arrayed against certain other sections, brought about through misstatements and misapprehensions, and men raged against the "gold bugs" as if they were public enemies, and when one conspicuous politician visited New York, he called it the enemy's country.

Gentlemen, there is no enemy's country anywhere under the Stars and Stripes!

So to-day I learn from my fellow members of the House of Representatives and from editorial comments that there is a profound misunderstanding and a consequent most unfortunate misapprehension of the present situation.

Meeting a United States Senator from the West just one week ago to-day, he said: "If your damned New York and Chicago bankers had paid us our money, we should have been all right."

No bank can or is expected to pay all its depositors in a day. Suppose that the banks of the Senator's home town had not had a single dollar in the Chicago or New York banks. Would the Senator say that his home banks could have paid all their deposits upon demand? No. Now, who are the depositors of the Chicago and New York banks? Not only the merchants and manufacturers of those great cities, but the country banks, including the banks in the Senator's own town.

Does anyone believe that the clearing-house committee of Chicago is less true and patriotic than the clearing-house committee of St. Paul or Duluth, or of St. Louis or New Orleans? Or that the clearing-house committee of St. Paul or Duluth, or of St. Louis or New Orleans, is less true and patriotic than that of Kansas City; or the Kansas City committee less so than that of Denver; or the Denver committee less so than that of Salt Lake City; or the Salt Lake City committee less so that that of San Francisco?

Does anyone believe that the clearing-house committee of Chicago is more true and patriotic than the clearing-house committee of Boston, Philadelphia, or New York?

Gentlemen, all the banks are relatively in the same position; and I think it can be truthfully stated that the action of our bankers throughout the whole country during the recent trying circumstances is a source of profund satisfaction; while the self-control manifested by the people generally, North and South, East and West, is a guaranty of republican institutions.

Any man who attempts to arouse and set one section of our beloved country against another, or array one class of our people against another because it happens to be more powerful politically, is not a true friend of the people—indeed, he is an enemy of the Republic.

All things considered, if there is one class of our people more unfortunate than another, or one spot in our great country more sorely afflicted than any other, it is the wealthy people in the city of New York. Then why should blame rest there? Can anyone upon second thought think that any people would consciously and willingly court misfortune? No, gentlemen; let us be true, square, intelligent, brave men, and seek out the real causes and put the responsibility where it rightly belongs. No manly man, no patriotic man, no lover of his country, will desire to do less.

INVESTMENT CAPITAL.

The financial condition of the United States is very similar to that throughout the world; because, from the standpoint of investment capital, the whole world over is practically one.

Let no one suppose that I am not aware that the Spanish-American war, the Boer war, the Baltimore fire, the Japanese-Russian war, the San Francisco earthquake and fire, the Chilean earthquake, all combined consuming about $4,000,000,000 of wealth, and the tremendous expansion in railway and trolley building and equipment, in mine development and in the increase of manufacturing plants, had, by the first of the year 1907, completely exhausted the investment fund of the world and made large encroachments upon the commercial fund.

CURRENT EXCHANGE.

On the other hand, gentlemen, mark this difference. The commercial condition in the United States is very dissimilar from that to be found anywhere else in the world, so far as I know, because no other country has so poor a mechanism of current exchange as we have. So far as I can judge, no such condition could exist anywhere else in the world except here, and I am convinced that if we had had such a system of currency as Canada or France now has, the currency panic of 1907 would never have occurred, and we should never have been conscious of the fact that we were handling agricultural products worth more than $7,000,000,000, in connection with the output of our mines and factories, valued at more than $18,000,000,000.

THE INTERRELATION OF BUSINESS LIFE.

Without a clear comprehension of the oneness of the whole world in all matters involving capital and the essential importance of an efficient mechanism of current exchange, it would be impossible to judge wisely, broadly, and justly the present situation and to comprehend the fact that not to any locality or class of men, but to the want of a scientific, sound, and wise financial and currency system, is due the commercial misfortunes from which we are all now suffering, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf.

COMMERCIAL ONENESS.

Though we may now live thousands of miles apart, yet we are within speaking distance of each other. So marvelous is our age, so intimate are our business relations, and so completely one is our country, that no part of it can seriously suffer without some injury to every other part.

As the pebble thrown into the lake sends its ripples to the farthest shore, so every business house in our ocean of commerce impresses itself remotely upon every other business house, and so every bank in our sea of commerce indirectly, at least, affects every other bank. In other words, one and all are links in the endless chain of our interdependent life.

THE MAGNITUDE OF THE TASK.

Let us pause for a moment and consider the magnitude of our task lest we fail to appreciate the importance of this hour.

It is estimated that our productive power to-day equals the labor of 500,000,000 men, or one-third of the population of the earth, our products this year exceeding in value $25,000,000,000. Seventeen years ago, in 1890, our products were worth only $12,500,000,000, or exactly one-half of what they are worth to-day.

In 1950, our 85,000,000 people will number 200,000,000; and it is estimated that through invention and discovery their potentiality will then be doubled. But, upon the ratio of to-day, their products then would seem bewildering to us now, being worth $60,000,000,000; while if our banking capital should correspondingly increase from $16,000,000,000 in 1907, it would amount to $40,000,000,000 in 1950, or more than all the banking power of all the world to-day.

To anticipate the conduct of such stupendous business as these figures imply and provide a scientific, sound, and wise financial and currency system is the most important question now before the American people.

THE LACK OF ECONOMIC THOUGHT.

Just eleven years ago we fought the most gigantic political battle since the civil war and established the gold standard.

Starting from this point, I propose to outline a course of legislative action, which I assert is essential to the establishment of a scientific, sound, and wise financial and currency system.

Has it ever occurred to you that there is scarcely a law upon our statute books affecting our finances and currency which is clearly and purely the result of economic thought, and such as would have been passed, but for necessity, ignorance, or political cowardice?

All the laws passed from 1860 to 1865 sprang from exigent circumstances and were the natural children of necessity, ignorance, or both. All the financial and currency laws passed as the result of the silver madness were the natural children of ignorance or political cowardice or both.

The establishment of the gold standard, the fixing of the unit of value and its proper certification, the provision for our subsidiary coinage and the laws of administration necessary to the conduct of the national business mark the limits practically of wise and proper legislation affecting our finances and currency.

THE PROPER RESERVE.

Having adopted gold, then, as our standard of value, it is the touchstone of our credit; and it is only by bringing our credits into contact with gold that their value is proved. I assert, therefore, that there is not a dollar of money in the United States that is fit for reserve except the gold dollar.

It has been suggested on the one hand that we allow the national banks to hold national bank notes as reserves, and, on the other hand, that we allow them to issue currency based upon bonds, other than Government bonds.

The argument is that the national bank note secured by a Government bond is the same thing, and therefore as good, as a United States note; again, that other bonds are as good as United States bonds.

The whole contention is founded upon a false assumption, and that is that the United States note is in itself a proper reserve—which it is not. It is nothing but a demand obligation, and should have been honored by payment and retirement forty years ago, precisely as France and Japan honored and retired their demand obligations at the close of their respective wars.

Our United States notes are tolerated as reserves because they are currently redeemed in gold coin by the Government; not because of their inherent fitness for that purpose.

The only proper reserve for any country to have is one coined out of its standard of value.

Every United States note, every silver dollar, and every silver certificate in circulation is a burden thrown upon the back of gold, and but for their current convertibility into gold would be at a heavy discount. Therefore not one of them is inherently fit for reserves.

The privilege of issuing bank notes upon a practically unlimited number of bonds and then using the bank notes as reserves would drive every dollar of gold out of the country; and your standard of value would be credit and not gold. Your bank notes would again sell at a discount just as they did in 1862 when they brought 75 cents on the dollar, or in 1864 when they sold for 35 cents on the dollar in gold coin.

Let us settle once for all that the only proper reserve for our banks to hold is gold coin; and that we are most unfortunate in having to carry $346,000,000 of United States notes and $600,000,000 of silver, maintaining them upon a parity with gold and thereby justifying as best we can their use as reserves. Let us not forget that both our silver and United States notes are serious stumbling blocks, though not insurmountable obstacles to our becoming the financial center of the world, provided they may be practically eliminated in time from our financial calculations.

With all questions of a proper kind of reserve settled, there are those who say that the only mechanism through which we can secure a scientific, sound, and wise currency system is a central bank.

CENTRAL BANK.

Undoubtedly there are some here who may expect or desire to hear what I think upon this subject. Therefore I shall frankly express myself upon its various phases.

First. A great central bank is in my opinion a political impossibility at present.

Second. I am confident that if one were possible there is no such genuine knowledge in this country of the various aspects of the subject involved as would justify any right, proper, or adequate conception of a central bank that would meet the present needs, to say nothing of anticipating the commercial development of the country during the next thirty years.

Third. The establishment of a central bank in 1793 and again in 1817 was one thing; but the establishment of such an institution to-day would be a vastly different thing, when you recall the fact that the present banking power of the United States now exceeds $16,000,000,000, and is greater than the entire banking power of the world in 1890—only seventeen years ago.

A corresponding increase during the next thirty years will make our banking power more than $40,000,000,000, or $3,000,000,000 more than the entire banking power of the world to-day.

From my experience in public life, I venture the prophecy that it will take several years, possibly a quarter of a century, to educate the public to that degree of intelligence and appreciation that will justify a favorable vote in Congress for the establishment of a financial institution adequately meeting the commercial requirements of this great country; and to attempt it now and put such an institution into a strait-jacket would be one of the greatest misfortunes that could befall us.

Let me call your attention to the startling fact that it was four years after the decisive victory in favor of the gold standard in 1896 before the gold-standard act was passed—March 14, 1900.

CENTRAL BANK NOT ESSENTIAL.

I am one of those who do not regard a great central bank as essential to a scientific, sound, and wise banking and currency system for the United States, provided we can unify and coordinate our banking interests, bringing them substantially into one system which will secure universal cooperation and the strength of a combination of our entire banking capital, and even with a central bank the same coordination must be effected.

THE 10 PER CENT TAX.

It may be suggested in this connection that the 10 per cent tax be removed from State bank notes as a relief to the situation. But on second thought no one can hope to see that done, because the reserves required by many of the States are not of the right character or sufficient in amount to protect the public.

Again, the variety of the notes would equal the number of the banks; or, even if each State supervised and furnished the notes of its banks, we should have forty-six kinds of notes, all paying a discount when away from home. The convenience and economy of the public require a currency good everywhere and national in its character.

If practically all the banking interests are brought under national supervision, two things at least will result with reference to the reserves—the quality and quantity will become uniform, and the bank notes will no longer drive out gold by displacing it in our reserves.

WHAT IS ESSENTIAL.

Our reserves must all be of the same character—gold or its equivalent—because gold is our standard of value.

Our reserves in all of our financial institutions must be adequate to prove our credits and protect our depositors.

We must adopt the principle of free interchange of bank-book credits and bank-note credits.

Our bank notes must spring into existence precisely as checks and drafts do through business transactions.

Our bank notes must be related to and based upon the consumable commodities of the country, going out with production and coming in with consumption.

No part of the capital necessary to conduct properly the commerce of the country and pay for production and transportation should be transferred to the investment account and thereby made fixed capital.

Savings from labor, the excess of profits on business, and the income from rents and securities should constitute the investment capital of the country.

Primarily, all classes of useful citizens are interested in productive occupations, and directly or indirectly are affected by them, if not dependent upon them; therefore, if possible, the commercial fund should never be encroached upon for investment purposes. This was the primary cause, and is an important factor in our present trouble.

A TAX ON CREDIT IS A TAX ON LABOR.

Credit is the very soul of modern commerce; and, upon the average, more than 90 per cent of our business is done by check and draft, based upon the book credits of the country. These credits are not taxed and should not be, because such a tax would be a tax upon production and therefore a tax upon labor.

The remaining 10 per cent of the business consists chiefly of the cash transactions of the masses, who are entitled to a current credit that will cost them just as little as checks and drafts cost the rich and powerful who keep bank accounts. Such a credit should not be taxed any more than deposits are, because it is, in fact, only another form of deposit.

THE COST OF OUR PRESENT SYSTEM.

The practice, I will not say principle, of finance and currency now in operation in this country is costing the American people at least $150,000,000 annually, in addition to the frightful devastation of values incident to such currency panics as the present, which are liable to occur at any time if some significant failure should precipitate it.

This cost to the people of $150,000,000 arises from the fact that the use of all the capital, represented by the bonds deposited to secure our present bank notes, is lost because the bonds are wholly unnecessary and in their present use and relation are an unmitigated curse.

The use of the capital represented by the bonds deposited to secure Government deposits is also lost, as well as interest at the rate of 2 per cent upon Government deposits, which since the establishment of the national banking system up to the present time would have amounted to about $75,000,000, or nearly twice as much as the loss to depositors resulting from failures of national banks.

There is in the pockets of the people $1,250,000,000 of reserve money, $1,000,000,000 of which at least should be exchanged for current credit or credit currency.

If the banks could exchange their credit notes, amounting to $1,000,000,000, for $1,000,000,000 of these reserves now in the pockets of the people, they would increase their liabilities only 8 per cent of the $12,000,000,000 deposits, while they would increase their reserves 145 per cent.

If any other business in the world, except one politically managed, were involved, this waste of $150,000,000 annually would be stopped at once.

Who pays for this waste of capital? American labor. Upon labor rests the entire cost of the banking business, which is a necessary evil incident to the production, transportation, and sale or disposition of $25,000,000,000 worth of products annually.

BANK UNIFICATION.

Having already spoken of proper bank reserves, I shall now speak first of bank unification and cooperation, and, second, of credit currency.

Practically all the business that distinguishes a trust company from a regular bank to-day has grown up since the passage of the national-bank act.

A law should be passed giving to the national banks the right of exercising in the respective States where located all the powers of executors, administrators, guardians, and trustees.

Who will oppose granting these powers to the national banks? Do you answer: "The trust companies in the various States?" If so, they can give but one reason, and that is cupidity and greed, evidenced by the fact that upon a much smaller reserve than prudence justifies they conduct a regular banking business and carry on the trust business in addition; for upon the passage of a law authorizing the national banks to do a regular trust business the trust companies could nationalize and have in turn all the advantages of the national-bank act.

Unless this step is taken, the advantages now enjoyed by the trust companies will gradually but inevitably compel the national banks to surrender their charters for trust-company charters; for if a trust company is required to carry only one-fifth or one-half the reserves of a national bank, it can afford to pay a much higher rate of interest upon deposits and eventually undermine the national bank.

These conditions are constantly confronting those who are starting new financial institutions; and, of necessity, the greater margin of profit promised under trust-company laws determines the decision of those interested, they relying upon their own wisdom as to what are proper reserves.

THE ENCROACHMENT OF TRUST COMPANIES.

The following tabulated statement demonstrates beyond the possibility of doubt the gradual encroachment of the trust companies and the final extinction of the national banking system, solely because of the reasons stated:

CREDIT CURRENCY.

Banks are created by the people; therefore they are the servants of the people.

Every depositor of a bank should have the option of taking his credit at the bank in such form as will best serve his convenience—either a book credit subject to check or a current credit in bank notes.

The masses of the people who use currency instead of checks are entitled to have just as economical and cheap credits as the rich and powerful who keep bank accounts; and the people have the right to insist that the current credits which they use shall be currently redeemed by the banks in gold coin, and so constantly measured in our standard of value, which is gold.

The laborers, the manufacturers, and the merchants of the country have the right to have their current credits related to and based upon their products, the consumable commodities of the country, the things we eat, wear, and use—the things that always have a cash value and are worth the present year more than $25,000,000,000.

The cotton planter who has already picked, ginned, and baled $10,000 worth of cotton and is entitled to a loan at his bank for $10,000, and who obtains it by giving a warehouse receipt for the cotton already prepared for the market, should have the absolute right, after the credit of $10,000 has been granted to him, of taking it in current credits in the form of bank notes, with which he can proceed to pay for picking, ginning, and baling the rest of his crop.

The elevator owner who is entitled to a loan of $100,000 at his bank, and who turns over as security for his loan of $100,000 an elevator or warehouse receipt, the loan having been granted to him and placed to his credit, has the right to take any part or all of this credit on the books of the bank in the form of current credits or bank notes, which can be sent into the country to pay for the harvesting, thrashing, and marketing of more of the wheat in the territory from which that already in his warehouse has come.

So, any person who has a credit at a bank has an equal right to take it either in a book credit, subject to his checks, or in a current credit or bank notes.

The notes of our laborers, our farmers, our manufacturers, our merchants, and producers of every kind and character are, economically speaking, the titles to the products of our labor and capital, and furnish the only true basis of a currency in any country; for such a currency must reflect the ever-varying conditions of trade.

A strictly commercial bank does a business based upon thirty, sixty and ninety day notes, which are constantly being made and as constantly paid, because the requirements of the makers are always changing with the constant production and constant consumption of commodities.

The bank loaning its money upon securities is not a commercial bank at all, but an investment bank, and the basis of its business is fixed because its collateral may remain the same for years at a time. On the other hand, the discounts of a commercial bank never remain the same for twenty-four hours, some notes being paid and new ones discounted. Therefore, you can only have a true currency of commerce when it is related to and based upon the consumable commodities of the country.

Some banks do both a commercial and an investment business, but so far as any bank does an investment business it is using the commercial fund for investment purposes, and therein lies the root or primary cause of our present commercial difficulty—an encroachment upon the commercial fund for investment purposes.

It therefore follows that the national banks should have the right to issue current credits just as freely as they take deposits subject to check, neither being subject to limitation, if only adequate reserves in gold are maintained.

This power, with that of acting as executor, administrator, and trustee, would have the effect of bringing into the national system practically all the trust companies and State banks, if our recent experiences have confirmed the public opinion that the required reserves of the national banks are none too high.

COOPERATION SHOULD BE COMPELLED.

If opposition developed on the part of either the State banks or the trust companies, the people, who have $12,000,000,000 of deposits in our banks and are interested in a proper and adequate reserve to protect them, should compel cooperation.

The people have the right to insist upon uniformity in their banking system if such uniformity is essential to the safety and convenience of the public. Cupidity and unconscionable greed must be the only source of any opposition that arises.

THE ADVANTAGE OF CREDIT CURRENCY.

If our banks were authorized to convert their bank-book credits into bank-note credits upon the demand of depositors, there never would be a currency famine such as we are suffering from now.

Mark this: There is not the slightest difference in principle between bank-book credits and bank-note credits, for one is a credit subject to order and the other is a cashier's check to bearer. Tell me, would it make the slightest difference to a bank whether it owed a million to depositors subject to check or a million in cashier's checks? Certainly not. The Bank of France owes ten times as much to note holders as it does to depositors, owing about $1,000,000,000 to the note holders and only about $100,000,000 to depositors.

THE HABITS OF THE PEOPLE CONTROL.

If the customers of a bank had their choice between these two forms of credit, the habits of the people would determine whether the bank owed more to depositors subject to check or to note holders.

The people of Scotland for one hundred and forty-three years never made a deposit subject to check, but only exchanged their time notes for the cashier's checks payable to bearer or current credits, credit currency. Their habits are now so completely changed that they have only $35,000,000 of cashier's checks in circulation, while the deposits subject to their order amount to $500,000,000.

The Bank of Germany has outstanding $450,000,000 of cashier's checks or notes and has deposits amounting only to $150,000,000.

The Bank of France has issued about $1,000,000,000 of cashier's checks or notes, while the deposits amount to only one-tenth as much, or $100,000,000.

On the other hand, the banks of Canada with the right of capital issue have only $75,000,000 of cashier's checks out, while their deposits amount to $600,000,000.

In 1811 the notes of the First United States Bank outstanding amounted to $5,037,000 and the deposits were $6,900,000.

In 1832 the notes of the Second United States Bank outstanding amounted to $21,000,000 and the deposits were $22,000,000.

In 1860 the Bank of the State of Indiana, which alone of all the Indiana banks had withstood the panic of 1857, had $5,753,000 notes out and only $1,200,000 of deposits.

In 1857 there were 515 banks in the six New England States clearing through the Suffolk Bank of Boston, and there are about the same number of banks in those States to-day. Their deposits amounted to only $25,000,000, while their notes outstanding amounted to $55,000,000.

Without any possible fear of successful contradiction, therefore, I assert that there is absolutely no difference in principle between bank-book credits and bank-note credits, and that where there is a perfect interchangeability between the two the habits of the people will determine whether the notes outstanding or the deposits are the larger.

CREDIT CURRENCY NOT EXPANSION.

Credit currency does not mean expansion, nor does it mean inflation.

Whenever I fall in with anyone who has never studied this question and thought it out he almost invariably suggests as an objection that it means expansion or inflation or both, when neither is the possible consequence of a free issue of credit currency.

I assert that credit currency does not mean or lead to expansion.

Ricardo says:

> The issuers of paper money should regulate their issues solely by the price of bullion and never by the quantity of their paper in circulation. The quantity can never be too great or too little, while it preserves the same value as the standard.

What is expansion? It is increasing the liabilities of a bank without correspondingly increasing its reserves. The reserves may all be in gold coin, and yet the bank may expand to a dangerous point, even to the point of destruction; for it could expand its liabilities until its reserve was only 1 per cent. But such expansion would ordinarily be fatal even though the 1 per cent were in gold coin. When the management of a bank considers the question of increasing its liabilities, the only important matter is whether its reserves will justify it. It is a matter of no practical importance whether the increased debt is a ledger credit, to be checked against, or a cashier's check, payable to bearer, which is a current credit or credit currency.

Therefore, I assert that a credit currency can not in any way lead to expansion; but that it would rather tend to prevent it, as appears in what follows.

CREDIT CURRENCY NOT INFLATION.

What is inflation? It is basing one credit upon another credit; that is, basing a bank's liabilities upon credit such as our present bank notes, which are in turn based upon another credit, a Government bond, which is due in about twenty-five years.

Now, would any banker hold a cashier's check payable to order, whether of the weakest or the strongest bank in the United States, as a part of his reserves? You answer, "No; under no circumstances. He would send it home as directly and swiftly as he does checks and drafts for immediate redemption."

Would a banker be any more likely to hold a cashier's check payable to bearer, whether of the weakest or the strongest bank, as a part of his reserves? You answer, "No; under no circumstances. He would send it home as directly and swiftly as he does checks and drafts for immediate redemption."

But the cashier's check, payable to bearer, is a current credit, or credit currency.

Therefore I assert that credit currency can not under any circumstances lead to inflation. On the other hand, it will be a distinct prevention of inflation such as we are suffering from to-day by using bank notes as reserves. Because the bank's obligations in the form of cashier's checks or credit currency will be sent home with the same directness and swiftness that checks and drafts are, always keeping the currency of the country down to the lowest point of necessity, and yet always meeting the largest demands of trade and commerce.

I challenge anyone to deny and contravene these foregoing propositions with regard to expansion.

Now, do not forget this: A banker may make poor loans upon overvalued securities or high-priced goods or bad personal risks; but these are cases of faulty business judgment on the part of the banker and have absolutely nothing to do with bank-credit expansion or bank-credit inflation.

CREDIT CURRENCY COORDINATED TO BUSINESS.

Therefore I assert that credit currency, when put upon the same footing in all respects as checks and drafts, will, instead of meaning or leading to inflation, prevent inflation, for our currency will then be perfectly coordinated to the needs of business, being neither too great nor too little, the cashier's checks springing into being with business needs, and automatically disappearing precisely as checks and drafts do.

This is not a theory, but the experience of two hundred years. All the rest of the civilized world are availing themselves of this principle to-day, and are using credit currency to the extent of about $4,000,000,000, or of more than 20 per cent of their entire banking capital; while, on the other hand, the United States, with $16,000,000,000 of banking power, more than three-sevenths of the banking power of the world, has not one cent of current credit or credit currency in use.

BOND-SECURED CURRENCY NOT COORDINATED TO BUSINESS.

On the other hand, no civilized country now has a bond-secured currency such as we have; and no civilized country of consequence ever did have such a currency except one, and that is Japan, who copied it from us only to repudiate and discard it in favor of a credit currency.

When Secretary Chase forced our bond-secured note scheme upon the country in 1863, it was purely a bond-selling project, and it is only a bond-speculating device to-day. There has not been a single hour from the time when the first note was issued up to this moment when the notes outstanding bore any distinct relation to the business which was being transacted in the country.

Mark this: From 1882 down to 1891, during a period of great business expansion, the bank-note circulation decreased from $365,000,000 to $122,000,000, simply because there was no profit in holding the bonds. From 1891 down to this very autumn there have been many years when the bank-note currency has actually contracted during the fall months when it ought to have expanded at least $250,000,000, simply because it paid to sell the bonds; and there have been quite as many years when there has been an expansion from January to July, though there ought to have been a contraction of at least $250,000,000.

AMOUNT OF BANK NOTES NOW HELD AS RESERVES.

Note this fact and ponder well. Ask yourselves whether you want to go further in the direction we are now moving.

Already $200,000,000, or nearly one-quarter of all the reserves now held by the banking institutions of the United States, are in bank notes. That is, of the $12,000,000,000 deposits in the banks of the country between $2,500,000,000 and $3,000,000,000 are based upon bank notes, mere promises to pay, and these mere promises to pay are again in turn based upon a debt of the Government, another mere promise to pay, which is not due for about twenty-five years, and then to be paid, if at all, out of taxes to be collected.

How long will it be before all of our deposits will be based upon mere promises to pay, which in turn will be based on the debt of the Government, the debt of States, the debt of municipalities, and the debt of railroads?

THE DANGER OF WORSE DISASTER.

With these astounding facts pressed upon your attention, can any man—any honest, intelligent, fair-minded man—deny that there must be something radically wrong, fundamentally wrong, disastrously wrong with our present currency-making devices; and that to them can be traced with unerring certainty the inexcusable calamity that has darkened our commercial sky this fall in the very midst of abounding prosperity?

Yet, while we are still in the throes of our commercial catastrophe, there are those who, ignorant of the causes and thoughtless of the future, would have us take another plunge in the same direction by adding to our overwhelming load of fixed, immobile, bond-secured notes another mass of bank notes based upon State, municipal, and railroad bonds. Could anyone conceive and plan a more gigantic scheme of inflation?

I now declare that if this Government continues its present policy of injecting into the arteries of trade and commerce a fixed, bond-secured currency, by swapping securities, by bond speculations, by Treasury manipulations, and by Executive orders, we shall continue to move only with an accelerated speed, and with the directness of a musket groove, and the absolute certainty of passing time, toward a commercial breakdown—a commercial crisis, a commercial tragedy—compared with which the present currency panic is only a pleasant summer outing.

INTELLIGENCE AND COURAGE CHALLENGED.

Are we such business fools, such economic idiots, such political cowards, that we will not move even though the heavens fall? And if perchance we do move, shall we jump into the fathomless abyss of basing credit upon credit instead of basing all bank credits, whether deposits or note-issues, upon gold coin?

CREDIT CURRENCY IS SAFE.

I submit that beyond all possible doubt there is a complete want of any coordination between our business and our present currency. But for the purpose of an argument, let us admit that the currency is sound, and that no one has ever lost a dollar in holding the notes, although at one time they were worth only 35 cents in gold coin.

Now, if there is such a thing as an absolutely sound currency which will at the same time perfectly reflect the varying conditions of trade and commerce, and, with never failing accuracy, respond to every call and meet every requirement, let us with intelligence, courage, and patriotism proceed to adopt it.

Of course, above all else it must be absolutely sound, and every dollar of it must be as good as gold. Scotland has had such a currency for more than two hundred years. France has had such a currency for more than one hundred years. Indeed, practically all the civilized nations of the world, except our own, have such a currency to-day, and therefore we must conclude that it is sound.

Canada has had such a currency for forty years. No one has ever lost a cent by holding one of her bank notes. But Canada borrowed her banking law from Massachusetts, and before the civil war Massachusetts was the very center, all things considered, of the most perfect banking system the world has ever seen, the Bank of France, possibly, alone excepted, and that system was the outgrowth of the requirements of trade in that section.

It was so good in those early days, when the stage coach carried the mail and there were neither railroads nor telegraphs nor telephones to insure early and accurate knowledge of the changing conditions of the then remote parts of New England, that we have had nothing to compare with it since.

In many respects the Atlantic and the Pacific are not so distant from each other as some of the points in the interior of New England were then from Boston, where every bank in New England had to redeem its notes every day in coin. These notes were so good that they sold at a premium of from 1 to 5 per cent in all the western centers of trade.

A GUARANTY FUND.

Indeed, so absolutely sound was the banking of New England in those days before the war that it would have taken a tax of only one-eighth of 1 per cent upon all the notes issued to pay the notes of the failed banks. While it would have taken a tax of twenty-two one-hundredths, or more than one-fifth of 1 per cent, on all the notes so far issued by the national banks to pay the notes of the national banks that have failed.

Now, if such a system of banking grew up in New England, with very few legal limitations and under such adverse conditions, how much better ought our system to be if it were founded upon the same principles. But let us suppose that the banking for the next forty years should prove upon the average as safe as for the last forty years; then a tax of one-fifth of 1 per cent would pay the notes of failed banks.

Now, it is a matter of record that about 80 per cent, or four-fifths, of all the deposits of national banks which have failed have been paid; therefore an annual tax of one-fifth of 1 per cent would pay the remaining 20 per cent. Hence, a general guaranty fund of 5 per cent would last one hundred and twenty-five years; and of 2 per cent would last for fifty years. Certainly there is no insurance, life or fire, that is to be compared in point of safety with that proposed here.

I assert then that in point of safety a credit currency with a guaranty fund of 5 per cent is equal in point of safety to our present national-bank notes; and it may be claimed that both are perfectly safe if the proper reserves are held to protect them.

BANK-CREDIT NOTES V. BOND-SECURED NOTES.

When we come to compare a credit currency and a bond-secured currency in their relation to the business of the country, the advocate of a bond-secured note is compelled to admit that for forty years it has failed utterly, indeed has never failed to fail, to show the slightest variation because of the changing conditions of trade. As I have before stated, the circulation fell from $365,000,000 in 1882 to $122,000,000 in 1891, and just as strange and anomalous circumstances are attending it every month of the year.

Indeed, there has not been a single fall during all these forty years when we have not been hanging over the brink of a currency panic; and our danger has always been directly in proportion to the size and price of our crops—the possibility of panic and ruin increasing with our prosperity. What a system it has proved to be! The greater our crops and prosperity, the greater our danger and the more imminent our ruin!

On the other hand, the principle of converting our bank-book credits into bank-note credits, the adoption of a true credit currency, will bring such a perfect harmony between our business and currency that no season of the year will seem any different from any other season, so far as our supply of currency is concerned—it will never be too large, never too small, always just enough. The experience of every other civilized country in the world justifies this assertion.

CREDIT CURRENCY ADJUSTMENTS.

Now, mark this, wherever a credit currency is in use, it automatically registers every change in trade, year in and year out, month by month, and day by day.

In absolute confirmation of this statement, I call your attention to the currency fluctuations in Japan, Scotland, Austria, France, Germany, and Canada; and I hope that you will study them, for they are a mathematical demonstration of the principle of credit currency:

Name of country.	Percentage of variation.	Amount of variation.	Per capita variation.	Times of variation per year.	Month of maximum variation.	Month of minimum variation.	Amount of variation United States would have relatively.
Japan	21.1	$24,222,000	$0.48	One	January	May	$40,800,000
Scotland	15.8	5,465,000	1.22	Two	July and December	April and September	103,700,000
Austria-Hungary	20.9	62,530,000	1.28	Three	Jan., May, November	Mar. and July	108,800,000
France	7.8	67,600,000	1.73	Two	Jan. and November	April and July	147,050,000
Germany	39.7	120,000,000	2.12	Four	Mar., June, Sept., Dec.	Feb., May, Aug., Nov.	180,200,000
Canada	37.0	22,733,756	3.29	One	October	January	279,650,000

THE TAX ON ISSUES.

Since I have given so many instances already of where the note issues of banks were in excess of deposits, I presume it is now clear to all that there is absolutely no difference in principle between bank deposits and bank notes or bank-book credits and bank-note credits, both being debts to the people—the one a liability subject to check or order, the other a current liability.

Now, no one would think of taxing deposits in our commercial banks, because such a tax would be a burden upon production. But a tax upon production is a tax upon labor; therefore a tax upon bank notes, which are only another form of deposits, is also a tax upon labor.

Is it not perfectly plain that a tax upon the $1,000,000,000 bank notes of the Bank of France would be as distinctly a burden upon labor as a tax upon the $100,000,000 of deposits held by the Bank of France? So with the two United States banks and the 515 New England banks which cleared through the Suffolk Bank of Boston before the civil war and had $55,000,000 of notes in circulation and only $25,000,000 of deposits.

Who use these notes? The people. Then who must pay the tax? The people.

If the Government should impose a tax of $2 upon every pair of shoes that were sold, who would pay the $2—the man who bought them or the man who sold them? Shoes would be just $2 per pair higher, that is all.

I assert, therefore, that whatever tax is imposed upon bank notes must be paid ultimately by labor. Therefore there should be no tax in principle on either deposits or bank notes.

HIGH TAX A MISTAKE.

But there are those who, simply because they have not thought out this matter, may say: "You must put a high tax, say 6 per cent, upon note issues to drive them home when they are no longer needed."

I assert, without any fear whatever of successful contradiction, that a tax that is so high as to destroy all profit in note circulation will also completely destroy one of the two incentives bankers have for sending the notes home, and therefore will defeat the very purpose for which the high tax was imposed. Indeed, a high tax will tend rather to keep the notes out than to drive them home.

The reason is apparent. Any bank, upon receiving the notes of a competing bank, would have, under a proper system, two motives for sending the notes directly home for redemption.

The first motive would be to get its own notes out and make the profit that this competing bank is making. For instance, if the tax is 2 per cent, and the local interest rate is 6 per cent, it would want to make the difference of 4 per cent, and so would send home the notes of the competing bank.

The second motive would be to convert the notes, which are a mere credit, into reserve money, because then the bank can loan from four to six times as much as it could if it were to loan the notes themselves out again.

It is therefore clear that a tax of 6 per cent, where the rate of interest is 6 per cent, would absolutely destroy the first motive for returning the notes to the maker.

All business is based upon selfishness, and certainly the banking business is no exception to the rule. Indeed, banking is the very refinement of business, and therefore the very refinement of selfishness.

THE HIGH-TAX ADVOCATE.

But the advocate of the high tax may reply: "I can deposit with the Government lawful or reserve money to the amount of the notes I have outstanding, and so retire that amount of currency and relieve myself of the tax when the currency is no longer needed."

But just what has the high-tax advocate accomplished, should he pursue this course? He has put into the Treasury, and therefore has exchanged, reserve money for credit notes to the amount of his deposit; a most undesirable thing if the reserve money were to remain there.

But the reserve money would not remain in the Treasury, for any sensible Secretary of the Treasury would immediately pay it out again; and so we should have no contraction whatever. The reserve money would be redeposited in the banks, and the bank notes would continue in circulation and no tax would be paid upon them.

Such a scheme would be an utter failure in every respect simply because it is in violation of both commercial and economic law.

So far as I can ascertain, the whole theory of a high tax has sprung from the experience of the clearing houses in retiring their certificates. But the facts are entirely different.

In the case of the clearing houses, the certificates never leave the immediate circle of membership, and, therefore, can be retired at will by actually withdrawing them. While the bank notes may circulate in every State of the Union, some of them being in the cotton fields of Mississippi, some of them in the shoe factories of Massachusetts, some of them in the cornfields of Iowa, and some in the lumbering camps of Oregon; and the banker has no way of getting possession of them unless they are returned to him for redemption in the regular course of business.

A REASONABLE TAX.

Now, there are three good reasons why there should be a tax of some kind upon true bank notes.

First. There should be a small tax, say one-fourth of 1 per cent per annum, to create a guaranty fund to pay the notes of banks that fail; for every note holder who lives at a distance from the bank of issue is an involuntary holder of the notes, and public policy demands that he should be protected, in order that our currency may be good beyond peradventure and acceptable everywhere.

Second. There should be a tax of possibly 1 per cent to pay the cost of transmission and redemption.

Third. Since the banks of the country have adopted the practice of paying upon the average about 2 per cent upon bank balances, it would be reasonable to impose a tax of this amount upon true bank notes, since they are only another form of deposits.

But the total tax should not exceed 2 per cent, out of which the guaranty fund and the cost of transmission and redemption would be taken.

CURRENT REDEMPTION.

Let every bank in the United States be brought within twenty-four hours of a redemption agency and let all the cost of the transmission and redemption of the notes be paid by the United States out of the 2 per cent tax imposed upon the notes; then every bank note issued will be placed upon the same footing with checks and drafts and will be sent home as directly and swiftly as checks and drafts are, and our bank notes will always be adequate to the demands, no more, no less, expanding automatically to meet every call and retiring automatically as the demand ceases.

This is precisely what is happening to-day in Japan, Scotland, Germany, France, Canada, and other countries, and be it remembered that it is wholly due to the law of economic gravitation, expressed in selfishness, cupidity, greed, and certainty of profit, and not in any instance to a tax upon note issues.

A PRACTICAL ILLUSTRATION.

I assert that if last July, when the demand for currency began, the banks of the United States had been authorized to convert their bank-book credits into bank-note credits, we should have escaped the calamities growing out of the currency panic this fall.

Now note just what would have happened. There is an extraordinary demand for currency in this country, beginning with July and terminating about the 1st of January, amounting to about three hundred millions of dollars, and it is known that the banks in our great commercial centers, like St. Paul, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, New Orleans, Chicago, and the cities throughout the East, are owing to the banks throughout the country districts a sum largely in excess of this amount.

If the banks located in these commercial centers had been authorized to issue cashier's checks payable to bearer, or credit bank notes, they could have responded to this demand for three hundred millions of currency and paid off the bankers in the country districts without increasing their liabilities to the extent of one dollar, and without adding one single dollar to their reserves, for the banks issuing these cashier's checks or bank notes should carry the same reserves against these bank notes as they now do against their deposits subject to check or draft. It would have been simply a matter of bookkeeping; the banks in the commercial centers would have charged the banks in the country districts with the amount of notes sent and credited their own cashiers with a similar amount.

There has not been expansion to the extent of a single dollar; there has not been inflation to the extent of a single dollar, and when the demand throughout the country districts began to diminish in January these cashier's checks or credit notes would be returned to the banks that issued them and be paid in cash or deposited to the credit of the bank sending them in, and so be reconverted into a bank-book credit subject to check.

CLEARING-HOUSE CERTIFICATES.

When universal panic struck our beloved country in the very midst of abounding prosperity and we were in the throes of commercial distress natural law pointed out the way. It was through the use of current credit, related to and based upon the consumable commodities of the country, the things we eat, wear, and use.

What was it? It was the clearing-house certificate and cashier's check, a pure credit currency. This sprang into being under the pressure of necessity, and will automatically disappear as that necessity recedes, perfectly adjusting itself to every condition from day to day.

These clearing-house certificates and cashier's checks were issued without authority of law and under very great disadvantages, because it was necessary to successfully evade the law. And yet, will any man say that this credit currency did not save us from a commercial disaster which would beggar the imagination of any human being?

Has this great lesson taught us nothing? God forbid.

Now mark this—while all these credits will soon disappear, you will find that the immobile, sodden mass of Government bond-secured notes will remain to a single dollar, and will pile up and crowd themselves into the reserves of our banking institutions, State banks, trust companies, private banks, and even into our national banks, forcing out a corresponding amount of gold, and so undermining the $12,000,000,000 of credits in this country.

I warn you now against the fathomless abyss of inflation we are slowly but certainly approaching. Shall we stop now or proceed and hasten the day and guarantee the result by adding State, municipal, and railroad bonds as a basis of bank currency?

QUESTION MUST BE SETTLED RIGHT.

Gentlemen, until we adopt this principle and relate our currency to and base it upon the consumable commodities of the country, we shall experiment in vain. As I wrote to Secretary Cortelyou, "All these superficial tricks and mechanical devices will fail; and, after stumbling about for five, ten, fifty, or possibly one hundred years, we shall come back to these fundamental economic principles which work economy and justice to all who are affected by them."

Gentlemen, I know that this question will never be settled right until it is submitted to the people for decision precisely as the question of the establishment of the gold standard was submitted to them, and I know equally well that the people's intelligence and patriotism will decide this question as that was decided—right.

I know that if the Senate and the House of Representatives do anything before a great educational campaign upon this subject, it will simply be to sew another rotten patch upon an old ragged garment already well-nigh covered with rotten patches.

THE QUESTION RESTS WITH THE PEOPLE.

This question is not up to Congress now—it has passed that. It is up to the people of the United States; it is up to you, the men within the sound of my voice. Will you do your duty and make this question the issue of the hour, or will you let the politicians make your issues for you?

There is not a laborer, not a manufacturer, not a merchant in the United States to whom this question is not of vastly greater importance than all other questions combined. Indeed, when we consider what may happen to the commercial interests of this country at any moment, all other questions sink into nothingness in comparison.

Labor is now paying a penalty of $150,000,000 a year, as I have pointed out, to keep up the grotesque farrago of our financial and currency practices. Hundreds of thousands of men are now idle; two millions of men may be idle as the result of present conditions; and, so long as we continue these conditions, will we constantly jeopardize the prosperity of the people and the welfare of the whole country. For it will be an accident every fall if we get through without a repetition of our present experience, bitterly intensified, too, should the misfortune overtake us when general conditions were bad.

Mark my warning to-night. I challenge the attention, the intelligence, the self-interest, the patriotism, and the conscience of the American people; and, in the face of what has transpired during the last thirty days, I charge all the responsibility for the future upon the people of the United States, and especially upon you who hear me now, for you have it in your power to demand a full discussion of this question before the people, and a verdict at their hands. Will you do it?

THE NEEDS OF THE HOUR.

As the contest for the gold standard brought confidence, strength, stability, progress, and prosperity to our country, so will a campaign for a scientific, sound, and wise financial and currency system lead us out of our difficulty, protect us against like dangers and immeasurably greater misfortunes in the future, and guarantee to us permanent conditions.

In the first throes of this currency panic I was asked about the advisability of an extra session of Congress, and replied: "No; we want no more unrest, apprehension, destruction of credit, and disturbance of confidence in American business; we want rest, recuperation, construction, and a revival of faith and hope in American manhood."

We want less sensation and more sense.

We want less dynamite and destruction and more cement and construction.

We want less constitutional anarchism and more constitutional liberty.

We want less governmentalism and more individualism.

Remember! remember, my countrymen! remember that the corner stone of this Republic is a free man. Physically free, intellectually free, religiously free, politically free, commercially free. That its very foundations rest upon local self-government, and that if it endures forever it must be through the conscience, intelligence, and strength of the people themselves.

All our surpassing achievements and national glory are traceable to the individualism and personal initiative of the American people, and our sole hope of a triumphant and transcendent future is in an absolutely free man.

Let us see to it then that no citizen secures any advantage whatever over any other citizen through the forms of law, but that all have and enjoy equal opportunities under the operation of absolutely equal and just laws.

Let us see to it that no corporation secures any advantage whatever over any other corporation through the forms of law; that no corporation secures any advantage whatever over any private citizen through the forms of law, and that no corporation secures any advantage whatever over the people themselves through the forms of law, but that every grant of power by the people to a corporation giving it a legalized monopoly shall have its corollary and counterpart in legalized regulation.

Whatever our problems may be, however difficult our tasks may be, I have absolute confidence in the intelligence and conscience of the people to solve and settle them wisely and justly, and I believe that they will not condone crime or wrongdoing of any kind, at any time, or anywhere.

I believe that the American citizenship of 1907 is morally and intellectually better and higher than that of one hundred years ago. I believe that we are better to-day than we were yesterday, and that we shall be better to-morrow than we are to-day.

I believe that American manhood and womanhood, man for man and woman for woman, are vastly superior to the manhood and womanhood of any other nation on this globe.

Let us respect ourselves as we are entitled to, and then others will respect us; and let us so live that all nations will recognize in the typical American the ideal individual citizen of the world for all the centuries to come.

PLATFORM FOR SCIENTIFIC, SOUND, AND WISE FINANCIAL AND CURRENCY SYSTEM.

We demand that the reserves in our banks shall be in gold coin, and shall be ample to prove their credits and to protect their millions of depositors, who have $12,000,000,000 to their credit.

We demand that the depositors shall have the option of taking their credit in the form of a book credit subject to check, or in the form of a current credit in bank notes.

We assert that the masses, who use currency instead of checks, are entitled to have just as economical and cheap credits as the rich and powerful who keep bank accounts.

We demand that the currency of the country shall be related to and be based upon the products of our labor, the consumable commodities of the country, the things we eat, wear, and use, and that our currency shall be measured in gold by currently redeeming it in gold coin. Such a currency is absolutely sound, because as good as gold, and comes into existence with purchase and production, and disappears with sales and consumption. Therefore, it always perfectly responds to the ever-varying demands of trade.

We demand such a reform of the financial and currency practices of the United States as will save to the laborers, manufacturers, and merchants the $150,000,000 per annum now wasted because our reserve and banking capital are uselessly employed.

In support of these propositions we cite the following illustrations of where bank deposits and bank notes are interchangeable:

	Deposits.	Note issues.
The Bank of France	$100,000,000	$1,000,000,000
11 Scotch banks	500,000,000	40,000,000
35 Canadian banks	600,000,000	75,000,000
510 New England banks in Suffolk system	25,000,000	55,000,000

We assert that a credit currency, currently redeemed in gold coin, does not mean expansion and can not lead to inflation; and in support of this proposition we submit the following illustrations:

	Permissible issue.	Actual issue.
France	$1,000,000,000	$829,000,000
Canada	94,000,000	83,000,000
Scotland	148,000,000	40,000,000
First United States Bank	10,000,000	5,000,000
Second United States Bank	35,000,000	23,000,000
Bank of Indiana	6,600,000	4,000,000
Bank of Iowa	2,006,000	1,400,000
New England Suffolk system	123,000,000	55,000,000

LIFE OF A CREDIT NOTE V. A BOND-SECURED NOTE.

The life of a true credit note or the time it remains out in circulation is absolute proof, indeed mathematical proof, that these notes are always just adequate to and never in excess of the requirements of trade. To illustrate this fact we submit the experience of the Scotch and Canadian banks, and of New England banks clearing through the Suffolk Bank at Boston, and the record made by the national banking system, as follows:

	Days.
The note of the Scotch banking system remains out	18
The note of the Canadian banking system remains out	30
The note of the New England (Suffolk) banking system remained out only	45
The average life of our national-bank bond-secured note is just the life of the paper upon which it is printed	730

Therefore, it is demonstrated that the life of our bond-secured note bears no relation to the business of the country.

We assert that it is wholly immaterial whether there is only 1 central bank of issue, as in France, or 11 banks of issue with branches, as in Scotland, or 35 banks of issue, with 1,600 branches, as in Canada, or whether there are 515 independent individual banks of issue as there were in New England before the war, or 5,000 or 25,000 banks of issue; and that it is wholly immaterial whether each bank of issue has $25,000 capital, or $250,000 capital, or $2,500,000 capital, or $25,000,000 of capital—the principle is the same.

We assert that the law controlling the movement of credit, constantly measured in gold, our standard of value, unless unwisely interfered with by some foolish device of man, is as certain and absolute in its operation as the law of gravitation or any other law of God.

The absolute proof of this statement is found in the daily redemption of checks and drafts and cashier's checks payable to order; and the operation of this great law would not be suspended if the cashier's checks should be made payable to bearer, a current credit, and the customers of our banks should take these cashier's checks because they desired a current credit in preference to using their own checks which are not current, but only pass by indorsement.

We base this declaration upon natural law and the experience of all the civilized nations of the world.

APPENDIX.

A bill (H. R. 12677) to establish a simple and scientific monetary system, founded upon gold, guaranteed bank notes, and silver, with uniform banking and bank reserves in gold coin or its equivalent; to guarantee all deposits and note issues; and to fix certain rules and regulations whereby the financial operations of the Government shall cease to be a disturbing factor in our trade and commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the passage of this act the Comptroller of the Currency shall immediately proceed to designate such cities in the United States, including the District of Columbia, Arizona, and New Mexico, for the location of bank-note redemption agencies, numbering them consecutively, as will practically bring every national banking association within twenty-four hours of some one of such agencies: Provided, however, That the twenty-four-hour rule shall only apply where the railroad facilities are good and that the number of such agencies shall not exceed the requirement of bringing all national banks practically within twenty-four hours of some one of such agencies.

SEC. 2. That within thirty days after the designation of the cities for the location of the bank-note redemption agencies, every national bank, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, shall select one of the cities so designated as the place for its bank-note redemption agency, and thereupon the Comptroller of the Currency shall notify all the national banks to meet at their respective bank-note redemption agency cities on a given day, and at a designated place, for the purpose of organizing the several bank-note redemption agencies. Each bank shall be entitled to only one vote, which shall be cast by an officer of the bank who has been duly authorized by a vote of the board of directors thereof.

SEC. 3. That the association of all the national banks clearing or redeeming their notes at any one of the cities so designated shall be known as "The [insert number] bank-note redemption district."

SEC. 4. That all the national banks of each of the bank-note redemption districts so constituted shall organize themselves into an association to be known as "The [insert number] Bank-note Redemption District" by electing a board of managers consisting of seven members, who shall serve, according to the number of votes received, respectively, for seven, six, five, four, three, two, and one years, and by adopting a set of by-laws for the proper conduct of their business.

SEC. 5. That every year thereafter on the first Monday in May all the national banks of each of the bank-note redemption districts aforesaid shall elect one member to its board of managers to succeed to the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of the retiring member, and such newly elected member shall serve for a period of seven years. In case a vacancy occurs in said board of managers by death or resignation the board of managers shall fill the same until the next annual election, when some one shall be elected to fill the unexpired term. In the election of all members to the board of managers each bank shall vote as prescribed in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 6. That the board of managers of each bank-note redemption district, so selected, shall appoint one of their number to act as chairman for the ensuing year, who shall thereupon become a deputy comptroller of the currency, and shall give his entire time to the bank-note redemption district, and shall receive as compensation therefor $6,000 per annum, payable $500 monthly; and in case of any bank failure in his bank-note redemption district the chairman of said board of managers shall act as receiver thereof without any additional compensation therefor.

SEC. 7. That each chairman of a board of managers, subject to the direction of the board, shall succeed to all the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency so far as the supervision of the banks in his particular bank-note redemption district is concerned, and all the decisions of the courts affecting the office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall be applicable to the conduct of the chairman of the respective bank-note redemption districts. But for the purpose of securing a uniform system of bank reports, all the national banks shall make reports to the Comptroller of the Currency as now provided by law.

SEC. 8. That five members of said board of managers shall constitute a quorum to do business.

SEC. 9. That each board of managers so selected shall have entire and sole charge of the organization and conduct of its bank-note redemption agency, and, without the suggestion of or consultation with the Comptroller of the Currency, shall select and direct such a number of bank examiners as the board may from time to time deem requisite for the proper supervision of the national banks within its redemption district; and thereafter all bank examinations under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency shall cease, except when in his judgment the public interests demand a special examination, which shall be conducted under his direction.

SEC. 10. That each board of managers of the several bank-note redemption districts shall meet at least once every month throughout the year at its respective bank-note redemption agency. The day of said monthly meeting shall be the second Thursday in every month, unless the board of managers shall, by vote, select some other day.

SEC. 11. That upon the completion of the organizations of the several bank-note redemption districts, as hereinbefore provided, any national bank may retire all of its present bond-secured note circulation by depositing with the United States Treasurer an amount of the present bond-secured notes and of lawful money, which, together, will be equal to its entire circulation now outstanding, and may thereupon take out for issue and circulation an amount of bank notes, which shall be known as "national bank guaranteed credit notes," equal to its paid-up capital without depositing United States bonds to secure the payment thereof as now provided by law: Provided, however, That before any national bank shall have the right to retire its present bond-secured circulation and take out "national bank guaranteed credit notes," as in this section prescribed, it shall first, unless located in its redemption city, make arrangements with a national bank which is located in its redemption city for the redemption of its bank notes in gold coin or its equivalent; and shall deposit in gold coin or its equivalent, with the Treasurer of the United States, an amount of money equal to 5 per cent of its average deposits during the preceding calendar six months, and in addition thereto an amount equal to 5 per cent of the "national bank guaranteed credit notes" it proposes to take out for issue and circulation.

SEC. 12. That any national bank desiring to take out for issue and circulation an amount of "national-bank guaranteed credit notes" in excess of its paid-up capital may do so, provided the board of managers of the bank-note redemption agency to which it belongs first gives its approval thereto.

SEC. 13. That the "national-bank guaranteed credit notes" referred to in the two preceding sections shall be printed upon paper with green background or effect, and shall bear these words: "National-bank guaranteed credit note. Will be redeemed upon demand over its own counter by the ——— National Bank in gold coin or its equivalent. The payment of this note is guaranteed by a fund deposited with the Treasurer of the United States," and such other words as the Comptroller of the Currency may approve.

SEC. 14. That thereafter every national bank shall have upon deposit upon the 10th days of January and July each year with the Treasurer of the United States an amount of gold coin or its equivalent equal to 5 per cent of its average deposits during the preceding calendar six months and 5 per cent of its "national-bank guaranteed credit notes" taken out for issue and circulation.

SEC. 15. That as soon as the amount of money deposited by the national banks with the Treasurer of the United States as aforesaid shall reach the sum of $25,000,000 all the bonds now deposited by national banks to secure Government deposits shall be returned to the respective banks to which they belong, and from and after that date any national bank holding a Government deposit shall pay interest thereon to the Treasurer of the United States at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, the same being payable as follows: One per cent on the 1st days of January and July in each year on the average balance during the preceding six months.

SEC. 16. That any national bank which has taken out "national-bank guaranteed credit notes" for issue and circulation in accordance with section 11 of this act shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States on the 1st days of January and July of each year 1 per cent upon the average amount of notes in actual circulation during the preceding six months.

SEC. 17. That the 5 per cent of all deposits so deposited with the United States Treasurer, the 5 per cent of all note issues so deposited with the United States Treasurer, the interest paid by the national banks upon United States Government deposits to the Treasurer of the United States, and the 2 per cent paid to the Treasurer of the United States upon the "national-bank guaranteed credit notes" in circulation shall constitute a common or general guaranty fund for the following uses and purposes, namely: To guarantee the payment of all individual deposits, all bank notes, all bank deposits, and all Government deposits without discrimination or preference, and to pay all the expenses incurred in any way in properly conducting and maintaining the several "bank-note redemption agencies," including the charges for the transmission of bank notes by any national bank to its "bank-note redemption agency," and all expenses of whatsoever kind incurred in the examinations of the banks of the respective "bank-note redemption districts," and all the expenses incurred by the members of the respective boards of managers in the performance of their official duties.

SEC. 18. That primarily, and for the time being, 80 per cent of the said guaranty fund shall be invested in United States Government bonds, bearing 2 per cent interest. In purchasing said bonds a first preference shall be given to the bonds now deposited by national banks with the United States to secure the payment of the bank notes now outstanding, the price in all such cases to be the price paid by the respective banks for the particular bonds now held by them. Second preference shall be given to the United States 2 per cent bonds, if any were purchased in good faith and are now held as security for the United States Government deposits. No purchases of bonds made by any national bank after January 1, 1908, shall be recognized as bona fide.

SEC. 19. That the balance, or remaining one-fifth of the said guaranty fund at least, shall be kept in cash and deposited with the various bank-note redemption agencies or national banks located in bank-note redemption cities, for the purpose of facilitating and effecting the redemption of national-bank notes.

SEC. 20. That said "national bank guaranteed credit notes," issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, including duties on imports, and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt, and in redemption of the national currency. Said notes shall be received upon deposit and for all purposes of debt and liability by every national banking association at par and without charge of whatsoever kind.

SEC. 21. That any national banking association, situated and doing business in a central reserve city, or a reserve city, shall at all times have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 25 per cent of its "national bank guaranteed credit notes" in circulation; and every other national banking association shall at all times have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 15 per cent of its "national bank guaranteed credit notes" in circulation: Provided, however, That any national banking association situated and doing business in a reserve city may keep 7½ per cent, or three-tenths, of its reserve in cash deposits in a central reserve city; and that every national banking association, situated and doing business outside of a central reserve city, or a reserve city, may keep 4 per cent, or four-fifteenths, of its lawful money reserve in cash deposits in a central reserve city or a reserve city.

SEC. 22. That every national bank may count as a part of its required reserve the amount it shall have deposited with the United States Treasurer in accordance with sections 11 and 14 of this act, and shall be entitled to receive interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent per annum, payable annually on the 1st day of July each succeeding year.

SEC. 23. That any national bank desiring to wind up its affairs and go out of business, shall be entitled to receive back its advance made to said guaranty fund, less any deductions made because of bank failures: Provided, however, That all the liabilities of such bank have been paid in full and satisfied, or an amount of lawful money equal thereto has been paid into the United States Treasury for that purpose, and the Comptroller of the Currency approves the repayment of said sum.

SEC. 24. That whenever any bank failure occurs after the 1st day of January, 1909, one-tenth of the loss resulting therefrom shall be borne by the banks of the bank-note redemption district to which the bank failing belongs, pro rata or according to their respective deposits and note issues, the same being deducted from the interest due such banks upon their deposits in the guaranty fund, and the balance, or nine-tenths of the loss, shall be borne by the general or common guaranty fund.

SEC. 25. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1909, no national bank shall pay out over its counter any bond-secured bank note, but shall send the same to its bank-note redemption agency, and the bank-note redemption agency shall forward it to the United States Treasury for redemption, cancellation, and destruction.

SEC. 26. That any national bank that shall count any national bank guaranteed credit note or notes as a part of its reserve shall pay into the said guaranty fund a penalty (tax) of 10 per cent per diem on the amount so counted, and any national bank that shall after January 1, 1909, count any bond-secured bank note as a part of its reserve shall pay into the said guaranty fund a penalty (tax) of 10 per cent per diem upon the amount so counted.

SEC. 27. That any national bank that has a paid-up capital of at least $100,000, and has a surplus of at least $50,000, and has been in business at least five years, may act as guardian, administrator, executor, or trustee in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory where situated or located, and the reserves required in all such cases shall be determined and fixed by the board of managers of the "bank-note redemption district" within which such bank is located. All such accounts shall be kept separate and apart from all other accounts.

SEC. 28. That from and after the passage of this act any national bank may accept savings bank accounts; but such accounts shall not be subject to check, but be paid out only on book account, and all the records and books shall be kept separate and apart from the commercial accounts of the bank, and the reserves required in all such cases, and the interest to be allowed, shall be determined and fixed by the board of managers of the "bank-note redemption district" where such bank is located.

SEC. 29. That all investments made for the benefits of the accounts referred to in the two preceding sections shall be under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of managers of the respective agencies, subject, however, to any laws that the several States may have passed or may pass limiting, determining, and prescribing such investments.

SEC. 30. That from and after the passage of this act no national bank shall pay on any commercial account a higher rate of interest than 2 per cent upon monthly balances. Nor shall time certificates be issued payable upon demand for a shorter period than three months, and in no case shall a time certificate or a savings bank account be transferred or converted into a commercial account. Nor shall this be accomplished in any way directly or indirectly, and any bank that violates this section shall pay into the guaranty fund a penalty of 10 per cent upon the amount so transferred or converted.

SEC. 31. That the Comptroller of the Currency and the deputy comptrollers, who are the chairmen of the boards of managers of the respective "bank-note redemption districts," shall meet at least every six months at such place as the Comptroller shall designate, and such regular meetings shall be held on the second Tuesday of April and October in each year, unless the Comptroller and the deputy comptrollers by vote select some other day and month.

SEC. 32. That the Comptroller shall always act as chairman of said meetings and except as herein provided shall continue to exercise all the authority and powers now exercised by him. The said deputy comptrollers shall report to the Comptroller all violations of law, and give him such information from time to time as he may call for.

SEC. 33. That all prosecutions for violations of the law shall be under the direction of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the said deputy comptrollers shall render him such assistance and services as he may require.

SEC. 34. That the Comptroller and the said deputy comptrollers, the chairmen of the several boards of managers of the "bank-note redemption districts" shall have the direction and control of the guaranty fund so far as it may be necessary to use it to facilitate and effect the redemption of the national-bank notes at the several agencies, and shall have power to determine in what securities said guaranty fund shall be invested, if at any time it shall be necessary to purchase other and additional securities than the United States Government 2 per cent bonds now outstanding, as herein provided.

SEC. 35. That from and after the date that said guaranty fund shall amount to the sum of $25,000,000 the United States Government shall deposit from day to day all its receipts from whatever source received in such national banks as it may select: Provided, however, That after the 1st day of January, 1909, it shall not have and keep on deposit in any one national bank an amount of money greater than 50 per cent of the capital thereof.

SEC. 36. That from and after the date that said guaranty fund shall amount to the sum of $25,000,000 all debts and obligations of whatsoever kind owing to the United States Government, including stamp sales, internal revenues, and duties on imports, may be paid by check and draft given by any national bank or by draft accepted, or check certified by any national bank, and all debts or obligations owing by the United States to others shall be paid by check or draft upon some national bank which is a United States depository, or upon the Treasury or one of the subtreasuries of the United States, at the option of the Government.

SEC. 37. That if the 5 per cent guaranty fund shall not amount to sufficient by January 1, 1909, to purchase all the United States Government 2 per cent bonds held by the banks, the United States Government shall use so much of its deposits then held by the banks as may be necessary to purchase the balance upon the same terms as prescribed in section 19 of this act, and the bonds so purchased shall remain in the United States Treasury to be taken up from time to time as the said guaranty fund increases: Provided, however, That not more than $200,000,000 of the money in the Treasury outside of said guaranty fund, and held by the banks, shall be used for such purpose.

SEC. 38. That whenever the accumulations from said guaranty fund, arising from the interest on said bonds, and interest upon any part of said fund deposited with national banks, the interest on Government deposits, and the tax upon the national bank guaranteed credit notes, shall reach $25,000,000, after paying all the expenses as provided in section 18 and meeting any losses due to bank failures, the excess remaining over and above said $25,000,000 on each succeeding 1st day of January shall be paid in gold coin into the reserve fund of the United States Treasury until the amount of gold coin therein shall be $346,000,000, whereupon all the United States notes outstanding shall be converted into gold certificates, and thereafter no national bank shall hold a United States note as part of its reserves, nor shall the Government of the United States thereafter pay out a United States note, but they shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 39. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to present the following amendment to the bill in order that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to present an amendment to the pending bill in order that it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Add after section 2 the following:

"SEC. 3. That every street and suburban railroad company doing business in the District of Columbia shall, on each and all of their roads, furnish such a number of cars as will give comfortable and convenient passage to all persons desiring to ride. And it is made the duty of the District Commissioners (which they are especially required to perform) to see that the above requirement is obeyed. And said Commissioners shall have the authority to regulate the number of cars that shall at different hours be operated and the intervals of time between cars. And said railway companies are hereby required to obey all orders made by said Commissioners respecting the time and manner in which cars shall be operated, as well as the condition of such cars as to cleanliness, repair, appearance, and sanitary condition. Any street or suburban railroad company failing to obey the provisions of this section or any of the regulations or orders of the Commissioners authorized hereby shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in the sum of $1,000. And each day of neglect to perform duties imposed upon said companies by or under authority of this section shall be regarded as a distinct offense."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. STERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10446, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the general assembly of the State of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution.

Whereas the question of an inland waterway along the Atlantic coast for the passage of large vessels and ships of war is being agitated, and the fact that such route would be of great advantage from a strategic standpoint in case of war, as well as of great importance from a commercial standpoint, and would permit safe water transportation south, avoiding the dangerous coast of Hatteras, which is of such a menace to commerce, causing high insurance for valuable cargoes, thereby increasing freight rates, etc.; and

Whereas upon the completion of the Panama Canal an inland waterway will be essentially necessary to afford quick transportation under all conditions of weather, and will be of great benefit especially to the farmers of the country in transporting their produce through this route, thence through the Panama Canal to the Far East to new and larger fields of trade: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to use their influence and vote for the passage of a bill embracing a liberal appropriation for an inland waterway along the Atlantic coast, and that before any route is finally selected through this State our Representatives in Congress are further directed to request the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of naval officers to ascertain, upon inspection, the best route in their opinion from a naval standpoint, taking into consideration all the advantages other than from an engineering standpoint, which is fully covered by the report of the Army engineers, and this report to be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy for its information and guidance in dealing with the question.

It is directed that the clerk of this house forward certified copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to each of Virginia's Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Agreed to by the general assembly of Virginia January 14, 1908.

JOHN W. WILLIAMS,
Clerk of House of Delegates and Keeper of Rolls of Virginia.

A bill (S. 4622) granting an increase of pension to Sidney F. Sanborn (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4623) granting an increase of pension to John H. Steward.

Mr. CURTIS introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4624) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Hanna;

A bill (S. 4625) granting a pension to Mary A Wampler;

A bill (S. 4626) granting an increase of pension to William Smith;

A bill (S. 4627) granting an increase of pension to Armstead Fletcher; and

A bill (S. 4628) granting an increase of pension to Richard H. Bartlett.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 4629) granting a pension to William Bieber, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4630) for the relief of Richard T. Gott, administrator of Thomas N. Gott, deceased;

A bill (S. 4631) for the relief of the rector, wardens, and vestry, St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Sharpsburg-Antietam parish, Washington County, Md. (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 4632) for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.

Mr. HEMENWAY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 43) directing the printing of 50,000 copies of Bulletin No. 333, issued by the United States Geological Survey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 44) construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows and minor children and dependent parents, and for other purposes," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,475.80 to reimburse Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum for expenditures for indigent patients sent to the hospital by the Board of Charities, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted an amendment providing for the placing of lights on the Hillsboro, Halifax, and Matanzas rivers, in Florida, their entrances or inlets, tributaries, and connecting canals, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,600,000 for the purchase of two steamships for the use of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be employed in the transportation of supplies, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAW.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF HACKENSACK RIVER, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. KEAN submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey and examination to be made of the Hackensack River, New Jersey, with a view to improving the navigability thereof, and providing a channel of 16-foot depth from Newark Bay to Little Ferry, and of 12-foot depth from Little Ferry to the Anderson Street Bridge in the town of Hackensack.

PENSIONS FOR MEMBERS OF LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, on motion of Mr. FRYE, referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my first annual message to the Fifty-ninth Congress I called attention to the desirability of legislation providing pensions for members of the Life-Saving Service when they become incapacitated for duty by reason of disability incurred in service. I said:

"I call your especial attention to the desirability of giving to the members of the Life-Saving Service pensions such as are given to firemen and policemen in all our great cities. The men in the Life-Saving Service continually and in the most matter-of-fact way do deeds such as make Americans proud of their country. They have no political influence; and they live in such remote places that the really heroic services they continually render receive the scantiest recognition from the public. It is unjust for a great nation like this to permit these men to become totally disabled or to meet death in the performance of their hazardous duty and yet to give them no sort of reward. If one of them serves thirty years of his life in such a position he surely should be entitled to retire on half pay, as a fireman or policeman does, and if he becomes totally incapacitated through accident or sickness or loses his health in the discharge of his duty he or his family should receive a pension just as any soldier should. I call your attention with especial earnestness to this matter, because it appeals not only to our judgment but to our sympathy, for the people on whose behalf I ask it are comparatively few in number, render incalculable service of a particularly dangerous kind, and have no one to speak for them."

The need for some appropriate legislation for the relief of this body of men has not become less; it has, on the contrary, increased and will steadily continue to grow until relief is granted. The determination of what course will best secure the desired end involves two important considerations. One has to do with the efficiency of the Service itself, and the other—which I think should appeal to the Congress with equal force—directly concerns the welfare of the members of the life-saving crews when disability incurred in the line of duty has impaired their usefulness.

The exigencies of the Life-Saving Service require the employment of the hardiest men it is possible to enlist in the station crews and at the same time forbid that considerations of humanity should influence their retention in the ranks when their bodily vigor has become impaired, however ill fitted they may be to secure a livelihood for themselves and their families.

During the last several years the members of the station crews have given up their places in large numbers to seek employment where the work is less exacting and hazardous, the compensation larger, and the prospect for the future brighter. The exodus of these men, in many instances after long service, has embarrassed the work of the life-saving establishment to a marked degree.

A few years ago, when the demand for labor was less than at present, the Service had the pick of the coast fishermen, a class who were especially expert in surfmanship. As the station crews have been depleted it has become necessary, under the changed industrial conditions, to take on men of less experience in the handling of boats and unused to the concerted action of the fishing gangs from which their predecessors were largely recruited. The once excellent teamwork of the life savers—so important where combined physical effort is required—has consequently deteriorated and the former standard can not be regained in the present circumstances. Of late it has been found practically impossible to secure material of any kind for recruiting the crews at many of the stations. For instance, the records show that at one station there is but a single regularly enlisted man, and at several but two. In one district only two out of eleven stations have full crews of regulars; in another but two out of seventeen, and in still another only six out of fourteen. In fact, nearly all the thirteen districts of the Service are seriously crippled in this respect, and the eligible lists from which the crews must be selected are wholly insufficient to fill the vacancies occurring. A list recently furnished by the Civil Service Commission shows for one district but six eligibles, and for another nine, in which there are, respectively, twenty-three and thirty vacancies to be filled.

The only thing the Service has been able to do in this situation is to pick up at random for temporary service men who are unemployed at a season of unprecedented demand for labor. The very fact that these men can be obtained by such inducements as the Service is at present able to hold out is sufficient proof of their unsuitability for a vocation requiring exceptional energy and courage.

That the Service has not yet been chargeable with serious loss of life in consequence of this state of affairs is due to fortunate chance, and also to the fact that the introduction of recent great improvements in life-saving appliances has afforded the means to accomplish rescues which formerly would have been impossible. But the indefinite continuance of good fortune can not be hoped for, and occasions may be expected to arise when even improved appliances will not redeem the deficiencies of the men who are charged with their operation.

No one will deny that the conditions set forth call loudly for correction. The remedy should be to establish such conditions as will attract and retain men of the highest qualifications and character, and also safeguard the future welfare of the veteran surfmen who have been and are still the bulwark of the Service.

The pay of a surfman (the technical designation applied to the rank and file) is now $65 a month while actually employed. The longest period of employment, except at a few stations on the Pacific coast, is ten months in the year and the shortest five months. On the Great Lakes they serve from the opening to the close of navigation—approximately eight months. The average amount paid is, therefore, somewhere near $600 a year, or $50 a month. The chance for a surfman to become a keeper or captain of a station crew and receive $900 per annum is about 1 in 7, and of being made a superintendent of a life-saving district about 1 in 162. Their pay is the only remuneration they receive. They have to find their rations, supply their uniforms, and even furnish the heavy oilskins which they are obliged to wear on patrol and at wrecks. Moreover, they are required to reside constantly at the stations during the period of the active season. This requirement, while necessary to the efficient conduct of life-saving operations, nevertheless works great hardship upon such of the men as have families, as they are in that case required to contribute to the support of two housekeeping establishments, namely, the station mess and that in their own homes, which latter they visit only at irregular and uncertain intervals.

Recently the Secretary of the Treasury took occasion to inquire into the circumstances of a number of individuals who within the last five years became separated from the Service on account of disability incurred in the line of duty. Information was secured in forty-one cases. There are of record numerous similar cases concerning which no data of the character set forth are at hand, but those cited are representative of their class and will serve for illustration.

It appears that of the forty-one instances twenty-six men were totally incapacitated for labor of any kind, six could perform about one-fourth of a man's work, and nine about one-half. Forty had dependent families, the number of dependents ranging from one to eight per family, with an average of three or four. The average amount of property owned was less than $400 for each man. Twenty-three were entirely destitute. One of the number owned property to the estimated value of $7,500, which was not acquired, however, in the Service. If the last-named amount, which represents an exceptional instance, be deducted from the total value of the property held by all, the average for each of the forty persons remaining is a little less than $200. The twenty-three destitute surfmen and their families are of course objects of charity.

It should be borne in mind that the data above given are incomplete and confined to a period of but five years, and that there are many other former employees of the Service still living who at the present time are undoubtedly in absolute penury. Our treatment of these men is gravely discreditable to us as a nation.

The situation calls for immediate action, and I earnestly urge some adequate form of relief for a body of men who have saved thousands of lives, often under circumstances of extreme peril, and millions of dollars' worth of property at a comparatively insignificant cost; whose valor has never been surpassed upon the field of battle; whose achievements have won world-wide recognition, and who are deserving of the nation's gratitude and protection.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 28, 1908.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 558. An act to extend to the port of Chattanooga, Tenn., the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. R. 14040. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at a point above Morrell, in said county and State, the dividing line between Drew and Ashley counties.

H. R. 14282. An act to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed, and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1424) to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army, was announced as first in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In view of the fact that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is not here, I suggest that the bill go over.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Indiana if he himself objects to the bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wyoming, I know, is very anxious to have the bill passed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I suppose, as a matter of course, as he is in charge of the bill, that he will be present when it is considered.

Mr. LODGE. He is in charge of the bill, but he told me that if he was not here when it was reached he hoped the consideration might go on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well, if there is some one here to take charge of the bill. I did not see the Senator from Wyoming present, and I did not see any use in taking the time of the Senate if the Senator from Wyoming was not going to be here and the bill could not be considered; that is all.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN entered the Chamber.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEA FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 514) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea," approved March 2, 1897, was read.

Mr. LODGE. When this bill was up before I asked to have it go over in order that I might get information in regard to it. I have communicated with the Department of Agriculture and asked for information in regard to the operation or the probable operation of the bill. I have heard nothing as yet from the officers of the Department charged with the administration of the pure-food act, who promised to inform me in regard to it. I should be glad if the bill could go over until I can get that information.

I have no objection whatever to the bill if it can be enforced and if it does not lead to the manufacture of deleterious substances for medicine. It seems to me there would be great difficulty in discovering where the tea siftings and tea waste would go. I should be glad if the Senator from Missouri would let the bill go over until I can get the reply.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he has taken occasion to examine the matter I placed in the RECORD on Wednesday last?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. The Senator was kind enough to send it to me and I examined it. It seems to make a very clear case in regard to the bill, but——

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator's feelings in regard to the bill, and I have no objection to its going over in order to give him sufficient time to get the information desired, but I should like to suggest——

Mr. LODGE. I assure the Senator I shall make no factious opposition to the bill. I have no interest in it in the world except as to the pure-food act.

Mr. STONE. I should like to say to the Senator, in answer to his suggestion that he would like to know what drugs might be made of these importations, I think it would go almost without saying that any drug made from tea siftings would be made of wholesome tea brought in for the purposes of food, and if tea siftings could be used for any wrong purpose in the manufacture of drugs so could wholesome tea, the only difference being that the tea siftings serve the purpose of making the drugs mentioned in the bill just as well as the pure tea, and can be had for much less cost.

Mr. LODGE. I understand, of course, the main purpose of the bill, but it seems to me there must be great difficulty in determining what becomes of these articles after being imported, no matter how the importation is conditioned.

Mr. STONE. As the bill will go over, it is hardly worth while to enter upon that discussion now.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. STONE. The bill will go over for the present.

Mr. LODGE. I assure the Senator that as soon as I get the information I have asked for I shall let him know, and I will make no further opposition to the measure.

Mr. STONE. That is satisfactory. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LODGE. Without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was passed. It was passed yesterday while I had temporarily stepped out of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. BURKETT subsequently said: I understand that Senate bill 819 has been sent to the other House. I therefore move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] desires to be present when the bill is considered, and I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1643) for the relief of Englehart & Cease was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the bill may go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill (S. 114) for the relief of Rathbun, Beachy & Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the bill may go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill (S. 2268) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to fulfill certain treaty stipulations with the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and making appropriations for the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLAPP. That bill can go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest that it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. CLAPP. That course is perfectly agreeable to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The bill (S. 2227) for the relief of Mary C. Mayers was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to look up some precedents in the line of the bill, and I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

POPE & TALBOT.

The bill (S. 1256) for the relief of Pope & Talbot, of San Francisco, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Pope & Talbot, of San Francisco, Cal., $3,179.20 in full for damages to their schooner Spokane, injured by the United States revenue cutter Bear off the port of San Francisco, Cal., on the 4th day of June, 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OVERTIME CLAIMS OF LETTER CARRIERS.

The bill (S. 2802) to provide for the payment of overtime claims of letter carries, excluded from judgment as barred by limitation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the several parties named in Senate Document No. 216, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and Senate Document No. 158, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, or their legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts set opposite each of their names, respectively, aggregating $282,943.88, representing services actually performed by them as letter carriers in excess of eight hours per day, and reported by the commissioners of the Court of Claims as being the amounts due them under the provisions of the act of May 24, 1888, entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter carriers in cities shall be employed per day," but which have been excluded or excepted from judgment for the sole reason that the same were barred by the statute of limitations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN IDAHO AND WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 135) for the ascertainment, survey, marking, and permanent establishment of the boundary line between the State of Idaho and the State of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the ascertainment, survey, marking, and permanent establishment of that portion of the boundary line between the State of Idaho and the State of Washington from a point in the center of the Snake River opposite the mouth of the Clearwater River, thence due north to the international boundary line between the United States and the British possessions, an estimated distance of 185 miles, including the expense of an examination of the survey in the field, the rate of compensation per mile to the surveyor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to include the cost of the preparation of the plats and field notes of the survey in triplicate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASING OF LAND BY INDIAN ALLOTTEES.

The bill (S. 1773) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes,'" was read.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Utah.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER BRIDGE AT JONES OLD FERRY, ALABAMA.

The bill (H. R. 9210) to authorize the court of county commissioners of Geneva County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River at or near the Jones Old Ferry, in Geneva County, Ala., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEADERS.

The bill (S. 134) granting leaves of absence to homesteaders on lands to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. As I do not see the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who reported that bill, in the Chamber I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HEYBURN subsequently said: Mr. President, during my temporary absence from the Chamber Senate bill 134 was passed over. I ask unanimous consent to recur to that bill and that it may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 3, after the word "heretofore," to strike out "or shall hereafter make" and insert "made;" in line 7, after the word "showing," to insert "that they have made substantial improvements, and;" in line 11, after the word "canals," to strike out "on" and insert "from which;" and in the same line, after the word "land," to insert the word "is," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all qualified entrymen who have heretofore made bona fide entry upon lands proposed to be irrigated under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, known as the national irrigation act, may, upon application and a showing that they have made substantial improvements, and that water is not available for the irrigation of their said lands, obtain leave of absence from their entries, until water for irrigation is turned into the main irrigation canals from which the land is to be irrigated: Provided, That the period of actual absence under this act shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALISBURY, N. C.

The bill (S. 3835) increasing the limit of cost for a public building at Salisbury, N. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "post-office," to insert "United States court," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as a limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for the accommodation of the United States post-office, United States court, and other Government offices in the city of Salisbury, in the State of North Carolina, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $75,000 to $125,000, which sum is hereby fixed as a limit of cost for the erection of said building, including the cost of site therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 33) adjusting the status of certain officers of the Army as to their period of service required by the act of Congress approved June 30, 1882, to entitle an Army officer to retirement on his own application, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the period of service entitling an Army officer to retirement on his own application, as required by act of Congress approved June 30, 1882, shall include all service rendered by such officers as cadets at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., or subsequent to graduation therefrom, or to service as commissioned officers of the Navy, or to both.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY OFFICERS RETIRED WITH INCREASED RANK.

The bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the Army retired with increased rank was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that officers of the Army on the retired list whose rank has been, or shall hereafter be, advanced by operation of or in accordance with law shall be entitled to and shall receive commissions in accordance with such advanced rank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS DAHUFF.

The bill (S. 428) granting an honorable discharge to Amos Dahuff, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant an honorable discharge to Amos Dahuff as captain of Company H, Twelfth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, on February 19, 1865, but no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVENUE CUTTER AT KEY WEST, FLA.

The bill (S. 3345) to provide for the construction of a revenue cutter of the first class for service in the waters of Key West, Fla., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "175,000" and insert "250,000," so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a steam revenue cutter of the first class for service in the waters of Key West, Fla., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS RIVER DAM.

The bill (S. 3438) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam or dams across the Kansas River within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, line 7, after the word "at," to strike out "any" and insert "a;" and in line 8, after the word "Kansas," to insert "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable water,' approved June 21, 1906," so as to make the section read:

That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Kansas Power Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of Kansas, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, and maintain a dam or dams across the Kansas River at a suitable place or places within Shawnee County, in the State of Kansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER, ARKANSAS, BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 12439) authorizing the construction of a bridge across White River, Arkansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF LANDS FOR CALIFORNIA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 517) authorizing the purchase of lands for California Indians was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

HOOPA VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION, CAL.

The bill (S. 518) to make an appropriation for the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report on that bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SUTHERLAND January 23, 1908, as follows:

The subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 518) to make an appropriation for the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation in California, report the said bill favorably, and as showing the necessity for this appropriation submit copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, November 16, 1907.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your oral request, I send you herewith draft of a bill to appropriate the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of constructing a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Reservation in California.

It is the policy of this Department to withdraw its control and guardianship of individual Indians and Indian tribes as soon as it becomes apparent that they are possessed of the means and ability to take care of themselves.

The Indians of the Hoopa Valley Reservation in California have shown a disposition to work and earn their own livelihood, and I believe that the time is at hand when they can be given fee-simple title to their individual allotments, suitable disposal made of their surplus lands, and the support of the Government withdrawn.

When this is done the Indians will need every possible advantage that can be given them in order to maintain themselves among the surrounding white population.

Facility of transportation is of the greatest importance in a mountainous country and determines largely the prosperity of its inhabitants. The valley which comprises most of the agricultural lands of these Indians is now reached only by a wagon road 44 miles long from Korbel, the nearest shipping point, and by a mail trail which joins the wagon road at Redwood Creek, the combined distance by road and trail being 32 miles.

Owing to the circuitous route of the wagon road, steep grades, abrupt turns, and northern exposures, freight rates are high and the uncertainties of winter travel compel the trader in the valley to maintain an expensive pack train for transporting supplies, thus making it possible for one person to control practically all the trade of the valley.

Under existing conditions fruit raising, the purpose to which the valley is best adapted, can not be carried on with profit and other products are denied a place on the market.

With a good wagon road built on lighter grades and with southern exposures, so that it can be kept open all the year, freight rates and attendant risk and uncertainty would be reduced to a minimum, the present unsatisfactory trade conditions would soon regulate themselves through natural competition, and the Indians be enabled to market their surplus proudcts.

They are fully alive to the benefits which a better road will bring them and have volunteered to contribute 600 or more days' labor, in the aggregate, without pay.

It will be necessary to furnish them with blasting and other materials, tools, subsistence for themselves and horses, etc.

It is also likely that more labor will be required than they can contribute under their offer.

Superintendent Kyselka has submitted an estimate of the cost of these items, amounting to $7,800. This, however, does not include the cost of transportation or of a resurvey of the line, which may be required.

The length of the road which it is purposed to construct within the reservation is 9.12 miles. If this is done, it is anticipated that the county authorities will finish it to Redwood Creek.

I believe that the 9.12 miles can be constructed at a maximum cost of $10,000. I shall be pleased to have this legislation enacted.

Very respectfully,

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

Hon. FRANK P. FLINT,
United States Senate.

P. S.—I may add that from the local newspapers and from personal letters I have received I learn that the authorities of Humboldt County are heartily alive to the wisdom of this project, and are ready to build a public road from the reservation line to Redwood Creek, thus making the connection of the valley with the market for its products complete.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE MINING OPERATIONS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 18) appointing a commission to investigate the recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I have understood that the Government of the United States is making an investigation of the causes of explosions in mines, and so on, and I think we ought to await some report from whatever body is making these investigations instead of embarking upon this large expenditure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senator will withhold any objection until the amendments to the joint resolution can be stated, so that the record will be complete.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to have the amendments stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after the words "consisting of," to strike out "three" and insert "six;" in line 5, before the word "Members," to strike out "three" and insert "six;" in line 8, after the words "into the," to insert "methods of operation and into the;" in line 9, after the word "recent," to strike out "explosions" and insert "accidents;" in the same line, after the word "coal," to insert "and other;" and in line 12, after the words "authorized to," to insert "appoint subcommittees with full power to," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created, consisting of six Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and six Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Said commission shall make full inquiry, examination, and investigation into the methods of operation and into the recent accidents in coal and other mines in the States of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Alabama, and other States. For the purpose of said inquiry, examination, and investigation said commission is authorized to appoint subcommittees with full power to send for persons and papers, make all necessary travel, and through the chairman of the commission or any member thereof to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and papers respecting all matters pertaining to the subject, and to employ necessary clerical and other assistance. Said commission shall report to the Congress the conclusions reached by it and make such recommendations as in its judgment may seem proper. Such sums of money as may be necessary for the said inquiring, examination, and investigation are hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid, out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I think there ought to be some limitation on the expenditure. The appropriation is entirely unlimited.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit me, I desire to offer some amendments.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In lines 7 and 8, on page 1, the commission is directed to make "full inquiry, examination, and investigation." I think the word "investigation" covers "inquiry" and "examination," and I move to strike out the words "inquiry, examination and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 11 I move the same amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, page 1, it is proposed to strike out "inquiry, examination, and," so as to read:

For the purpose of said investigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 8, on page 2, I move to strike out "inquiring, examination, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all.

Mr. KEAN. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 2, line 11, after the word "appropriated" I move to insert "not to exceed $10,000."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have no objection to a limitation being placed upon the amount, but I think the Senator from New Jersey ought to leave to the commission some discretion. If the commission is going to employ experts in the way of mining engineers and to use employees of the Geological Survey, it may have to send them to different mines to make investigation, and the expense may be greater than $10,000. Of course the commission will not expend any more than is necessary, whether the appropriation is limited or not.

Mr. KEAN. I have no desire whatever to hamper the investigation, but I think it is very unusual for Congress to pass a law without a limitation on the appropriation for a commission.

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that he make it $15,000.

Mr. KEAN. I am willing to increase the amount to $15,000, at the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia. The purpose is merely to have a limitation. If this sum is not sufficient, I have no doubt that Congress will be glad to give more money. But I think a limitation ought to be put on. I modify my amendment to that extent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 11, after the word "appropriated" it is proposed to insert "not to exceed $15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported an amendment to the title so as to make it read "joint resolution appointing a commission to investigate methods of operation and recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States."

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment. As proposed to be amended the title reads: "Joint resolution appointing a commission to investigate methods of operation and recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States;" that is, to investigate methods of operation in certain States of the United States. I move to amend it by adding after the word "operation" the words "of coal and other mines."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The title as amended was agreed to.

INDIANS ON FORT BELKNAP RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 3084) providing for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, and animals for the Indians on Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, to enable said Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over for the present, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CARTER. What was the order with reference to the bill, the title of which has just been read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asked that the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do that, Mr. President, for the purpose of looking into this matter a little. A moment ago I asked that a somewhat similar bill should go over.

I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, however, whether, in his judgment, it ought to be the policy of the Government to appropriate money and grant lands to all the destitute Indians of the country? There are a great many destitute white men in the country who, I think, are equally as deserving and who, if public money is to be appropriated, ought at least to share in the appropriation. Perhaps the Senator from Montana can explain why we should make these appropriations for destitute Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am glad to make the explanation suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Senator will recall that not many years ago we were required by the necessities of the case to appropriate for the maintenance of nearly every Indian tribe on the continent. The policy of late years, both in Congress and in the Executive Departments, has been to place these various tribes as rapidly as possible upon a self-sustaining basis. Contracts have been made by the Department for and on behalf of these particular Indians, looking to the erection of a beet-sugar factory near by these lands. During the last Congress we authorized the lease of 20,000 acres of land for the purpose of enabling parties to proceed to the cultivation of sugar beets in this vicinity. The Department concluded that it would be better for the Indians themselves to hold the lands. But in order to prepare for the cultivation of beets, the Indians must be provided with some agricultural implements. The Indians have no credit on their own account. They have no place to go to borrow money except the Public Treasury. This bill does not make a grant of money to the Indians, but merely an advance, and it provides for the repayment of the sums under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Department.

This bill will undoubtedly result in making these Indians self-sustaining by giving them a loan for the time. I think the bill is very meritorious; it has been approved by the Department; and failure to pass it will result in setting the Indians back.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he is rash enough to believe that this money will ever be repaid to the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CARTER. On this identical reservation the present management secures repayments for the wagons which have been disposed of to the Indians from time to time by the Department. The Indians on the reservation are disposed to pay their debts and have been in the habit of doing so. A departure was made on this reservation, I understand, in that the present policy is to charge to the Indians any implements that may be issued to them, and in due time the Indians pay their bills. I have no doubt whatever they will repay this sum of money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the statement made by the Senator from Montana is absolutely correct. In our State a sugar factory is now located in a section where Indians live, and we find in our State that the Indian is about as good a farmer for the raising of the sugar beet as any individual we have in the State. He has made a success of it. He is self-supporting, and it has been the means of bringing wealth even to a great many of them living in that section of our State.

I believe that these Indians in Montana, if they have a chance to raise beets for the factory that is to be established, will make a success of it and be able to repay all advances made for machinery, and as it is under the direction of the Indian Bureau, I have no doubt in the world that the money will be returned to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having very great doubt on that point, I ask that the bill go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

ADOLPHUS N. PACETTY.

The bill (S. 1758) granting a pension to Adolphus N. Pacetty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Adolphus N. Pacetty, late captain Pacetty's boat company, Florida Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

ELIZABETH SWEAT.

The bill (S. 1408) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Sweat was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "company," to insert "independent;" in line 8, before the word "and," to insert "Seminole Indian war;" and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Sweat, widow of James A. Sweat, late of Capt. E. T. Kendrick's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA STEWART.

The bill (S. 1403) granting an increase of pension to Martha Stewart was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, after the word "Regiment," to strike out "of" and insert "East;" in line 8, before the word "and," to insert "Seminole Indian war," and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha Stewart, widow of Daniel Stewart, late of Captain Niblack's company, Second Regiment East Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY MOTES.

The bill (S. 1423) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Motes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Motes, widow of Lewis Motes, late of Captain Thigpin's company, Second Regiment Florida Mounted Volunteers, Florida Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

James A. Hunter's company, Utah Volunteers, Utah Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOROTHEA AND PAUL DANA CLENDENIN.

The bill (S. 392) to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, deceased, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that homestead entry No. 24024, made July 15, 1903, at Minot, now Williston, N. Dak., land district by Clement A. Lounsberry, guardian of the person and estate of Dorothea Clendenin, under section 2307 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, northeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 14, and southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter section 11, township 152 north, range 104 west, fifth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, be, and is hereby, confirmed; and upon satisfactory proof of compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to cultivation and improvements the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to issue patent for the said described land in favor of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title be amended by striking out the word "deceased." These are "minor orphan children;" doubtless the father is dead.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the report in connection with the bill be published in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The report, submitted by Mr. NELSON on the 23d instant, is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 392) to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, deceased, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that the same do pass.

The measure was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and his report thereon, which is printed herewith, shows that there is no objection to the legislation.

Your committee, therefore, unanimously recommend the enactment of the bill into law.

The letter of the Secretary is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 14, 1908.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, from the clerk of your committee, of Senate bill 392, with the request that the Department submit its views thereon. The bill is entitled "A bill to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, deceased, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers," and provides:

"That homestead entry No. 24024, made July 15, 1903, at Minot, now Williston, N. Dak., land district by Clement A. Lounsberry, guardian of the person and estate of Dorothea Clendenin, under section 2307 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, northeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 14, and southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter section 11, township 152 north, range 104 west, fifth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, be, and is hereby, confirmed; and upon satisfactory proof of compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to cultivation and improvements, the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to issue patent for the said described land in favor of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon-major, United States Volunteers."

The homestead entry No. 24024, Minot series, was made on July 15, 1903, by Clement A. Lounsberry, then and now an employee of the General Land Office, as guardian of Dorothea Clendenin, for the NW. ¼ NE. ¼, NE. ¼ NW. ¼ sec. 14; SE. ¼ SW. ¼, SW. ¼ SE. ¼ sec. 11, T. 152 N., R. 104 W., fifth principal meridian.

It appears that Dorothea Clendenin was a minor child of Maj. Paul Clendenin, a surgeon of the United States Army, and was born November 19, 1889; that her mother died in 1894, and the father remarried, and by such marriage Paul Dana Clendenin was born August 19, 1899; that Maj. Paul Clendenin died in Cuba July 4, 1899, and that his widow married Capt. Basil Taylor, an officer of the British Army, at Hongkong, China, June 17, 1903; that the child Paul Dana Clendenin is now residing with his mother in China under her guardianship as a British subject; that said Lounsberry was appointed guardian of Dorothea Clendenin on January 2, 1900, and in July, 1900, made settlement on the land described for the benefit of said Dorothea Clendenin, and annually since then the land has been cultivated and improved, and that actual residence was established in a house built on the land in the early part of July, 1904.

Section 452, United States Revised Statutes, prohibits persons employed in the Land Department from directly or indirectly purchasing or becoming interested in the purchase of public lands, but if the bill is enacted into law it will remove any question that might be raised respecting the right of Mr. Lounsberry to make the entry.

As Maj. Paul Clendenin was engaged in the war with Spain from the commencement thereof until his death, July 4, 1899, credit for military service may be given for the term of enlistment, not to exceed four years, but residence and cultivation for at least one year is required by section 2307, Revised Statutes. The marriage of the widow of Maj. Paul Clendenin to a British subject, and her removal to a foreign country, taking with her the minor child of Maj. Paul Clendenin, deceased, who was born a citizen of the United States, does not deprive such minor child of his citizenship, nor remove him from the protection of this country. Therefore, the entry should have been made in the interest of both minor children of Maj. Paul Clendenin, and when final proof is submitted in connection with said entry the final receipt and certificate, if issued, should issue to both of said children. Attention is called to the fact that this bill directs the issuance of patent upon satisfactory proof of "cultivation and improvements," but does not provide that residence shall be shown as required by the homestead laws.

Prior to the time this entry was made, July 15, 1903, persons who made entry as widows or heirs of soldiers were only required by the rules of this Department to maintain cultivation and improvements and were not compelled to reside upon the lands covered by their entry, but subsequent to that date this rule was modified, and under the departmental decision in the case of Anna Bowes (32 Land Decisions, 331), rendered on December 7, 1903, all persons then holding entries of this character were notified that actual residence must be established within six months from the issuance of the notice and thereafter maintained as required in the case of other homestead entrymen, and since that decision no patents have been issued in cases where the required residence was not shown by the final proof.

Aside from these suggestions, this Department knows of no reason why this bill should not become a law.

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

The COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS,
United States Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

POSTAGE ON CREDIT NEWSPAPER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Mr. STONE. I ask the leave of the Senate to have printed as a document the papers I hold in my hand. The first is a letter from the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. It relates to recent rulings of the Department as to postage to be paid on newspaper subscriptions that have expired, or credit subscriptions. He has sent some data with the letter.

I do not know how it is with other Senators, but I am receiving a great many letters from publishers in my State for information concerning this ruling. It is very concisely and well stated by the Department in these papers, but it requires a very long letter to make an explanation to correspondents in regard to it. Therefore I thought it would be well to ask the Senate to have it printed in pamphlet form so that it could be distributed. I ask that 1,000 copies of it may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a thousand copies of the letter from the Post-Office Department submitted by him, with the accompanying data, be printed for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TIMBER ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN WISCONSIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 4046) to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on certain lands reserved for Indian reservations in the State of Wisconsin was announced as next in order, and was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments in section 2, on page 2, line 10, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert "in so far as practicable;" and, in line 11, after the word "times," to strike out the words "employ Indians, and in so far as possible shall;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as practicable, cause to be built, equipped, and operated suitable sawmills for manufacturing into lumber the timber cut under the provisions of this act, and there shall be employed such skilled foresters, superintendents, foremen, cruisers, rangers, guards, loggers, scalers, and such other labor, both in the woods and for operating sawmills, as may be necessary in cutting and manufacturing logs and lumber and in the protection of the forests upon such Indian reservations. The Secretary of the Interior, in so far as practicable, shall at all times employ none but Indians upon said reservations in forest protection, logging, driving, sawing, and manufacturing into lumber for the market such timber, and no contract for logging, driving, sawing timber, or conducting any lumber operations upon said reservations shall hereafter be let, sublet, or assigned to white men, nor shall any timber upon any such reservations be disposed of except under the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report on this bill is exceedingly interesting as I have glanced at it. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report, submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE on the 23d instant, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 110, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4046) to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on certain lands reserved for Indian reservations in the State of Wisconsin, have had the same under consideration and report it with an amendment, and when so amended recommend that it do pass.

The avowed object of all legislation pertaining to Indian affairs for the past half century has been to prepare and qualify the Indian for citizenship and the management of his own business. Because of his incapacity to manage his own property the Government has treated the Indian as a ward and has maintained guardianship over him. In some instances it has followed the plan of permitting the Indian tribes to hold the land included in the Indian reservations in common; in others it has allotted the lands in severalty to the individual members of the tribe. In the latter case restrictions as to alienation have been imposed, these restrictions not to be removed until it is made to appear that the Indian is capable of handling his own affairs. It is unfortunately too often the fact that the Government's officers charged with the duty of determining the capability of the Indian have acted upon false or misleading information. The work of preparing the Indian for the responsibility of providing for himself according to the ways of the white man in most instances has only resulted in making him more incompetent. He has been an idle spectator while others have managed his affairs. The tendency has been to weaken, not to strengthen, him. The result is, in a majority of cases, that the responsibility of caring for himself is thrust upon him when he is in no way prepared to meet it. He loses his property and becomes a charge upon the community.

The aim of the proposed legislation is to give to Indians on reservations in Wisconsin practical instruction and experience in the management of their own business and thus to prepare them against the time when their lands shall be allotted, their restrictions entirely removed, and they be compelled to assume the complete management of their own affairs. While this proposed legislation in no manner departs from the avowed purpose of all Indian legislation, yet the method herein provided for the accomplishment of the purpose is a departure from that now employed.

There still remain upon the Indian reservations of Wisconsin some fine bodies of timber. In fact the only considerable stand of white pine still remaining are those upon the lands of the Indians. The timber upon the reservation of the Menominee Indians is the finest in the State. In addition to the pine, there are also large quantities of hard wood. The value of this timber is constantly increasing. The rapid disappearance of our forests increases the desire of the lumber and mill men to secure the timber from the lands of the Indians. In 1890 Congress authorized these Indians, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, to cut and sell not to exceed 20,000,000 feet of this timber in any one year. This law provided that the timber should be logged under the contract system. Under it contracts were let to Indians and to white men. Because of the anxiety of the contractors to take out as much timber as was permitted under the law, white labor as well as Indian labor was employed in the logging operations. The Indian funds were used to finance these operations. The net proceeds of the sale of the timber were credited to the Indian funds. The Indian received some financial benefit, but the system does nothing to educate him in the practical work of manufacturing the timber into lumber nor in the preservation and perpetuation of the forest.

Under the contract system there has been a constant breaking down of the character of the Indian, a lowering of his standards. This system has brought upon the reservations white loggers. This has been done in opposition to the desires of the Indians. In many cases they have protested against the system, pointing out that it inevitably resulted in the introduction of intoxicating liquors upon the reservation, the demoralizing of the men, and the debauching of the women. A system which does these things should not be continued. It has not only resulted in his moral degradation, but the contract system also tends to prevent the development of the Indian as an industrial factor. The forests are cut away under conditions which make for a reckless destruction and do not in any way teach them to properly conserve their resources.

The proposed legislation will change the method of handling the Indians' affairs by abolishing the contract system, by placing the care of the forests and the harvest of the forests' crop ultimately in the hands of the Indians upon these reservations. The forest is the natural home of these men. They are what is known as "timber Indians." Their every instinct teaches them to seek a livelihood from within the forest. The care, the preservation, of these forests should be the Indian's interest and his work. What the white man has in other places destroyed the Indian should be taught here to preserve. This does not mean that the forest shall be permitted to remain in its wild state and contribute nothing to the industrial life of the community and add nothing of economic value to our country. It does mean that the harvest of the crop of forest products should be made in such a way that the forest will perpetuate itself; that it shall remain as a rich heritage to these people from which, through their own labor, they may derive their own support, and that, too, without ruthless destruction. Under the bill as proposed the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ all of the assistance needed to properly educate the Indians in the care of the forest and in the manufacture of forest products. It provides that the Indians are to do the logging; that they shall make roads, improve the streams, build sawmills, manufacture the timber into lumber, and that the lumber is to be sold upon the market. In a word, it provides that these Indians shall be made a factor in our industrial life. In this way they will become self-reliant, learn to know the value of their heritage, and master the best methods for its preservation.

The Fifty-ninth Congress enacted a law authorizing the Indians of the Menominee Reservation to log the dead and down timber upon that reservation. Under the rules and regulations adopted for the administration of that law contracts were let to individual Indians to log certain portions of this timber. The Indians sublet the contracts to white men, and white men and Indians are now at work clearing the dead and down timber. It was not the intent of the law passed at that time that the contract system should be continued, and it is unfortunate that contracts were awarded under the act. While it is to be regretted that the Indians called in any white men to aid them, it is also true that in the logging of this dead and down timber and in the logging operations conducted under the act of 1890 these Indians have demonstrated that they are capable of logging. If they are given the aid, counsel, and encouragement provided for in the proposed legislation, and if the proposed legislation at all times be executed with intelligence and fidelity, the result will be not only to develop the Indian upon his industrial and moral side, but also to increase the financial returns. It has been urged against the change from the contract system to one which will permit the Indians to handle their own affairs that it will result in the loss of some valuable timber. Your committee do not consider this a valid objection. It may be true that there will be some loss, but what will be lost in this way at the outset will be offset in the benefits which will accrue to the character of the individual Indian and to the uplift of the tribe as a whole, both industrially and morally.

The proposed bill has been submitted to the Department of the Interior and meets with the approval of the Secretary. His letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. LA FOLLETTE: I have your letter of January 16, with the inclosed Senate bill No. 4046, the purpose of which is to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on certain lands reserved for Indian reservations in the State of Wisconsin.

I have but two minor verbal suggestions to make. On page 2, line 7, after the word "Interior," insert "in so far as practicable;" line 8, strike out the words "employ Indians and in so far as possible shall." As you will see, the purpose of these changes is to avoid the difficulty that might arise should it be impossible to obtain the full quota of Indian employees at any particular time or place.

I have conferred with Mr. Leupp, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, very fully on this particular bill and the general subject of the use of timber lands belonging to the Indians. It is our purpose to have these logging and timber operations conducted either directly under the Forest Service or under such a system of cooperation as to give to the Indians the benefit of the experience which the Forest Service has gained from its administration of the national forests, and we believe that this bill will be a step in that direction.

As to the general purpose of the bill, I appreciate that it changes the system that has been in operation for a number of years on the Menominee Reservation, but, being advised by the Forest Service that under this bill a very much better method for the cutting and preservation of timber can be carried out, which will in the end yield a larger return to the Indians as well as continue the growth of the forests, I believe that the change should be made.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate.

If this legislation be adopted it will certainly give to these Indians a business experience which should, if they are ever allotted, render them capable of protecting themselves against fraud and prevent, in Wisconsin, a repetition of the conditions now existing in Oklahoma which have forced many Indians to find homes upon the section lines while others seek safety in a foreign country.

The amendment proposed by the committee meets the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, and is as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 7, page 2, after the word "Interior," the words "in so far as practicable" and by striking out the words "employ Indians, and in so far as possible shall" where they occur in line 8, page 2.

AGNES LANGE SMITH.

The bill (S. 712) granting a pension to Agnes Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Agnes Lange Smith, widow of Lewis Smith, late major, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and lieutenant-colonel, Artillery Corps, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Agnes Lange Smith."

CALESTA CLARK.

The bill (S. 406) granting a pension to Celesta Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of," where it occurs the first time, to strike out the name "Celesta" and insert "Calesta," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Calesta Clark, widow of Joseph Clark, late of Company G, Twenty-fifth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Calesta Clark."

MARGARET K. HERN.

The bill (S. 2420) granting an increase of pension to Margaret K. Hern was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, before the name "Hern," to strike out the letter "A." and insert "W.," and in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "sixteen," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret K. Hern, widow of David W. Hern, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. SANDS.

The bill (S. 1171) granting a pension to Mary A. Sands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary A. Sands, helpless and dependent child of Edward D. Sands, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA A. KENNY.

The bill (S. 920) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Kenny was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Martha A. Kenny, widow of Nicholas D. Kenny, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving:

Provided, That in the event of the death of Ellen Louise Kenny, helpless and dependent child of said Nicholas D. Kenny, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death or remarriage of Martha A. Kenny the name of said Ellen Louise Kenny shall be placed on the pension roll at $12 per month from and after the date of the death or remarriage of said Martha A. Kenny.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN PERSONS.

The bill (S. 4376) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension the persons named at the rate per month stated, as follows:

Walter S. Sylvester, late of Company F, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $24.

Alvin S. Doughty, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, $24.

The beneficiary named in this provision has died.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT DEPOSITARIES.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. STONE, on the 23d instant, authorizing and directing the Finance Committee to make inquiry and report as to the distribution of moneys of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice.

ARMY DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4432) to reorganize the corps of dental surgeons attached to the Medical Department of the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it would appear that the report on this bill is not yet printed. This is rather an important measure. It creates a new department or branch of the——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2982.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

CHAPTER ELEVEN.

OFFENSES WITHIN THE ADMIRALTY AND MARITIME AND THE TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sec.
269. Places within or waters upon which sections of this chapter shall apply.
270. Murder.
271. Manslaughter.
272. Punishment for murder; for manslaughter.
273. Assault with intent to commit murder, rape, robbery, etc.
274. Attempt to commit murder or manslaughter.
275. Rape.
276. Having carnal knowledge of female under 16.
277. Seduction of female passenger on vessel.
278. Payment of fine to female seduced; evidence required; limitation on indictment.
279. Loss of life by misconduct of officers, etc., of vessels.
280. Maiming.
281. Robbery.
282. Arson of dwelling house.
283. Arson of other buildings, etc.
284. Larceny.
285. Receiving, etc., stolen goods.
286. Laws of States adopted for punishing wrongful acts, etc.

SEC. 269. [The crimes and offenses defined in this chapter shall be punished as herein prescribed:

First. When committed upon the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, or when committed within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States or any citizen thereof or to any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or District thereof.

Second. When committed upon any vessel registered, licensed, or enrolled under the laws of the United States, and being on a voyage upon the waters of any of the Great Lakes, namely: Lake Superior, Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, or any of the waters connecting any of said lakes, or upon the River St. Lawrence where the same constitutes the international boundary line.

Third. When committed within or on any lands reserved or acquired for the exclusive use of the United States, and under the exclusive jurisdiction thereof, or any place purchased or otherwise acquired by the United States by consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building.

Fourth. On any island, rock, or key, containing deposits of guano, which may, at the discretion of the President, be considered as appertaining to the United States.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I think this section ought not to be passed without some explanation. First, I will move to strike out the comma in line 11, after the word "State." It is evidently an inadvertence in printing the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, page 142, after the words "particular State," strike out the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. While the first and last paragraphs of this section come within the rule of being new legislation, the whole section is not new legislation. Therefore, we will not pass it over under the general understanding.

The existing law in regard to this subject is somewhat confused and has given the courts a good bit of trouble. The second paragraph especially was framed to meet the conditions that have arisen in the navigation of the Great Lakes and the rivers connecting them, where vessels weave back and forth, first on one side of the line and then on the other, and the question of jurisdiction for the commission of offenses has been rendered uncertain because it was not always possible to determine on which side of the international line a vessel was at the particular time when the offense was committed.

The committee have taken into consideration all the decisions and all the litigation had in regard to this question, and as a result of its thorough consideration have presented this section.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 270. [Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought. Every murder perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing; or committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, any arson, rape, burglary, or robbery; or perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than him who is killed, is murder in the first degree. Any other murder is murder in the second degree.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Pursuant to the notice I gave that sections of this kind would be specially called to the attention of the Senate, I would say that this section 270 enlarges the common-law definition and is similar in terms to the statutes defining murder in a large majority of the States. I think it might be said that it is in harmony with the law in all the States.

The reading of the bill was continued, as follows:

SEC. 271. Manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. It is of two kinds:

First. Voluntary—Upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion.

Second. Involuntary—In the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection.

SEC. 272. Every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death. Every person guilty of murder in the second degree shall be imprisoned not less than ten years and may be imprisoned for life. Every person guilty of voluntary manslaughter shall be imprisoned not more than ten years. Every person guilty of involuntary manslaughter shall be imprisoned not more than three years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it is proper that a word be said with reference to the two sections which have last been read, section 271 and section 272.

Section 271 undertakes to divide manslaughter into two degrees or kinds, namely, voluntary and involuntary manslaughter. Under the existing statute simply the crime of manslaughter as at common law is provided for. The division into degrees is in accordance with modern legislation, and in accordance with the legislation in, I think, practically all the States of the Union. Section 272 simply recognizes these various divisions of murder and manslaughter into degrees and provides appropriate punishment for each.

Mr. BACON. I notice that in the penalty the committee has proposed a change to the extent that they do away with fine as a punishment and limit it to imprisonment. If I read correctly the old law, section 1543, it made the convict not only subject to imprisonment, but also to fine. I do not know what particular reason the committee may have had in view in eliminating that feature from the law. It may be an advisable change; I am not prepared to take issue with the committee on the subject, but I should like to know upon what ground they thought it would be best to eliminate the fine. The Senator will notice that it is a conjunctive penalty, not an alternative one, in the law as it now stands.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. The idea of the committee, as I recall it, in eliminating the provision for a fine is that that offense falls within the class of offenses where, I think, practically in all the States no fine is provided for. For example, a fine is, I think, in no instance ever provided for murder in the second degree or manslaughter of any degree. So it is not in accordance with modern ideas to provide a fine for grand larceny or robbery or offenses of that character. It is simply in line with that general notion.

Mr. BACON. I simply desired to know what was the view of the committee. I quite agree that it is not in harmony with the law as it now stands, but it is in harmony with the legislation in our States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That was the idea of the committee.

The reading the bill was continued, as follows:

SEC. 273. Whoever shall assault another with intent to commit murder, or rape, shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years. Whoever shall assault another with intent to commit any felony, except murder, or rape, shall be fined not more than $3,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both. Whoever, with intent to do bodily harm, and without just cause or excuse, shall assault another with a dangerous weapon, instrument, or other thing, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Whoever shall unlawfully strike, beat, or wound another, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both. Whoever shall unlawfully assault another, shall be fined not more than $300, or imprisoned not more than three months, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I should call attention to the fact that the language of that section has been broadened so as to include that class of offenses wherever committed within the jurisdiction of the United States. It will be apparent from an inspection of existing law, section 5346, that Congress undertook to enumerate the places where the offense should be punishable. The enumeration was not complete. Therefore the committee used such general language as would include all the places enumerated in existing law and any other place within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I may have, in my hurried reading, made a mistake, but I do not think there is any penalty here for the offense of rape.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is in another section.

Mr. CLAY. Section 275.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator will find that section 275 covers the offense.

Mr. BACON. Yes; it is not in the place where it would ordinarily be found. We have not yet reached it.

Mr. CLAY. Probably the preceding section may cover all the sections, but the committee has left out "all places solely within the jurisdiction of the United States." It would appear from reading sections 274 and 275, if there is nothing preceding to confine it to places within the jurisdiction of the United States exclusively, that for the offense of murder or for the offense of rape the Federal court would assume jurisdiction regardless of the place where the crime was committed.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is a provision here that attaches the jurisdiction of the United States court only to those offenses committed within places over which the United States has jurisdiction to consider and punish those crimes.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator state that there is a general section of that kind?

Mr. HEYBURN. There is.

Mr. CLAY. What is the number? I would thank the Senator to tell me.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the judiciary act there is a general jurisdictional provision which establishes the jurisdiction of the United States courts. That is the administrative law. It was not the purpose of the committee to recommend in this criminal code administrative law where it could be avoided.

Mr. CLAY. I call the Senator's attention to the language of section 270, as revised by the committee, "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought," etc., defining how murder shall be punished. If you will turn to the old section, you will find that it reads as follows:

SEC. 5339. Every person who commits murder—

First. Within any fort, arsenal, dockyard, magazine, or in any other place or district of country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, etc.

Now, it might be construed to mean that the committee is attempting to give jurisdiction to the Federal courts outside of places where the United States has exclusive control.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will turn to section 269, which is the section preceding the one to which he calls attention, he will find there that the limit of jurisdiction is defined so far as it would be applicable in that case.

I would say again that the general jurisdictional limits of the United States courts are defined in the judiciary act, but section 269 of this criminal code, so far as it is necessary for the purposes of this code, defines the limits of the jurisdiction. It is stated in the report that that section was framed in order to avoid repeating in each section of the chapter the territorial limitations in connection with every separate section, so that it would not be necessary in every section to define the jurisdiction. The committee has reported section 269 to obviate the necessity of such a repetition.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I would say to the Senator from Idaho that I see, in running through the old statutes, that every one of those statutes refers to the place where the offense must be committed in order to give jurisdiction, naming the places. I am frank to confess that if by inference the jurisdiction of the Federal courts can be enlarged so as to deprive the State courts of the right to try criminal offenses in any way whatever, then I for one should not be willing to give my consent to that. I am frank to confess that I prefer the old statutes as they stand, because they specifically state where the offense must be committed in order to confer jurisdiction.

Mr. HEYBURN. The old statute is not more specific than section 269, which we have just passed over. That section is as specific as existing law; indeed, more so. It does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States courts by a hair's breadth. Let me call attention to it:

SEC. 269. The crimes and offenses defined in this chapter shall be punished as herein prescribed—

That is the chapter under consideration—

First. When committed upon the high seas, or on any other waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, or when committed within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States or any citizen thereof or to any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States or of any State, Territory, or district thereof.

Second. When committed upon any vessel registered, licensed, or enrolled under the laws of the United States, and being on a voyage upon the waters of any of the Great Lakes, namely: Lake Superior, Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, Lake St. Clair, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, or any of the waters connecting any of said lakes, or upon the River St. Lawrence where the same constitutes the international boundary line.

Third. When committed within or on any lands reserved or acquired for the exclusive use of the United States, and under the exclusive jurisdiction thereof, or any place purchased or otherwise acquired by the United States, by consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dock yard, or other needful building.

Fourth. On any island, rock, or key, containing deposits of guano, which may, at the discretion of the President, be considered as appertaining to the United States.

Those are the geographical designations of the jurisdiction of the United States courts for the punishment of the offenses enumerated and provided to be punished in this chapter, and the section under consideration is one of the sections of this chapter.

Senators will find that we have not attempted to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States either technically or geographically. We have simply gathered up a large number of existing provisions in the various statutes, the enumeration of the places over which the United States courts should have jurisdiction for the punishment of these offenses—we have gathered them together in a section at the beginning of this chapter providing for the punishment of these particular offenses in order to avoid the repetition with each separate section of this geographical jurisdiction. That certainly is in the interest of economy of time and space and consideration.

Heretofore, as the various statutes were being enacted, it was not convenient to refer to other sections in order to determine the jurisdiction. So each section as it was enacted enumerated the jurisdiction. We are codifying the laws in order that they may be more convenient for reference and application, and as a necessary part of the consideration in codifying these laws we bring together the oft-repeated expressions into some one particular expression that shall be applicable to the entire section.

The Senator from Georgia will find—and I say it on the faith of the committee, who were faithfully endeavoring to accomplish this object; and I believe they did, for they spent several days in considering this particular section referring to the jurisdiction of the United States courts—I think I may say on the faith of the committee that they have not enlarged the jurisdiction territorially or technically of the United States courts. They have merely brought these sections together, and if that looks to be larger or more comprehensive than it did at first, separated or scattered through twenty or thirty different sections, I think it will be found on comparison that the enlargement is merely apparent and not real.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, my attention was withdrawn at the time the Senate passed the section which the Senator from Idaho has just been discussing, and I want to call attention to another matter in it, which I think should be at least looked after carefully. It may be that I am wrong.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator is now referring, as I understand, to section 269?

Mr. BACON. Yes; to section 269, in the matter of punctuation. Of course we know that punctuation will sometimes have a very material effect upon the question of construction, and I am referring to the comma which is after the word "State," in the eleventh line of that section.

Mr. HEYBURN. That has been stricken out. I moved that amendment. That was an error of the printer. When it was first reached I moved that it be stricken out, and it has been stricken out.

Mr. BACON. Then, I should like to ask the Senator another question. I am glad, however, to know that my suggestion in that particular was fortified by the concurrent opinion on the part of the committee. I think, however, in the next line there is possibly something which needs attention. I refer to the twelfth line.

Of course we all recognize the fact that a murder committed upon a vessel belonging to the United States is a crime within the jurisdiction of the United States. If the sentence had stopped there I should have had nothing to say, but it will be observed that in referring to the place of the commission of the crime which causes the jurisdiction to attach it reads in this way:

On board any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States or any citizen thereof.

Mr. President, the point of that only relates to a crime committed outside of the jurisdiction of the State. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not hear the inquiry of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. The question suggested to my mind is whether that phraseology as it stood in connection with the prior part of the sentence would not seem to seek to confer jurisdiction upon the United States in a case where a murder was committed upon any vessel belonging to private citizens.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To citizens of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Yes. That is only in case it is outside of the jurisdiction of the particular State, is it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There may be a case where the United States and some other country would have concurrent jurisdiction over such an offense. The United States might have the right to punish an offense committed upon a vessel because it was owned by a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I may be mistaken in my construction, but the language used is not as clear as I should like to have it. I understand the intention of the committee in the phraseology adopted is to limit the question of the jurisdiction of the United States to a crime committed upon a private vessel to a case where the vessel is not within the territorial jurisdiction of any State. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is correct, as I understand it.

Mr. BACON. If that is the proper construction of it, I do not think there is any criticism to be made upon it. It is rather an involved sentence, and I think it rather unfortunate that it has not been separated in some way. The putting of vessels of the United States in the same sentence, without even the division of a comma, with vessels owned privately, misled me as to the purpose of the section. But if the construction is satisfactory and it limits such jurisdiction to a case where a crime is committed upon a private vessel, that vessel being at the time not in the jurisdiction of any State, then I think it is a proper provision of law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will refer to lines 10 and 11, he will see that they read "and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State."

Mr. BACON. Yes. But the misfortune is that a crime when committed upon a vessel of the United States is a crime within the jurisdiction of the United States, never mind where that vessel may be, the Senator will understand, and at the same time it is conjoined in the sentence with the case of a private vessel where the jurisdiction of the United States can only attach under certain circumstances, to wit, when the vessel is not in the territorial jurisdiction of any particular State. For that reason I should say the intent is not expressed as happily as it might be. Still, I presume upon a careful examination of it one would not be misled by the construction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have a very high regard for the opinion of the Senator from Georgia upon any legal question, but I think he is in error about this particular matter. The language is—

Or when committed within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, on board any vessel belonging in whole or in part to the United States, etc.

So that it is qualified by the words "when committed within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any particular State."

Now, as I understand the law, if, for example, a vessel belonging to a citizen of the United States happened to be tied up at a wharf in the city of Boston, an offense committed upon that vessel is within the jurisdiction of the State——

Mr. BACON. A private vessel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And not within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But if it happens to be a war vessel, perhaps the United States might have jurisdiction under some other provision.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly the point to which I am calling the attention of the committee. As I understand it, if an offense be committed on a war vessel the United States has jurisdiction, or should have it, or it is intended that it should have it, whether committed within the jurisdiction of the State or not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, the United States would have jurisdiction of the offense, of course, were it a violation of military law, but I do not understand that in that case the United States would have jurisdiction of an offense which was a violation of civil law; as, for instance, in an ordinary case of murder.

Mr. BACON. Is it the design of the committee to put an offense committed on a war vessel upon the same footing as an offense committed in a public building of the United States?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; that would come within another principle. An offense committed in a public building of the United States over which the State had ceded its jurisdiction would come within an entirely different principle, as I understand it; but it is the intention of the committee to say that where a vessel, as in the case I have illustrated, is attached to a wharf within the limits of a State any offense committed against the civil law—and I use that term in contradistinction to the military law—is an offense within the jurisdiction of the State, and not within the jurisdiction of the United States. If it happens to be an offense against military law, of course the military authorities have jurisdiction.

Mr. BACON. In other words, if a murder is committed upon a war ship lying in the harbor of New York, the design is that jurisdiction of that offense and the trial of the perpetrator of it shall be by the civil authorities of New York and not of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is my understanding. If two citizens of the State of New York, for example, should happen to be on board a war vessel tied up at one of the wharves in New York, should enter into a quarrel, and one should kill the other, that would be an offense cognizable by the State authorities and not by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BACON. If, on the other hand, those same two citizens were in the post-office building in the city of New York and were to engage in an altercation and one were to kill the other, the offense would be within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely.

Mr. BACON. Now, I want to ask the committee—I have not had time to examine it myself—if that is the status of the present law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is, as I understand it. I understand that to be the decision.

Mr. BACON. It is rather an anomaly if such is the case, Mr. President; and, while I presume I can not be reasonably accused of desiring to take away jurisdiction from a State, but rather the reverse wherever it is practicable, I myself think the law ought to be the other way. I think the Federal courts ought to have jurisdiction over whatever transpires upon a war vessel, for the same reason that the Federal courts have jurisdiction, or have claimed to have it, in a case where there is a crime committed upon a Federal reservation. If that is the present law and this makes no change, I shall not seek to have the change made; but I confess that it is somewhat of a surprise to me that that is the status of the law at present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that that is my understanding of the law. In the case of a post-office building or any other public building which has been erected under the provision in the Constitution which gives the United States Government exclusive jurisdiction over any place purchased or otherwise acquired by the United States by consent of the legislature of the State in which it is situated——

Mr. BACON. Yes; I am quite aware of the fact that that is the constitutional provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That falls within a different principle. But if a war vessel is tied up at a wharf within the limits of a State, as I understand, an offense committed upon it is within the jurisdiction of the State.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is mistaken simply in one expression he uses, when he says it is upon a different principle. It may be that it is controlled by a different law; but the principle, so far as I can see, would be the same in one case as in the other. In the one case it is required by the Constitution, but the same principle which has induced that constitutional provision would, it seems to me, now require a statutory provision where the Constitution did not itself point it out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It may be true that I used the word "principle" in too broad a sense; but I mean by that that it falls within a different rule. My colleague on the committee [Mr. HEYBURN] has the authorities and is informed on that question.

Mr. BACON. I am not, of course, asking that any change be made if that provision is in accordance with the law as it exists at present. I will not ask the committee to make any modification of it, but it seems to me to be rather a strange distinction between a crime committed in a public building on land—in that case being within the jurisdicton of the United States court—and a crime committed on a warship, probably within 50 feet or 50 yards of the same building, being within the jurisdiction of the State. I think there is a very much stronger reason why it should be within the jurisdiction of the United States in case of a war vessel than in the case of a public building.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the committee had considerable difficulty in harmonizing and adjusting the several existing provisions of law taken in connection with the decisions that had been rendered upon this subject. This is what we might term a very large subject; and it has received the attention of the United States Supreme Court on more than one occasion. There has been a wide difference of opinion in that court with reference to this question of jurisdiction, and on one occasion one of the most eminent members of that court, dissenting from the court, gave very excellent reasons for his dissent. But the law has not been changed from what it was as recently decided by that court.

One of the decisions rendered under the act of 1825—and, in passing, I will say that this provision is made up of the acts of 1790, 1825, 1875, and 1890——

Mr. BACON. And numerous decisions under them.

Mr. HEYBURN. As I have said, the courts have not left the question in uncertainty, but the law is in such a condition as to require a very careful comparison and analysis of the decisions in order to determine what the court holds the existing law to be.

In reframing this language your committee endeavored to keep as closely as possible within the declaration of the court as to what the law is. It may have erred; but it was only after many days devoted to a discussion of this particular portion of their work that they arrived at the conclusion as expressed in the report of the sections. In the case of the United States against Arwo, reported in 19 Wallace, page 486—a case which was decided in 1873 on a certificate of division in opinion from the southern district of New York—the Supreme Court recites that—

> The statute of March 3, 1825—

That being the statute under which this prosecution was being maintained—

> make an assault committed on the high seas with a deadly weapon a crime against the United States, and the act is made cognizable in virtue of prior law—

Which refers to the act of April 30, 1790. That was the first enactment giving the courts jurisdiction of that class of offenses.

> This statute being in force, Arwo was indicted in the southern district of New York for an assault of the kind just spoken of, committed on a vessel alleged to have belonged to citizens of the United States. He pleaded to the jurisdiction, alleging that immediately upon the commission of the assault he had been placed in irons on board ship for custody and to be forthcoming to answer any charge therefor, and was so kept until the vessel reached the lower quarantine anchorage in New York Harbor, within the eastern district of that State; that the vessel lay at anchor at such station for five days, during which he, being still in such custody, was delivered to the harbor police, officers of the State of New York, in order that he might be forthcoming, etc., and that they without process or warrant from any court carried him to the city of New York, where he was delivered over to the marshal of the United States for the southern district of New York, and that a warrant for his arrest (being the first issued in this case) was afterwards duly issued to the said marshal; so that, upon the whole, he had been apprehended and brought first into the eastern and not into the southern district, and therefore could be tried only in the former district, etc.
> Upon demurrer the following questions occurred, and the court certified a division upon them:
>
> "1. Whether the prisoner having been taken into custody by the master of an American vessel, while on her voyage, upon a charge of having during the voyage committed an offense against the United States on board such ship, upon the high seas and out of the limits of any State or district, and first brought, in such custody, into the eastern district of New York, can be tried for such offense in the southern district of New York.
>
> "2. Whether the facts stated in the plea show that the southern district of New York is not the district in which the defendant was apprehended, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1825.
> "3. Whether the plea discloses that, within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1825, the apprehension of the defendant occurred either upon the high seas, or in the eastern district of New York, and not in the southern district of New York.
> "4. Whether the act of March 3, 1825, confers jurisdiction in the alternative, and enables this court to assume jurisdiction to try an indictment by reason of the fact that the defendant has been arrested in this district, upon the charge in the indictment contained, by an officer of the United States, as stated in the plea, notwithstanding it appears that the defendant was first brought into the eastern district of New York."

I read more of the statement of facts than is really necessary for the consideration of this point so that the entire question before the court on the certificate of division in opinion might be understood. That is followed by the argument of counsel:

Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion of the court.
Instead of answering separately the questions certified here, I am instructed to say that the court, upon the facts alleged in the plea, is of the opinion that the circuit court for the southern district of New York had jurisdiction in this case, and that the court directs that this statement be certified to the circuit court as the only answer required to the several questions presented in the record.

We may fairly deduce from the conclusion of the court in that case that they considered—the place of the commission of the offense being upon a vessel within the class designated by the act of 1825—that the question as to where the party first reached the land, so to speak, of the United States was immaterial, but that the act under consideration—the act of 1825—made it an offense against the United States to commit the crime upon a vessel, and that the question of the place of trial became immaterial after that—wherever he was apprehended and the United States chose to assume jurisdiction.

Mr. BACON. Was that a private vessel or a war vessel?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was a vessel owned by citizens of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Was it without the jurisdiction of a State?

Mr. HEYBURN. It was without the jurisdiction of the State at the time of the commission of the offense. That is recited in the statement of facts.

Mr. BACON. I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the party was apprehended on a warrant served within the jurisdiction of the State of New York, so that, the place of the commission of the offense being without the jurisdiction of the State, it was immaterial where the party was apprehended.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator's attention—if he will pardon me for the interruption——

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. The Senator does not interrupt me.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is possibly coming to that particular point, but the question that I was troubled about was whether an offense committed upon a war vessel within the jurisdiction of a State was or was not an offense against the United States cognizable in a Federal court.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will reach that in a moment. I think I have another decision upon this question. I will say in this connection that the citation as published in part 2 of the report is misleading in that the designation "Mas." should be "5 Mason" in stead of "5 Mass." The Senator will find it in the margin. There is also an important decision in the case of United States against Holmes, in 5 Wheaton, page 412.

There has been a great deal of consideration given to this question, but I think I can only take the time of the Senate at this juncture to say that the committee sifted down all of these decisions and that the section as reported is the result of a very careful consideration of the cases. Of course, that is not a sufficient answer to the question submitted by the Senator, but I will give that a moment's consideration.

An offense committed upon a war vessel of the United States, if it is in violation of the discipline of the Navy or the military law of the United States, comes within the jurisdiction of a court-martial. If it is an offense against the laws of the United States, applicable alike to all classes of citizens, it is a crime against the United States and it is triable in the United States courts. They have jurisdiction of the offense because it is a crime against the United States within territory under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, provided that the offense is committed without the jurisdiction of a State. If the offense is committed within the jurisdiction of a State the party may be turned over for trial to the civil authorities of that State within whose jurisdiction it was committed.

There is some conflict of authority as to whether or not there is a concurrent jurisdiction in such cases as that, but your committee have reported the law as it is written and left the question of interpretation of that law to the courts.

Mr. BACON. I merely want to ask the Senator a question in connection with what he has just said. It seems to me that of all the peculiar functions of the Committee on Revision, one of the most important is to settle any question that is in doubt as to statutory provisions. This is one question that ought to be specifically settled by statute. It is the statute which can confer the jurisdiction, and it is only by reason of the doubt that there is not jurisdiction. While, as I have suggested, I am not in the habit of seeking to withdraw any jurisdiction from the States which can properly belong to them, it does seem to me that the jurisdiction of the Federal authorities ought to be certain and couched in no ambiguous language in a statute conferring that jurisdiction in the case of a crime committed upon a war vessel of the United States. It is the territory of the United States; it is an exclusive territory of the United States, as much so as any public building can possibly be, situated in the body of a State. While I will not take the liberty of offering an amendment myself——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, if the Senators had found that the law was clearly stated, leaving no doubt of the fact that the jurisdiction was in the State, I would not contend that it was their duty to seek a change of the law, but where they themselves say it is in doubt, it seems to me the doubt ought to be settled. It ought to be specifically provided either that it is in the State or the United States. I myself think it ought to be in the United States.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I do not think that a crime committed on board of a war ship of the United States is therefore necessarily committed within a place that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution, which confers exclusive jurisdiction on the United States in certain cases specified and named. Places purchased within a State, by the consent of the State, for forts, arsenals, etc., are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. A war ship, of course, like any other vessel of the United States owned by citizens of the United States, is, when on the high seas, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, or when in any bay or inlet of the sea, or, indeed, when on any water, even though that water be within the exclusive jurisdiction, or perhaps I should say the territorial jurisdiction, of a foreign state, it is within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, because it is a vessel of the United States. But there is a case—I do not recall the title of it; perhaps the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Utah will recall it—which went up from Massachusetts, where the crime was committed on board a vessel of the United States within the Boston Harbor, as I recall it—some waters on the Atlantic coast—I think Boston Harbor. Does the Senator from Utah recall the case?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the case of The United States v. Grush. I have it in my hand.

Mr. FULTON. As I remember that case, the court held that the vessel was within the jurisdiction of the State and therefore it was not a case in which the United States court had jurisdiction.

Mr. HEYBURN. The court held the waters were within the county of Suffolk.

Mr. FULTON. That is the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was a question of the limit of the jurisdiction of the State, and the decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Story. But I should say in fairness to the consideration of this question that Mr. Justice Story differed from the majority of the court on a later occasion when a question involving a part of the principle here involved was before it, and the majority of the court was against him.

He not only filed a very strong dissenting opinion, but afterwards drew a bill and had it presented for consideration which was in conformity with his idea of what the law should be. It was in conformity with his idea of what the law was. The court having held that that was not the law, in his desire to have the law so established he drew a bill which was introduced, and he probably showed more feeling in regard to this question than any other question that came before the court during the long, many years that he was on the bench.

The Senators will realize that the committee had quite an undertaking before it when it undertook to sift down the exact line and limit of the jurisdiction. I agree with the Senator from Georgia that this question should be settled by a statute, but I do not agree with him that it was within the province or function of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to attempt to frame a statute for that purpose. That should be——

Mr. FULTON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Is there a decision of any court holding that a crime, distinct from a violation of the Naval Regulations, which if committed on land would be simply an offense against the laws of a State, when committed on board of a man-of-war or naval vessel within the limits of a State is punishable under the United States statutes and cognizable by a court of the United States?

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator mean whether there is a record of anyone having escaped justice because of the absence of legislation?

Mr. FULTON. No; whether there is any case holding that a United States court has jurisdiction where the offense is committed on board a naval vessel within the waters of a State.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or while she is tied up to a wharf.

Mr. FULTON. Or while she is tied up to a wharf; that is, aside from the violation of the Naval Regulations.

Mr. HEYBURN. The decisions upon that question are usually by the lower courts, because in almost every instance, in fact in every instance that recurs to my mind, the party was acquitted, and, of course, there was no law under which the question could be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States. Parties have frequently escaped punishment because of this distinction, which we may term technical or not, as we see fit.

But Senators will remember that in the Guiteau case the insufficiency of the law was demonstrated and illustrated. The shot was fired in the District of Columbia. The victim died in the State of New Jersey. There was no law under which he could be tried in the State of New Jersey for that offense, and there was no law in the District of Columbia under which he could be tried for an offense where the victim died beyond the jurisdiction; and it was necessary for the court, in order to hold the defendant, to hold that the common law being applicable to the State of Maryland, from which the District of Columbia was carved at the time of the creation of the District, was applicable; and Guiteau was tried and convicted and executed under the common law as applicable in the State of Maryland in the absence of any legislation sufficient to try him either in the District of Columbia or in the State of New Jersey, where Mr. Garfield died.

That illustrates the insufficiency of the law, and I am free to say that, in my judgment, the law is pretty nearly as insufficient in regard to the clear line of distinction as to the jurisdiction of the United States and the State courts in respect to a certain class of offenses.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I think the point the Senator is now discussing is entirely distinct from the other proposition, and unless the committee has changed the rule which we adopted when I was a member of it, there is a section in the report the committee has filed which expressly provides that the crime shall be deemed to have been committed at the place where the mortal blow was struck.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is retained.

Mr. HEYBURN. We retain that.

Mr. FULTON. That does away with that question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not want the Senator from Oregon to think or to create the impression that I consider the Guiteau case as applicable to the consideration of this question. I used it for illustration only——

Mr. FULTON. I understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. As to the very fine distinctions that are very frequently drawn and have to be overcome by the courts either on behalf of the party charged or on behalf of the administration of justice, in the interest of the public. I was using it as an illustration. I said or intended to be understood as saying in response to the question submitted by the Senator from Georgia that the line of distinction is about as fine drawn in regard to the jurisdiction in the cases to which he has referred as it is in the other case—that is, in the Guiteau case, or that class of cases.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to be understood as questioning the fact that the Senator from Idaho clearly understood the distinction, or as intimating that he was confused at all in his statement of the two propositions. I simply wished to emphasize the contention I was seeking to make, that the propositions are, in my judgment, not only entirely distinct, but that the line of authority is much clearer on the one than it is on the other. I do not myself think that there is any reasonable doubt about what the law is touching where a crime is cognizable when committed even on board a vessel of the United States, if it be committed within the jurisdiction of a State. I think it is clearly cognizable by the State court.

Mr. HEYBURN. By the State court?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that that probably was in the mind of Congress when it enacted the law, and I think probably that view would be contended for by those who are strict constructionists as to the rights and limits of the jurisdiction of the State. But the courts have not always so held.

Mr. BACON. Let me ask the Senator a question. What is the volume from which he started to read when the Senator from Oregon interrupted him?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is 5 Mason, page 290.

Mr. BACON. Did the Senator say the decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Story?

Mr. HEYBURN. The decision was by Mr. Justice Story, in the circuit court of the United States for the first circuit; reported in volume 5 by William P. Mason.

Mr. BACON. In that case, as I understand the Senator, Mr. Justice Story, dissenting from the majority, contended that the jurisdiction——

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the case in which he dissented from the majority was that of the United States v. Holmes, 5 Wheaton, 412.

Mr. BACON. In that case, as I understand, the opinion of Mr. Justice Story was that where the offense was committed upon a war vessel of the United States, regardless of where the vessel might be, the jurisdiction was in the United States courts.

Mr. HEYBURN. It arose out of the question of a vessel weaving backward and forward—the question of the necessity of the definite location of the vessel.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of the question of location.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will send for the case, and see whether it was a war vessel.

Mr. BACON. Of course the question as to the particular situs of the vessel at the time of the commission of the crime is altogether a different question from the one which I raised as to the jurisdiction of United States courts of a crime committed upon a war vessel, regardless of the situs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to call his attention to one thing he said. I understand him to say that, in his opinion, if the United States has jurisdiction over a public building, it ought also to have jurisdiction over its war vessels.

Mr. BACON. Of course I understand in the case of public buildings it is controlled by constitutional provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; it is.

Mr. BACON. But I say the same principle, it seems to me, which induced them to incorporate that provision in the Constitution should induce us to incorporate a similar provision in the statute as applied to war vessels.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the United States has jurisdiction over a public building, not because it is a public building of the United States, but because the State has ceded its jurisdiction to the Government of the United States. For example, the United States Government——

Mr. BACON. It is because the Constitution requires that to such buildings the jurisdiction of the United States shall attach.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose there was no constitutional provision at all on the subject?

Mr. BACON. That would be a different thing altogether.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But the proposition I make, if the Senator will pardon me, is that the same principle that induced the framers of the Constitution to provide that when in a public building of the United States a crime was committed, jurisdiction should attach to the United States courts, would, it seems to me, constrain us in framing a statute which should prescribe the jurisdiction in the case of a crime upon a war vessel, also to give the jurisdiction to the United States court. It is simply an analogy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I understand the Senator, then, he means to say that if it was wise for the makers of the Constitution to provide that the United States should have exclusive jurisdiction over a public building within a State when it had been ceded by the State government, it would also be wise to provide for the same sort of jurisdiction over a war vessel. But in the one case there is a constitutional provision and in the other there is not. In the case of a public building the Government has jurisdiction, not because of the character of the building, not because of the ownership, but it rests upon the proposition that the State under the Constitution has ceded its authority and its jurisdiction to the United States. In the case of a war vessel it is simply property owned by the United States which happens temporarily to be within a State and over which the State has not ceded its jurisdiction.

I can not see that it differs in principle from a case where the Government of the United States might own a car—a mail car, for example—it might own the whole thing; it might be the property of the United States, under the control of its officers, carrying its property. If that mail car happened to be within the limits of a State and an offense was committed upon it which did not violate some provision of the law which dealt with a crime against the sovereignty of the United States, it would be an offense under the jurisdiction of the State and not of the Federal Government, because it does not come within any class mentioned in the Constitution over which the State has ceded jurisdiction. So, it seems to me, it makes no difference whether the vessel is one owned by the United States or one owned by a citizen of the United States; that when it is upon the high seas, upon the waters out of the jurisdiction of the State, the United States has jurisdiction over it; when it is within the limits of a State, then the State has exclusive jurisdiction over any offense that is committed upon it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have before me the case of The United States v. Holmes, in which the decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Washington in 1820, before the act of 1825 was passed. It was rendered under the act of 1790:

> The courts of the United States have jurisdiction under the act of the 30th of April, 1790, chapter 36, of murder or robbery committed on the high seas, although not committed on board a vessel belonging to citizens of the United States, as if she had no national character, but was held by pirates or persons not lawfully sailing under the flag of any foreign nation.
>
> In the same case and under the same act, if the offense be committed on board of a foreign vessel by a citizen of the United States, or on board a vessel of the United States by a foreigner, or by a citizen or foreigner on board of a piratical vessel, the offense is equally cognizable by the courts of the United States.
> It makes no difference in such a case and under the same act whether the offense was committed on board of a vessel or in the sea, as by throwing the deceased overboard and drowning him, or by shooting him when in the sea, though he was not thrown overboard. (The United States v. Holmes et al., United States Supreme Court Reports, vol. 18, p. 412, 5 Wheat., February term, 1820.)

That was a case which grew out of an act of piracy. It is not the case I had in mind.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the Senator, there is possibly no case where there has been an adjudication by a circuit court of the United States or the Supreme Court of the United States distinctly on the point whether the jurisdiction attaches to the United States in the case of a crime committed on a war vessel.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no case in the Supreme Court of the United States. I will read the constitutional provision, so that it will appear in the RECORD.

Section 8, Article I, of the Constitution provides:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations.

That is the limit of the constitutional power given to Congress to legislate in regard to crimes, except that contained in a subsequent paragraph, which I will read:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings—

And—

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.

That is the limit of the power of Congress to legislate in regard to criminal offenses, so far as territorial jurisdiction is concerned. Of course, it is not a limitation so far as the character of offenses is concerned, except as to territorial jurisdiction.

If the attendance of the Senate was larger than it is, I would feel that we might perhaps take up the consideration of the amendment of this law, but I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that we should not undertake at this time to change existing law, either by amending the report of the committee or the existing law.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator that under present conditions it would not be practicable to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

> SEC. 275. Whoever shall commit the crime of rape shall suffer death.
> SEC. 276. [Whoever shall carnally and unlawfully know any female under the age of 16 years, or shall be accessory to such carnal and unlawful knowledge before the fact, shall, for a first offense, be imprisoned not more than fifteen years, and for a subsequent offense be imprisoned not more than thirty years.]
>
> SEC. 277. Every master, officer, seaman, or other person employed on board of any American vessel, who, during the voyage, under promise of marriage, or by threats, or the exercise of authority, or solicitation, or the making of gifts or presents, seduces and has illicit connection with any female passenger, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; but subsequent intermarriage of the parties may be pleaded in bar of conviction.
>
> SEC. 278. [When a person is convicted of a violation of the section last preceding, the court may, in its discretion, direct that the amount of the fine, when paid, be paid for the use of the female seduced, or her child, if she have any; but no conviction shall be had on the testimony of the female seduced, without other evidence, nor unless the indictment is found within one year after the arrival of the vessel on which the offense was committed at the port of its destination.]
> SEC. 279. [Every captain, engineer, pilot, or other person employed on any steamboat or vessel, by whose misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties on such vessel the life of any person is destroyed, and every owner, charterer, inspector, or other public officer, through whose fraud, neglect, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law the life of any person is destroyed, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both: Provided, That when the owner or charterer of any steamboat or vessel shall be a corporation, any executive officer of such corporation, for the time being actually charged with the control and management of the operation, equipment, or navigation of such steamboat or vessel, who has knowingly and willfully caused or allowed such fraud, neglect, connivance, misconduct, or violation of law, by which the life of any person is destroyed, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.]

Mr. BACON. I notice in the hasty reading, which I have been able to give of the existing law, while at the same time trying to follow the reading of the Clerk, that the Committee on Revision has left out the designation, which is now found in the existing law, as to that offense. It is designated in the existing law as manslaughter. The committee, I have no doubt, were wise in their conclusion, but I should like to know the reason why they changed the phraseology to that extent.

Mr. HEYBURN. The committee has divided manslaughter into two degrees. So it seemed that in the interest of simplicity and concise expression it was better to leave the section stand so that it would cover either class and avoid the necessity of practically repeating the entire section twice in order to cover the distinction between manslaughter in the first and second degrees, which the committee has reported, and which has already been passed. That is the reason.

Mr. BACON. If a party is to be indicted under this law, what is the designation of the offense with which he is charged?

Mr. HEYBURN. The designation of the offense would be a statement of the facts as to the act he had committed, and if it came within the provisions of this statute that would be sufficient:

> Every captain, engineer, pilot, or other person employed on any steamboat or vessel, by whose misconduct, negligence, or inattention to his duties on such vessel the life of any person is destroyed.

You would allege in the indictment that the captain, for instance, had been guilty of misconduct, negligence, and inattention, and by reason thereof the occurrence had happened. That is the usual manner of stating the description of offenses where the offense has no name. There are a very large number of offenses in the statutes now that have no names, and the offense goes simply by its description rather than by its designation by name. It is not unusual at all.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator will find in a body of laws where that course is pursued there is some general provision of law that wherever an offense is not otherwise designated it shall be termed a misdemeanor.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have such a general provision here.

Mr. BACON. If there is such a general provision, a party could be indicted under that and then the specification could follow.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I did not understand the Senator's remarks to be directed to that phase of it.

Mr. BACON. Yes; they were.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is a general provision which applies to all parts of the code as reported, by which the grade or degree of any offense may be measured.

Mr. BACON. And the party can be so indicted?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I think that is entirely sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

> SEC. 280. [Whoever, with intent to maim or disfigure, shall cut, bite, or slit, the nose, ear, or lip, or cut out or disable the tongue, or put out or destroy an eye, or cut off or disable a limb or any member of another person; or whoever, with like intent, shall throw or pour upon another person, any scalding hot water, vitriol, or other corrosive acid, or caustic substance whatever, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than seven years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say that we have simply enlarged that section to meet conditions now existing which did not exist within the contemplation of the original act.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

> SEC. 281. [Whoever, by force and violence, or by putting in fear, shall feloniously take from the person of another anything of value, shall be imprisoned not more than fifteen years.]

SEC. 282. Whoever shall willfully and maliciously set fire to, burn, or attempt to burn, or by means of a dangerous explosive destroy or attempt to destroy, any dwelling house, or any store, barn, stable, or other building, parcel of a dwelling house, shall be imprisoned not more than twenty years.

SEC. 283. [Whoever shall maliciously set fire to, burn, or attempt to burn, or by any means destroy or injure, any arsenal, armory, magazine, ropewalk, ship house, warehouse, blockhouse, or barrack, or any storehouse, barn, or stable not parcel of a dwelling house, or any other building not mentioned in the section last preceding, or any vessel built, building, or undergoing repair, or any light-house, or beacon, or any machinery, timber, cables, rigging, or other materials or appliances for building, repairing, or fitting out vessels, or any pile of wood, boards, or other lumber, or any military, naval, or victualing stores, arms, or other munitions of war, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than twenty years.]

SEC. 284. Whoever shall take and carry away, with intent to steal or purloin, any personal property of another, shall be punished as follows: If the property taken is of a value exceeding $50, or is taken from the person of another, by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; in all other cases, by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than one year, or both. If the property stolen consists of any evidence of debt, or other written instrument, the amount of money due thereon, or secured to be paid thereby, and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any contingency might be collected thereon, or the value of the property the title to which is shown thereby, or the sum which might be recovered in the absence thereof, shall be deemed to be the value of the property stolen.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator explain the last section read?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will do so. This section conforms to the law of the large majority of the States in dividing larceny into two classes and grading the punishment accordingly. The amendments, I think, are self-explanatory.

Mr. KEAN. Can the Senator state to which States it applies?

Mr. HEYBURN. By taking the data that was before the committee I could refer the Senator to each State to which it applies. I would say that the committee had before it reference to the laws of the several States in regard to this class of offenses. It is obvious to those familiar with the law that this offense may be of an exceedingly grave nature or a very trivial nature, and the distinction which is made in the section is one that would appeal to the courts as between the more grave offense and the offense of lesser gravity.

I do not know that any further explanation could be made. It is a section which deals with existing law. It is based upon an existing statute which provides for the punishment of some offenses, except that it makes no distinction between a very grave offense and a more moderate form of the offense.

Mr. KEAN. I would suggest that it is a pretty important change.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are a great many important changes here—that is to say, if we call them changes. I call the Senator's attention specifically, however, since it attracts his attention, to the first half of section 284, which is as follows:

Whoever shall take and carry away, with intent to steal or purloin, any personal property of another, shall be punished as follows: If the property taken is of a value exceeding $50, or is taken from the person of another, by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both; in all other cases, by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than one year, or both.

It is a distinction that has been common to larceny and such offenses in all the States, I think, from the very early days in the history of this country.

The only new provision contained in the section is the following:

If the property stolen consists of any evidence of debt, or other written instrument, the amount of money due thereon, or secured to be paid thereby, and remaining unsatisfied, or which in any contingency might be collected thereon, or the value of the property the title to which is shown thereby, or the sum which might be recovered in the absence thereof, shall be deemed to be the value of the property stolen.

In other words, it fixes a standard by which the grade of the offense may be determined, where the offense consisted in taking something that had an uncertain value. It might have a face value that would bring it within the graver class of offenses, and it might really be worth nothing.

Mr. KEAN. Is not that what it does? Does it not fix the face value as the value of the debt?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it says the amount that "might be collected thereon:"

If the property stolen consists of any evidence of debt, etc., or the value of the property the title to which is shown thereby, or the sum which might be recovered in the absence thereof, shall be deemed to be the value of the property stolen.

If the Senator has a more equitable rule than that to suggest, the committee would be glad to have it.

Mr. KEAN. I ask if a person should steal a million shares of mining stock of the value of 25 cents each or 10 cents each, would the nominal par value of the stock be the degree of his guilt?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I think in that case it would not. That would be tested by the provision in lines 21 and 22, "the value of the property the title to which is shown thereby." The rule stated in the italicized portion of the section is one which is to be found, I think, in nearly every State in the Union, and it was framed in those various States in order to get rid of the rule of the common law on the subject.

At common law when a man was indicted for having stolen a written instrument the value which the common law attached to it was the intrinsic value of the paper, which was merely nominal, and it was a very unjust rule. That rule of the common law has been modified by statute in England, and it has been modified by, I think, the statutes of nearly every State in the Union.

The old statute, of which this is a paraphrase, was enacted in April, 1790, and there has been no change made since that time. It was the purpose of many of the changes made by the committee, and this is one of them, to modernize laws which were passed more than a hundred years ago.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 285. Whoever shall buy, receive, or conceal any money, goods, bank notes, or other thing which may be the subject of larceny, which has been feloniously taken, stolen, or embezzled, from any other person, knowing the same to have been so taken, stolen, or embezzled, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than three years; and such person may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal offender.

SEC. 286. [Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or District, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 269 of this act, shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any law of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or District in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof now in force would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment; and every such State, Territorial, or District law shall, for the purposes of this section, continue in force, notwithstanding any subsequent repeal or amendment thereof by any such State, Territory, or District.]

Mr. KEAN. I will ask the Senator from Idaho to explain the section.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is one of the most difficult sections in the revision, I am free to say, and I reserved the right, when the committee finally considered it, to criticise it and amend it. It is existing law in substance, but it attempts to engraft on Federal law the statutes of the State without reciting them, without showing what they are, and it provides that they shall remain engrafted as a part of the Federal law even though the State repeals them.

That is existing law. In my judgment it should not be law. There is very grave doubt in my mind whether, the question being presented to the highest court in the land, that class of legislation would be sustained. But as late as 1898 the provisions of the act of 1825, which went only a part of the way, were enlarged, so that to-day that is the law upon the statute books and the committee were very loath, under the general principle by which they were guided, to propose any change in a law so recently enacted that had received the consideration of the Committees on the Judiciary of the two Houses of Congress, many members of which are still Members of the respective bodies.

I could not pass this section without calling the attention of the Senate to the anomalous class of legislation which the section represents. At the time of the enactment of the section originally every section of the law of any State was engrafted upon the laws of the United States and it was limited to the laws then in existence of the States. There was a very serious controversy over the act of 1825 for many years in the courts, and it was held that it did not apply to any law that was passed subsequent to the enactment of the act of 1825.

Then, again, in 1898, when the provisions of the act were enlarged, it was held that it simply included the laws passed between 1825 and 1898 as being within the scope of this indefinite legislation, laws written in small characters high upon the pillars of the temple.

The courts hold that the provisions of the act of 1898 do not apply to any legislation by a State subsequent to that date. So in the United States courts the laws of the States that were in existence at the time of the passage of the act of 1898 are a part of the statutory laws of the United States. Congress never considers the wisdom of them, no committee of Congress ever passes upon or even reads or has called to its attention these laws that it adopts without specific reference, and it merely makes the laws of a State enforceable in a United States court without ever knowing what those laws are. In my judgment, which is evidently opposed by the wisdom of the courts and of the legislature, that is not a correct or safe system upon which to establish law in any country.

Mr. President, if we enact the provisions of this code as reported by the Commission we will do what was done in 1898. We will make the laws of the States at the hour of the enactment of this code a part of the laws of the United States, enforceable in the courts of the United States, and a law that is enacted the next day by the legislature of any State will not be a part of the laws of the United States or enforceable in the courts of the United States. It will become necessary, if we adopt this provision, to reenact it every year in order that the courts of the United States may enforce the laws of the States up to date.

The difficulty arises out of the fact that we can only adopt the laws which are in existence. If we were to attempt to do more it would be in the nature of the delegation of authority to the States to legislate for and on behalf of the United States and thereby establish a rule for the courts to follow. The courts have held that Congress might adopt the laws in existence by reference in general terms, but could not adopt the laws that might be enacted by the States an hour after the passage of the act of Congress.

It is an anomalous condition. I admit the necessity for some legislation upon this subject. I think that the legislation which has been enacted to which I have just referred (and I say it without any disrespect to the legislative bodies that have gone before) has been in the interest of saving themselves trouble. There is no good reason why various acts of the various States could not be selected and referred to in express terms and incorporated in the legislation applicable to the Federal courts. It would require a complete consideration of the laws of the several States, and that they should be in specific terms incorporated into the Federal law.

I think it was only right to call the attention of the Senate to the character of this legislation, having reserved the right so to do at the time it was adopted by the committee.

Mr. BACON and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator from Utah, but I wish to make some remarks a little later.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this is one of the very few matters about which the Senator from Idaho, my colleague on the committee, and myself disagree. I think not only the legislation is constitutional, but I think it is wise and proper legislation. Indeed, I do not know of any other practical way in which this question can be dealt with. To attempt to provide by special enactment for all of the various offenses which are offenses under the laws of the forty-six different States would involve a criminal code exceeding in bulk all of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

This section simply reads into the Federal law the provisions of the laws of each State and applies them to the particular places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States within that particular State. There may be in some of the States offenses which are peculiar to those States and which are not recognized in other States. We are dealing with forty-six different States. We can not undertake to search out the peculiar conditions in each of the States and provide by a vast and comprehensive system of law to cover every one of those offenses, and yet the offenses ought not to go unpunished because they happen to be committed in a post-office building in the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. For example, a man in the city of Chicago, upon one of the streets of Chicago, in one of the hotels of Chicago, commits an offense which is punishable under the law of the State of Illinois. If we do not have this particular provision upon the Federal statute books, and he happens at that time to have been in the post-office building, he goes absolutely unpunished.

I do not see any other practical way by which we can deal with this question, because certainly it would not be a good condition of affairs if an offense considered by the State to be worthy of punishment when committed in a hotel building should not be punished when committed in a public building of the United States.

It is true that this law applies only to the laws which are in force at the time it is passed, because we would not have the power to make it apply, even if it were wise, to laws subsequently passed. To undertake to do so would be an unlawful delegation to the legislatures of the various States of the legislative authority which belongs to Congress.

I do not know of any authority which has ever questioned the validity of the legislation. There have been numerous prosecutions under the provision. I have here a comparatively recent case reported in 122 Federal Reporter, the case of The United States v. Tucker, which was brought under this provision of the law, and no question was made either by counsel or by the court as to the validity or the wisdom of the legislation which was enforced in that case.

Mr. BACON. What was the character of the offense?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not just recall the character of it.

Mr. BACON. It is not material.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. The syllabus does not disclose the character of the offense. Congress began to pass this legislation as early as March 3, 1825. It was repeated April 5, 1886, and again repeated July 7, 1898. It does not appear from 1825 down to the present day that anybody has questioned either the validity or the wisdom of the law, and I do not think that at this late date Congress, and particularly this committee, ought to undertake to change it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I confess that it is a question not free from difficulty in my mind. The act of 1898 I suppose I ought to be familiar with, as I think I was on the Judiciary Committee at that time, but I do not recall it. Much that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has said, I myself had it in my mind, less perfectly, to say. There are very grave reasons why there should be some such legislation. At the same time I see very great difficulties in making the legislation effective and many difficulties in entirely justifying it, some of which have already been very forcibly suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

By way of illustration, to show the necessity for it, taking the case of a prohibition State, where the sale of liquors is prohibited in any part of the State: If there is to be no such legislation as this, in every public building or in every park which surrounds a public building there could very easily be established any number of illicit concerns, and even if there were no buildings there could be illicit transactions in the sale of whisky, and it would be resorted to for that purpose, because it would be without the jurisdiction of the State, and at the same time there would be no means by which it could be punished by the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me right there, I think his illustration bears out precisely what I have said—that there are in States offenses peculiar to the particular States, and if Congress were to undertake to pass a law of general application, it would be appropriate in some States and wholly inappropriate in others.

Mr. BACON. At the same time I confess there comes up a difficulty as to the compliance of Congress in that particular with the obligation to make the laws of uniform operation. Of course we recognize that all laws should be uniform, and especially all criminal laws. The question naturally arises as to whether that obligation can be evaded by the adoption of statutes which shall be different in different States rather than directly legislate ourselves for different States. It is a very troublesome question.

Another difficulty which arises is this: As I understand the learned Senator—I have not myself had the opportunity to examine the decisions in this regard—a statute of this kind can only be made effective as to legislation of States which has preceded the adoption of this statute. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. BACON. Very well. Now, the Senators will easily perceive the one great end to be accomplished by this legislation. Even if it is not open to the objection of the want of uniformity, necessarily it is very incomplete in its operation by reason of the fact that there are constant changes being made in the legislation of the different States, which are just as important, under the view presented by the Senator from Utah, to be enforced as legislation, which precedes the adoption of this particular statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned for interrupting the Senator from Georgia——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. One objection which has impressed itself on my mind is that after a State, in the light of the wisdom which it gathers from time to time, shall repeal a law because it is obnoxious to the sense of its people, the United States, within that same jurisdiction, goes on enforcing that law.

Mr. BACON. Has that also been determined by the courts?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the practice, and that is the provision of this section, which was one of the strong objections that I have always urged. In the law passed in 1825 we adopted the State legislation up to that time. Now, as late as 1877, the year before the passage of the last act, the United States courts were enforcing State statutes that had been obsolete since or repealed twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty years. It strikes me that that is very inconsistent with the correct administration of justice.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is a very difficult question and I think we had better let this section lie over for the purpose of seeing if we can not arrange it in some way. On this matter of prohibition something must be done, if it is within the jurisdiction and power of legislation to accomplish it. I think there ought to be a specific provision prohibiting the sale of liquors, distilled, fermented, or otherwise, in any jurisdiction of the United States included within a State where there has been a prohibition of the sale of such liquors by the State, and a specific penalty provided by the United States, and not trust to the possibility of the statute itself being sufficient when referring to penalties prescribed in the statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have very much sympathy with the Senator's purpose, as expressed by him, to protect States against a violation of their local laws through the medium of the General Government itself; but I should think that such legislation should be introduced and go to the proper committee in the ordinary process of legislation rather than attempt to incorporate it upon this criminal code.

I should like, if the Senator will pardon me for a further interruption——

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. To suggest that this section under consideration, while it pertains to the administration of the criminal laws, is merely in the nature of an administrative provision, and I think we should do no harm if we should refer this section to the standing Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate and allow them to consider it and report such separate action as they might deem wise; or, if they report in time, before the final disposition of this code, then the result of their wisdom might be incorporated into this criminal code. It is, however, not very material whether they reach a conclusion in time to incorporate it in the criminal code or not, because it is really an administrative provision.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think it is very important that, if any change shall be made, it shall be made in the enactment of this revised penal code. We know how difficult it is to get legislation through Congress, unless it is some matter in which there is a general interest, or unless it is something connected with the operation of the Government. A very slight obstruction can defeat any legislation. I am perfectly willing, if the Senators so desire, that there shall be a reference of this section to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report either that section as it stands or such amendments as they may see fit to suggest or recommend. Something ought to be done about it.

Mr. HEYBURN (in his seat). Pass it over.

Mr. BACON. It is an important matter and it should be determined whether this statute is sufficient legislation, or whether additional legislation is required in order to make valid the legislation of States as to subjects-matter not covered by the general legislation of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator prefers——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not interrupt the Senator if he desires to go on.

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire with pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was simply going to inquire of the Senator if I am correct in the assumption that this very subject is now before the Committee on the Judiciary in another form?

Mr. BACON. No; I think not. The matter which is now before the Judiciary Committee is one which relates entirely to interstate commerce—the transportation of liquors into one State from another State. That, the Senator from New Hampshire will recognize, is an entirely different subject from this; which is a proposition to protect a State against the violation of the laws of that State within the reserved jurisdiction of the United States in public buildings and grounds and things of that kind. It is absolutely a different principle.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. BACON. And a different provision would be required.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, I quite agree with him that if it is possible to legislate on this subject, we ought to have legislation.

Mr. BACON. Well, it is possible, and it must be possible in the nature of things.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is a crying evil as the matter stands to-day, that in prohibition territory the people are not protected; that to-day liquor is sent into such territory and the intent or the will of the people is really overridden in that way. I hope the Senator will exert his great influence to secure, either in this penal code or in some other way, legislation that will be effective.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I quite agree with the learned Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I do not think that the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], which I overheard—it being sotto voce—that it be passed over would be satisfactory at this time. I do not think it is sufficient to pass it over unless we first determine whether we are going to act on it or whether we are going to ask the Judiciary Committee to examine it before we act. If the latter course is to be adopted, it is important that the subject should be referred at once, in order that the report of the committee may come in and that the Senate may have the benefit of it before we finally enact this penal code.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I intended to move that it be referred to the committee, but I did not want to take the chances of having the question of a quorum raised should it come to a vote.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no; there is no danger of that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course there is a very slight attendance now. If there be no yea-and-nay vote called for, then I will move now that the section be referred to the standing Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, with the request that the committee report as early as possible either this section or some section covering this question.

Mr. BACON. Either the section as it stands or with amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. But if there is going to be any question or a roll call, I will not make that motion.

Mr. KEAN. What do I understand to be the motion of the Senator from Idaho, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho moves that section 286 be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Secretary to kindly report that section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 286. [Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or District, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 269 of this act, shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any law of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or District in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof now in force would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment; and every such State, Territorial, or District law shall, for the purposes of this section, continue in force, notwithstanding any subsequent repeal or amendment thereof by any such State, Territory, or District.]

Mr. KEAN. Does the Senator from Idaho propose to commit that part of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I will inquire of the Senator from New Jersey if he has been present during the statement of the reasons upon which this motion was made? I have not observed his presence in the Chamber, and I do not know whether or not he has been present.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know that I am very clear as to the reasons why the section should be referred.

Mr. HEYBURN. It has been discussed at some length. The reasons have been given which involve the question of the right of Congress to adopt by reference the laws of a State and also the inconvenience of the United States courts being required to enforce the laws of a State oftentimes long after the State has repealed them.

This section provides for the enforcement by the United States courts of the laws of the State in existence at the date of the passage of the act, giving them no right to recognize the subsequent repeal of the act, making it necessary to reenact this section. Should we adopt it, as I have suggested, it would result in the United States courts enforcing laws that are not written in the United States statutes.

It is rather a large question, and it has been under discussion for nearly an hour. In order that the question might be considered by the Judiciary Committee, a standing committee of the Senate, I moved to refer that section to that committee. That would in no way interfere with the progress of the consideration of this code, because the section is really in the nature of an administrative provision. In any event, it is suggested that the standing Committee on the Judiciary will be able to report either this section or some substitute for it before it will become necessary for the Senate to finally act upon it.

Mr. KEAN. A substitute for this section?

Mr. HEYBURN. They can either report this section or a substitute for it, or such amendment to it as it may be deemed wise by them to do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, before that motion is put I merely want to make a suggestion.

The clause of the law which provides that notwithstanding the subsequent repeal or amendment of the State law it shall continue in force under this section has been criticised. I do not see that Congress could do anything else than to make that provision, because, if we permit a State to repeal a law which we have put into operation by this section, then we are permitting the State to legislate, for to repeal a law is to legislate, and we have no authority to do that. While the section may be criticised, Senators have not pointed out any way in which the difficulty can be obviated.

Besides, a repeal may take place without getting rid of the substance of the law. Every time the statutes of a State are revised the old statutes are repealed, although the essential principles of them may be continued in force. Certainly we do not want to provide for any result of that kind, which, by a repeal in the nature of substituting new law of the same character, the old law will be absolutely swept out of existence. So there are two reasons why we are obliged to retain that section. First, because to take it out of the statute would result in conferring upon the States the right to legislate, for when we say that a State may repeal one of the laws which we have adopted it is to authorize it to make law for us in the future. So that, as it seems to me, there is no other way in which this subject can be approached from the practical standpoint.

Mr. BACON. I would ask the Senator, if he will pardon me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I would like to ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, it would be within the competency of Congress to enact a statute that in every State where there is a prohibition against the sale of liquor it shall be unlawful on any of the United States reservations, such as court-houses, post-offices, and so forth, within that State for anyone to sell liquor, and to fix a penalty by the United States for the violation thereof? Does the Senator think we could enact a statute directed to that effect? If we could, I am in favor of the enactment of it, rather than to take the risk of the present section.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps I do not quite catch the point of the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. BACON. I will repeat it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator ask me whether it would be within the power of the State to pass such a law?

Mr. BACON. Oh, no.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not think that was the question.

Mr. BACON. No; I do not think anyone would ask that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I myself did not understand it that way, but others did. I think that it is within the power of Congress to pass a law providing that where it is an offense under a State law to sell liquor within the limits of the State it shall be an offense to sell liquor upon any property within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States in that State.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think that would be competent?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not see any reason why it would not be. Of course, the Senator is asking a pretty large question,

Mr. BACON. The reason I ask it is, if it should be deemed competent, I would desire the committee to report a proper amendment. If the committee does not desire to do so, I would myself offer an amendment to that effect, because it is an absolutely unbearable proposition that in a State where the sale of liquor has been excluded, upon every Government reservation in the State, in every post-office, court-house, or public building of any kind, there should be the privilege and the opportunity to violate the State law and set up the sale of liquors within those reservations. It is incumbent upon Congress, if there is any possibility of the enactment of a law which will effectually prevent that State of affairs, to enact a law of that kind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator, and I think that that very thing is accomplished by the section now under consideration.

Mr. BACON. I would suggest that, unless there may be a law now to that effect, there ought to be some general provision about the sale of liquors within reservations of the United States regardless of whether or not the reservation is within a prohibition State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me read just a line or two of the section to the Senator.

SEC. 286. [Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or District, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 269 of this act—

Those are the places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, like post-office buildings, and so on—

Shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any law of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or District in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof now in force would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment.

Mr. BACON. There is no doubt——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not that cover in precise terms what the Senator desires with reference to this specific offense?

Mr. BACON. It undoubtedly covers it, Mr. President; but the Senator certainly does not lose sight of the fact that, according to the decisions of the courts to which he himself has alluded, if the law, for instance, against the sale of liquors in a State was not in existence at the time of the passage of this statute, but should afterwards be enacted, then this statute would be ineffective to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true, Mr. President, and I do not know any way in which that particular trouble can be obviated.

Mr. BACON. It can be obviated if such a statute as I suggest can be enacted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not think we can go any further in providing for a specific offense than we have gone in the section covering the general subject of all offenses. We have provided here that the laws in force at the time of the passage of this law are adopted as the laws of the United States. If we were to pass a specific law with reference to this particular offense, we could only say that where the law of a State now provides that it shall be illegal to sell liquor within the limits of the State, then any person who sells liquor contrary to the terms of that law shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the law of the United States. I do not see that we could go any further with a specific law with reference to that offense than we have gone in this general section; and I think it covers the precise subject to which the Senator has alluded.

There is just one other suggestion that I was going to make with reference to this matter. The Code Commission, I think, reported 174 new offenses. The committee have adopted only about ten or twelve of them. If the Commission were to undertake to cover the whole field of criminal jurisprudence, those 174 cases would be multiplied many times. They would be undertaking a tremendous task, and they would get a body of law which, in many instances, would be entirely appropriate to some sections of the country, but would be entirely inappropriate to other sections of the country. I think it is very appropriate that, except with reference to the graver offenses which we have defined, where an offense is made punishable by the law of a State the same law and the same punishment should apply when the act defined by the law is committed within a place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, but within the State. The citizen of the State then has his own local laws to look to. He is familiar with all those and familiar with the conditions, and is not driven to go to the laws of the United States as well as the laws of his State with reference to all these minor offenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Idaho kindly restate his motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. The motion was that section 286 as reported by the committee be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate for their consideration and report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not sure that that is an advisable course to pursue. We have at last got to thrash it out in the Senate. Attention has been called to it, and possibly between now and the time when we will take this up for future consideration there may be some better matured ideas upon the subject, at least on the part of some of us. It might be well to withhold that motion at least until we next meet.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us pass over the section, then.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws his motion, and asks that the section be passed over. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho, Mr. President, that it is now after 4 o'clock.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like very much to have the consideration of the bill continued for half an hour. We are now approaching the end of the bill, and I think probably in half an hour we will have disposed of everything except the sections objected to. It will be necessary for me to be absent from the Senate to-morrow and the next day—an unavoidable absence—and, if it is within the rules of the Senate, it is my intention before we adjourn to-day to ask that the unfinished business be laid aside until 2 o'clock on Friday. I am not quite sure that that is within the rules. If it is, I shall ask it. I would like very much, if it will not inconvenience the Senator from New Jersey, to proceed with the consideration of the sections unobjected to of this bill for half an hour.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator need not consider that it will inconvenience the Senator from New Jersey, for it will not inconvenience him at all to go on with the bill; but numerous other Senators have asked me if I would not kindly ask the Senator from Idaho to cease now and let the Senate adjourn. It is not on account of the Senator from New Jersey, who can stay here just as long as can the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. If Senators who are present are tired of the consideration of the bill, that would be one thing. If it is those who are not present, it is another thing.

Mr. President, the presentation of this matter is not a labor of love, and those of us who have given our time to it and are willing to continue to do so, it seems to me might be indulged in the process of self-immolation here going on.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that we have been going too rapidly with this bill, anyway. We have been on it four or five days, and we will probably enact into legislation criminal laws that Congress ought to consume about three months in considering.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will resume the reading.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I think that we had better desist now.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the reading continue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will not lay aside his bill now?

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not consent to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

CHAPTER TWELVE.

PIRACY AND OTHER OFFENSES UPON THE SEAS.

SEC. 287. Whoever, on the high seas, commits the crime of piracy as defined by the law of nations, and is afterwards brought into or found in the United States, shall be imprisoned for life.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I think this is the beginning of a new chapter. It is a good place to stop for the evening, and so I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. KEAN. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. To make a motion of that kind without laying aside the unfinished business is manifestly not fair.

Mr. KEAN. I do not wish to make it without laying aside the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary question.

Mr. LODGE. A motion to adjourn does not displace the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair it does not. It holds its place as the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can a motion to adjourn be made while a Senator holds the floor? I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Secretary was reading, and that no Senator had the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I had the floor, but, of course, the Chair determines whether I have the floor or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the bill before the Senate, which is the unfinished business, would not be displaced by a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not sufficient, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I withhold the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withholds his motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I am to have charge of the unfinished business, there is some consideration that will have to be given to the convenience of the committee that is before the Senate with its business. I can not consent to be displaced by a motion that is not debatable in the midst of the consideration of this business, or else I can not consent to have charge of this business—one or the other.

As I have said, this is not a desirable task nor a labor of love, and Senators will be called upon to have some consideration for the position the committee occupies in presenting this matter. I desire to say that I shall necessarily be absent from the Senate to-morrow and until some time Friday, and I desire, if it is within the rules of the Senate, that when the unfinished business is laid aside it shall be until 2 o'clock on Friday, to be then the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Idaho that the bill might remain the unfinished business, the understanding being that it shall not be considered before the time mentioned by the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. But I think it was held on one occasion that such an understanding would not continue it the unfinished business if other business was taken up. There will be two legislative days between now and Friday, and some measure might be taken up in the regular order or on motion. An order of business taken up on motion would displace the unfinished business.

Mr. BACON. I suggest that the ordinary proceeding is the easy course to pursue—to lay aside the unfinished business temporarily. Then at 2 o'clock on the next day it will come up, and on the request of the Senator from Idaho or some other Senator it can again be temporarily laid aside. It will come up each day at 2 o'clock, and will in that way be disposed of, whereas if the Senator makes the motion he now suggests, and it is agreed to, that the unfinished business be laid aside until a time certain, the Senate may not be in session at that time certain.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that difficulty.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me the better course is the ordinary proceeding. When that is done the bill will come up at 2 o'clock on each successive day, and on each successive day the request can be repeated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to say that it seems to me the method suggested by the Senator from Georgia is the proper one; but if I apprehended correctly what the Senator from Idaho has been saying, it is that he is obliged to be away for two days, and it would be a convenience to him if the Senate could go on with the bill on Friday, and, if an understanding could be had, that we should not adjourn over from Thursday, but would sit on Friday, so as to permit him then to continue the consideration of the bill. It seems to me that that is a courtesy which the Senate is always very willing to accord to any Senator who is compelled to be absent for two days or more.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator From New Jersey?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts ought to ask us to agree at the present time not to adjourn over.

Mr. LODGE. I shall make no such request, but I do not think our adjourning over on Thursday is of the least importance. I do not think it would hurt the Senate if we sat on Friday.

Mr. FRYE. And Saturday, too.

Mr. LODGE. And Saturday, too, if we have business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that my purpose in laying aside the unfinished business until Friday was in order that it might forestall a motion to adjourn over from Thursday to Monday. I feel that this measure is of such importance that we might make some sacrifice to consider it, and I had it in mind that if the unfinished business was temporarily laid aside until Friday we would find the Senate in session on that day.

Mr. BACON. I hope if the Senator takes that course he will try to see to it that Senators attend the session and that not simply a few of us come here Friday, while four-fifths or nine-tenths of the Senate attends to other business.

Mr. HEYBURN. The first thing we know we will have some appropriation bills before us and we will have a dozen and one things that will keep pushing this important measure on ahead of it, and it is very important that this bill should be disposed of. For that reason I am disposed to resort to any proper parliamentary means in order that it may be disposed of and to keep the Senate in session at all proper times for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBBURN. It is, as stated, that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that its consideration be resumed at 2 o'clock on Friday next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent——

Mr. BACON. No; Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the request. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, to be resumed at 2 o'clock on Friday next.

Mr. BACON. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Idaho, but I did not understand him to ask for unanimous consent. I understood him to make a motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I asked unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. I shall object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BACON. I shall not object to a motion, and I should vote for such motion, but I shall object to a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. There are not enough here to determine anything on a motion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 29, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 28, 1908.

The House met at 12 m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3640. An act to amend sections 9 and 14, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment;"

S. 536. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Delaware;

S. 597. An act amending the act of August 3, 1892, clause 361, entitled "An act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in certain States and Territories" (27 Stat. L., p. 347);

S. 762. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of New Jersey;

S. 819. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians;

S. 1729. An act for the relief of Alice M. Stafford, administratrix of the estate of Capt. Stephen R. Stafford;

S. 1824. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Alabama;

S. 2024. An act to amend "An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington," approved March 2, 1891;

S. 2328. An act to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina;

S. 2424. An act providing for a United States exhibit at the International Mining Exposition, Madison Square Garden, New York City; and

S. 3350. An act for the establishment of a fish-cultural station on the St. Johns River, in the State of Florida.

SECOND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report, and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman presents this for printing under the rule?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to call it up.

The SPEAKER. Is it presented now for the first time? Under the rule it would have to be printed and lie over unless it is taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks of yesterday in the RECORD and to print as part of my remarks an address which I delivered at Chicago upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks of yesterday in the RECORD and print as part of his remarks an address which he made in Chicago upon a similar subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following committee assignment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenditures in the Navy Department, Mr. LOWDEN.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14766—the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed in two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be closed in two hours.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to my colleague on the committee that on this side of the House we have a demand for an hour and twenty minutes of time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have a request for only twenty-five minutes, and I think I can accommodate my colleague on the committee by yielding him enough of my hour to accommodate the gentlemen who requested time on his side.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. With that understanding, I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] if his twenty-five minutes includes about fifteen minutes for myself?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have included fifteen minutes for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and ten minutes for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCGAVIN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14766, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, problems of a difficult character confront this Congress. They can not be waived aside by an indifferent Republican majority. Whatever prominence may be given to other questions, none is of more vital interest to the people than an honest statement of the country's finances.

In presenting the pending urgent deficiency bill to the House the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has drawn the most comprehensive indictment yet presented against the present extravagant Administration. His fearless review of the financial condition of the country will challenge the attention of all patriotic men. It should awaken the country to a realization of what it means to have a government of men and not of law.

The Republican party has been in absolute control of the Government during the past eleven years. As a result of its policies and of its conduct of the public service the country finds itself in a situation unparalleled in its history. In a period of unrivalled prosperity it is afflicted with a panic. In a time of profound peace, with no threatened interruption of friendly relations with other nations, the expenditures for the military establishments for the most part exceed, and but for few years fall below, the entire cost of the Government in any year from the close of the civil war till the beginning of the war with Spain in 1898.

Some other time before the Congress adjourns I shall undertake to fasten the responsibility for the recent financial crisis and for the increasing industrial depression upon this Republican Administration—where the responsibility belongs. To-day I shall submit additional proof to sustain the charge of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY] that this Administration is grossly extravagant, and to demonstrate that preparations have been made to squander the public treasure with a lavishness hitherto unknown.

The gentleman from Minnesota stated on Thursday that the Congress is confronted with an enormous deficit. No one will question his declaration that there is no fear that the country can or will meet its obligations. With matchless resources, and with stupendous energy vitalizing every undertaking of our people, the most remarkable of history, there can be no fear that the day will ever dawn whose morning light will disclose them either unable or indisposed to discharge the country's just obligations. Unscrupulous administrators betraying the public trust are able, however, to increase the people's burdens by wantonly extravagant expenditures.

The estimates of money required to conduct the Government during the coming fiscal year, as submitted to Congress, aggregate $996,949,288.96. The estimated revenues for the same period are $878,123,011.20.

This estimate of revenue was made by the Secretary of the Treasury prior to the recent panic. It was based upon the assumption that there would be a perceptible increase of revenue over the receipts for 1907. If the Secretary of the Treasury had reason to express regret that the law compelled him to estimate in advance the revenues, because such estimates, as he said, "are for the most part problematical," it would be difficult to measure his remorse had the estimate been made after, rather than before, the panic had commenced.

Basing his estimate upon surface conditions existing when his report was prepared, the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that, excluding $73,000,000 required for the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, there will be a deficit in the ensuing fiscal year of at least $35,826,277.66; while if provision is made for the sinking fund, as required by law, and for the redemption of national bank notes the deficit will be $118,826,277.66.

It may be urged that there should be eliminated from the calculation $33,000,000 required for the Isthmian Canal, and the $25,000,000 required for the national bank note redemption fund. As an offset to such allowances, however, it must be remembered that no allowance is made for supplemental estimates, which for the present year aggregate $31,500,000, nor for deficiencies, which in the pending bill, excluding canal items, amount to $12,000,000, nor are any new authorizations considered.

Less than three months have elapsed since the Secretary made his estimate. Meanwhile the prospect has not brightened. Instead of a deficit of $118,000,000 the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY] after weeks of careful investigation warns the House that there is every likelihood that the deficit will reach the astounding sum of $150,000,000.

These fears are not groundless. They are predicated upon conditions that are real, not imaginary. To-day there is every indication that at the end of the present fiscal year there will be a deficit of $100,000,000. I am aware that the Secretary of the Treasury has estimated a surplus when this fiscal year ends on June 30 of $42,000,000. I have not overlooked either the valedictory of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on March 4 last to the Fifty-ninth Congress, invoking the commendation of the American people because the appropriations for the present fiscal year had been kept $20,000,000 within the estimated revenues. Yet it is very easy of demonstration that both the Secretary of the Treasury and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] were entirely too optimistic in their estimates of revenue for the present fiscal year.

It is unnecessary to argue that the Administration is never pessimistic in estimating revenues to be derived from the prevailing laws. Nothing is more rare than to have an estimate of an official exceeded by the revenue. This is evidenced by the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] on March 4, 1907. Then he estimated the revenues for the present fiscal year at $850,000,000. In his report to this Congress, made much later, the Secretary of the Treasury places them at $844,025,581.10, or $6,000,000 less than the figures upon which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was able to assert that the appropriations for the present fiscal year were $20,000,000 within the revenues.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY], when unaffected by political considerations, as on Thursday, displays wonderful prescience in predicting the financial condition of the country. On February 21, 1907, he warned the House that in the present fiscal year there would be a deficit of $100,000,000. Three weeks later, on the day Congress adjourned, he made the statement to which I have already alluded. Let me read the concluding paragraph.

He then said:

In conclusion I respectfully repeat that in view of the splendid showing which we are enabled to present to the country at the close of this session, notwithstanding the dark and gloomy prospects of three weeks ago—in view of the reduction made by the committees of this House in the estimates submitted to Congress by the Departments and of the reduction of the amounts finally appropriated in the thirteen appropriation bills below the amounts carried by them when they came back to the House from the Senate, I respectfully submit that the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress is entitled to the commendation and the congratulation of the American people for having thus guarded their interests in the matter of the authorization of the expenditure of public money from the Federal Treasury.

This statement was greeted with prolonged and enthusiastic applause, as appears truthfully in the RECORD. It illustrates the danger of swapping horses in crossing a stream. Had the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] adhered to the "dark and gloomy" predictions indulged in by him three weeks earlier, he would now be able to point out forcibly the accuracy of his forecasts. Instead, Mr. Chairman, of the appropriations for the present fiscal year being $20,000,000 less than the estimated revenues, the fact is that in less than seven months there is now a deficit of $13,000,000, and the prospects are not such as to encourage a belief that it will grow less. Instead of the appropriations for this year being $20,000,000 within the revenues they will more likely be $100,000,000 in excess of the revenues. The American people can take such comfort from the situation as they can find. No doubt they will heap praise and commendation upon the Republican party, to use the language of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], for having so well guarded the people's interests in the matter of the authorization of the expenditure of public money from the Federal Treasury.

For the present fiscal year the grand total of regular and permanent annual appropriations aggregated $943,190,643.28.

To bring the appropriations for the present fiscal year within the revenues, as estimated in March last, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] eliminated $20,000,000, required to redeem national bank notes; $57,000,000, the estimated amount for the sinking-fund requirements for the present fiscal year; $12,439,685.86 deficiencies, and $1,000,000 for miscellaneous items. These various sums, aggregating $90,439,685.36, were deducted from the total appropriations of $919,948,679.63, leaving $829,508,994.27 as the probable necessary expenditures for the present fiscal year.

His estimate of revenues, upon which he based his calculations that the appropriations would be $20,000,000 less than the revenues, was $850,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recent annual report, as I have already stated, estimates the revenue for the present fiscal year at $844,025,581. This is $6,000,000 less than the estimate made last March.

The present urgent deficiency bill carries $24,174,450, so that it is apparent that even now there will be a deficit this year of $10,000,000. If the $12,000,000 carried in this bill for the Isthmian Canal be deducted, it does not aid, since the $57,000,000 sinking-fund requirement for the present fiscal year stands as a charge against credits which do not exist. Moreover, the assumption is indulged that there will be no falling off in the revenues for the present fiscal year, while the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] demonstrated that there would unquestionably be a considerable shrinkage in revenue.

These figures in themselves demonstrate that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations uttered no idle warning when he predicted an enormous deficit for the coming fiscal year. A simple statement of some figures that are frequently placed in confusing array will confirm his prediction.

The total receipts for the fiscal year 1906 amounted to $762,383,904.62; for the year 1907, $846,725,339.62; for the year 1908, $844,025,581.10 is the estimate of the Treasury Department; for the year 1909 the estimate is $878,123,011.30.

The estimates for 1908 and 1909 were made before the panic. Since then there has been a growing deficit.

The daily statement of the United States Treasury on January 13, 1908, showed an available cash balance of $265,243,929.23. The receipts for that day were as follows: Customs, $710,003.60; internal revenue, $1,008,444.38; miscellaneous, $164,943.87; total, $1,883,391.85. The expenditures for the same day, excluding postal deficiency, were $2,020,000. The excess of expenditures over receipts, $136,608.15. For the same day last year, January 13, 1907, the receipts were $1,726,180.72; expenditures, $2,240,000; excess of expenditures over receipts, $513,819.28. Apparently a condition much more favorable this year. Yet for the thirteen days of January, 1908, the total receipts were $19,757,457.11; total expenditures, $21,750,000; excess of expenditures over receipts, $1,992,542.89; while for the same thirteen days in 1907 the receipts were $21,193,706.15, the expenditures $18,140,000, and the surplus—or excess of receipts over expenditures—$3,053,706.15.

From the beginning of the present fiscal year to January 13, 1908, the total receipts were $337,170,086.29, the expenditures $348,465,933.22, the excess of expenditures over receipts, or deficit $11,295,846.93; while for the same period in the last fiscal year the receipts were $349,654,824.09, the expenditures $321,550,209.17, the excess of receipts over expenditures, or the surplus, $28,104,614.92. Last year on January 13 there was a surplus of revenues over expenditures of $28,104,614.92, this year a deficit, or excess of expenditures over revenues, of $11,295,846.93. No advantage has been taken by selecting the statement of January 13. That of the 15th shows for the day this year an excess of expenditures over receipts of $135,597.04, last year $321,375.15. For the fifteen days this month (1908) deficit of $2,594,634.02; for the same period in 1907, surplus of $3,436,011.91. From the beginning of the present fiscal year to January 15, 1908, deficit of $11,897,938.06; for the same period in the fiscal year 1907, a surplus of $28,486,920.68.

The statement for any day would demonstrate equally conclusively that while the surplus was gradually increasing in the last fiscal year (1907), this year it is a deficit that increases with the same precision that last year marked the advancing surplus.

I have here the statement issued by the Treasury yesterday (January 27, 1908), the latest published. It discloses that for the day (January 27, 1908) the receipts were $1,831,453.72; same day in 1907, $1,783,155.88; expenditures, January 27, 1908, $2,660,000; January 27, 1907, $1,590,000; deficit, January 27, 1908, for the day, $828,546.28; for the same day in 1907 a surplus of $193,155.88.

For the twenty-seven days of January, 1908, receipts, $41,278,619.14; expenditures, $48,360,000; excess of expenditures over receipts, $7,081,380.86; for the same period in 1907 the receipts were $45,768,993.48; the expenditures, $41,020,000; the surplus, $4,748,993.48.

From the beginning of the present fiscal year to January 27, 1908, the receipts were $358,691,248.32; the expenditures, $375,075,933.22; the excess of expenditures over receipts, $16,384,684.90; for the same period in the fiscal year 1907 the receipts were $374,230,111.42; the expenditures, $344,430,209.17; the surplus, $29,799,902.25. Last year the surplus steadily increased during January; this year the deficit progressively grows larger.

These statements confirm the prediction of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made February 21, 1907, that there would be a deficit this present fiscal year of about $100,000,000. I am indebted to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] for a calculation made upon the receipts for the three months of the present fiscal year prior to the panic and those of the following three months. From these figures he estimates that by June 30, 1908, the falling off in revenues from last year will be $5,000,000.

In his estimate for the present fiscal year the Secretary of the Treasury includes an increase of $17,000,000 in postal revenues over those of 1907 and an increase of $19,000,000 for next year over those of the present fiscal year, or an increase of $36,000,000 for 1909 over 1907. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] pointed out that his investigations disclosed that in the past the increases in the postal revenues for the two fiscal years immediately following panics are insignificant. Such increases as are included by the Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates for this and for the next fiscal year are unreliable and purely imaginary, so that, in addition to the deficit of $35,826,277.66 apparent to the Secretary of the Treasury, there must be added the $36,000,000 increase in postal receipts assumed by him, which makes his apparent deficit for the next fiscal year more than $70,000,000.

It must be remembered that these figures do not include the $57,000,000 required for the redemption of the public debt through the operation of the sinking fund.

At this time I desire to recall some interesting facts which may not be particularly gratifying to this Administration.

In the annual report of Secretary Shaw for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, is found this statement:

> Excluding the extraordinary expenditure in 1904 on account of the Panama Canal, the last fiscal year [1905] was the first in the past six years in which the expenditures exceeded the revenues.
>
> It is quite impractical to adjust annually the Government revenues to its expenditures, because the increasing growth of the country demands larger disbursements.
> We are fortunate in that our available cash balance October 2, 1905, of $136,823,692.85, largely the accumulation of former years, is deemed adequate to meet the demands upon the Treasury for some time to come, until the present increasing revenues equal the outgo.

His report for 1906 shows a surplus of $25,669,322.61, and, further, that instead of applying $56,000,000 to sinking-fund requirements, he used only $1,651,611.33. In submitting the estimates of appropriations required for the fiscal year 1908, he, for the first time, so far as I have been able to ascertain, declined to submit an estimate of the probable revenues for the same year.

The act creating the Treasury Department, passed in 1789, provides:

> That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of the public credit; to prepare and report estimates of the public revenue and the public expenditure. * * *

It was believed, Mr. Chairman, that under this statute it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to submit to the Congress an estimate of the revenues, so that some information might be at hand to enable Congress to determine whether the revenues would be sufficient to maintain the Government, and if not to enable it to provide adequate revenues for the support of the Government.

To eliminate all doubt on the question the following provision was inserted in the legislative appropriation act approved February 26, 1907:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall each year prepare and submit in his annual report to Congress estimates of the public revenue and the public expenditures for the fiscal year current, and also for the fiscal year next ensuing at the time said report is submitted, together with a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the preceding completed fiscal year.

It is of this law the Secretary of the Treasury complains this year; it is obedience to this law which alone makes possible intelligent action by Congress in providing money for the conduct of the Government.

It is not strange, Mr. Chairman, that Secretary Shaw declined to furnish the information to Congress that had been given under the act of 1789 until his refusal in 1906. The country had been led to believe that the Government's finances were in excellent condition. All agitation for a revision of the existing tariff law had been frowned down. It was not denied that the operations of the Dingley law resulted in great injustice, but it was confidently asserted that it would be unwise to modify a law under which the country enjoyed marvelous prosperity and had revenues more than ample for the maintenance of the Government.

Economically administered the public affairs could have been efficiently conducted upon the revenues. But there was not economy in the administration. On the contrary, every Department of the Government has been distinguished for its lavish and extravagant expenditures.

From 1903 to 1907, inclusive, Congress has appropriated $280,000,000 for sinking-fund requirements, to provide for the reduction of the public debt. There has been used for such purposes only $89,965,197. As a result, the interest-bearing public debt of the country is $190,034,803, more than it would be if the money appropriated for its reduction had been used.

Had this sum been utilized for sinking-fund purposes, instead of being retained in the Treasury, the available cash balance, instead of being $264,974,990.20, would only be $74,940,187. Can there be any doubt that the result would have been either an issue of bonds to maintain the public credit, for which Republicans condemned so severely a Democratic Administration, or else an irresistible demand for such a revision of the tariff as would provide ample revenues for the country's needs?

What a peculiar showing is made when the figures are examined. In 1903, $54,000,000 was appropriated for sinking-fund requirements, $29,511,323 was used; in 1904, $56,000,000 appropriated, $24,000,000 used; 1905, $56,000,000 appropriated, $3,808,411 used; 1906, $56,000,000 appropriated, $1,651,611 used; 1907, $57,000,000 appropriated, $30,590,888 used.

I am aware that the custom existing during the past twenty-five years seems to justify the Treasury Department in exercising a discretion as to the amount of the appropriation to be used for the sinking-fund requirements. The law gives no such discretion. At the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1907, the total interest-bearing debt of the Government was about $894,834,280. Of the bonds represented by this sum $751,608,712.88 were deposited in the United States Treasury to secure national bank note circulation and deposits of public moneys in national banks. One hundred and forty-three million two hundred and twenty-five thousand five hundred and sixty-seven dollars and twelve cents of outstanding interest-bearing bonds were not used. What would have happened had $190,034,803 of the public debt been paid as required and such bonds been not available for the purposes for which they were needed in the recent financial stringency? Unless changes in our financial system are contemplated, some legislation along the lines of the so-called Aldrich bill seems imperative. The action of the Treasury Department under this Administration demonstrates conclusively that the revenues have been inadequate to meet the demands that have been made for money by the Administration.

No one has any confidence in the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury that the revenues for the coming fiscal year (1909) will reach the unprecedented sum of $878,123,011.30. I have already pointed out some reasons to expect a falling off in the revenues from present-day conditions. It is notorious, too, that in years of Presidential campaigns there is a perceptible stagnation in business. Heretofore Republicans have attributed such business depression to the demand by the Democratic party for a revision of the tariff. In this campaign this argument will be unavailing. Not only has the Democratic party, but the President and his pet candidate for the nomination, Secretary Taft, have both declared for a revision of the tariff immediately after the election.

What will the Republican party do? With a deficit of $100,000,000 threatening, how will Republicans advocate tariff revision? In the past they have insisted that lower tariffs mean less revenues. Can they now shift and adopt the Democratic view that a reasonable change in the schedules will bring increased revenues? Or, Mr. Chairman, will the party now in power dare repudiate their President and Secretary Taft in their position on the tariff and flock to the standard of the most consistent standpatter of them all, the Speaker of this House?

If there is to be no tariff revision, then how is the needed revenue to be raised? Not only for this year, but for the coming year, there is promise of a deficit of $100,000,000. No new legislation is included in this estimate. No provision for public buildings, no money to improve rivers and harbors, no new aids to navigation, no increase of pay in the Army, the Navy, or in the civil establishment. Nothing is included for which authority does not exist to-day.

What new forms of taxation, then, will be devised to meet the increasing expenditures? What new burdens are in contemplation for the public from the Republican party?

Mr. Chairman, no new lance enters the lists when I charge, as I do now, that this Administration is insincere, extravagant, and hypocritical. Four years ago I asserted in this House "that there is a growing belief, even among its friends, that the present Administration is dominated by an unsafe man." Nothing has occurred to justify a change of opinion. This has been a lawless Administration. The example of the President has caused a riot of extravagance. Twice Congress has attempted to prevent the unauthorized expenditure of money by the Departments. Two so-called antideficiency acts have been enacted, and still the will of Congress is defied. Those familiar with the struggles of English-speaking peoples for their liberties realize the importance of retaining control of the public purse in the representatives of the people.

All efforts to restrain this Administration have apparently been in vain. Its actions have been such as to draw from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY], one of the most fearless, patriotic, and upright men in this House, the unprecedented declaration that the Administration, this Republican Administration, has requested the representatives of the people to appropriate $101,000,000 more than is required to conduct the Government in an efficient manner. How will the Administration plead to this indictment? What reply will be made to this charge? What answer will be made to such an arraignment? It does not come from the opponents of the Administration; it originates with a friend and supporter of the Administration.

Viewed in the light of history, Mr. Chairman, there is little hope that the Republican party will keep appropriations this year within the revenues. The Democratic minority will protest here in vain against extravagance and lavish expenditure. These protests may be heeded elsewhere. The country will be acquainted with the facts; and no opportunity will be permitted to pass to spread broadcast the information that this Administration—the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt—has prepared to spend, and asks, $101,000,000 more than is required to conduct efficiently the affairs of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to say how often this side of the House has been reminded of Democratic panics. If one had the power to number the sands of the sea or the stars, he might be able to number the times that our Republican friends have reminded us of the issuing of interest-bearing bonds in time of peace. Sometimes we have been reminded of it most forcibly and almost brutally; sometimes the reminder has come from the masters of belles-lettres in eloquent diction, and sometimes in tones of oratory that thrilled the country. I remember now the applause that punctuated the admirable and eloquent speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] during the Fifty-ninth Congress, when he took as his subject an advertisement in a Western town, "All kinds of work for all kinds of people." [Applause on the Democratic side.] And in a manner which I can not imitate he wound up paragraph after paragraph of that eloquent oration with the words, "All kinds of work for all kinds of people." It was in vain, gentlemen, that we called your attention to the fact that the Democratic tariff bill, the Wilson-Gorman bill, did not cause the panic. It is true as an historical fact that the panic occurred in 1893, and the Wilson-Gorman bill became a law in August, 1894. It was in vain that we called your attention to the fact that this period of depression was world-wide. We invited your attention to the fact that the great banking house of the Barings had gone down and shaken England from center to circumference. We reminded you of the depression in Germany, Canada, and in South America. We pointed to a long period of falling prices and crop failures. But, with the ad hoc propter hoc logic for which you are famous, that when two things are contemporary one is cause and the other effect, you continued to attribute to the Wilson-Gorman bill and the Democratic Administration the hard times of 1893. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The following statements are from the Commoner:

November 11, 1890, the reports showed financial distress in New York. The New York Clearing House Association voted its certificates to banks in need of assistance.

The Boston Clearing House Association did the same thing November 17. Barker Bros. & Co., big bankers in Philadelphia, suspended at that time, with liabilities placed at $5,000,000.

November 19, 1890, there was a run on the Citizens' Savings Bank, of New York, and a receiver was appointed for the North River Bank.

November 22, 1890, the United Rolling Stock Company, of Chicago, assigned, with liabilities at $6,851,000.

November 28, 1890, B. K. Jamieson & Co., the Philadelphia bankers, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

December 6, 1890, the Oliver Iron and Steel Mills, of Pittsburg, shut down, discharging 2,000 employees. On the same date the cotton firm of Myer & Co., of New Orleans, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

January 3, 1891, the Scottdale Rolling Mills and Pike Works, and the Charlotte Furnace and Coke Works, in Pennsylvania, closed, throwing 10,000 employees out of work.

January 18, 1891, the American National Bank, at Kansas City, suspended, with liabilities at $2,225,000.

May 8, 1891, the Spring Garden National Bank, at Philadelphia, closed its doors, and the Pennsylvania Safe Deposit and Trust Company made an assignment.

The Homestead strikes and other strikes during 1892, and prior to election day, are well remembered by the people.

The record discloses that the first indications of the so-called "panic" of 1893 were given November 11, 1890, a little more than thirty days after the McKinley tariff bill became a law. From that date the panic raged, and while its effects were felt for several years it reached its worst stage in 1893 and during the early days of 1894, during all of which time the Republican tariff law was in effect.

The late Thomas B. Reed, after his retirement from the Speakership, delivered a speech in New York in which he said: "Another thing which led this whole country into the error of 1892 was the history of the last thirty years. During all that time we have been prosperous." The New York World called this "cold, colossal, and impudent falsification of history," and said that it must have astonished those among his hearers whose memories were more than one year long. Then this New York paper gave Mr. Reed these interesting reminders:

"The panic of 1873, under Republican rule and twelve years of high tariff taxation, was the most disastrous and the period of business depression for five years thereafter was the most severe of any in history. It was officially estimated that 3,000,000 workingmen were out of employment. Bankruptcy was widespread. A tidal wave of ruin and distress swept over the country.

"From 1881 to 1886, under two Republican tariffs, there were labor strikes involving 22,304 establishments and 1,323,203 workmen. Of these strikes 9,439 were for an increase of wages and 4,344 against reductions of wages.

"Mr. Reed's party tinkered the tariff of 1883. In that year there were 9,184 business failures, involving $172,874,000. In 1884 there were 10,986 failures, involving $226,343,000. In the next year, still under the Republican tariff and currency laws, there was a general business depression. More than 1,000,000 men were out of employment.

"In 1890 the McKinley bill was passed, and there were 10,673 failures in that year and 12,394 in the next, with liabilities in each year amounting to nearly $200,000,000. The tariff was raised to nearly 50 per cent, but wages either stood still or declined, while the prices of necessaries advanced. The protected manufacturers kept all their 'bonus' as usual.

Tramps and trusts, the twin products of a monopolists' tariff, were practically unknown in this country until we had endured uninterrupted Republican rule for a dozen of years.

The worst labor troubles, the bloodiest riots, the most destructive strikes, the most brutal lockouts ever known in any country, have occurred here under the high tariffs, bought, made, and paid for by the contributors of the Republican campaign funds.

In spite of all these facts, you continued to insist that the Democratic party was responsible for the panics. With equal boldness and recklessness you claimed all the credit for the marvelous prosperity of the last few years. You iterated and reiterated that there was "all kinds of work for all kinds of people," due to the Republican Administration and Republican policies. It was in vain we pointed out the gradual improvement in business conditions that began in 1894. In the very midst of our great prosperity you claimed all credit. We tried to tell you that Canada, Mexico, Germany, England, South America, and all the countries of the earth were enjoying unexampled prosperity, and as these countries had neither the Republican Administration nor the Dingley law, there must be some other cause operating. Nations with the gold standard and nations with the silver standard were prosperous; nations with free trade and nations with protection moved onward and upward.

But what have we now? In the midst of plenty we are in want. With years of good crops, when Providence has smiled upon the people and the earth has given her increase, with all the factories running on full time, with a scarcity of labor in every department of the country—in the midst of all that there came a panic, not a Democratic panic, because you are in power in all branches of the Government. At the other end of the Avenue you are emphatically in power. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] In both ends of the Capitol you are in power, and you have been in power since 1897, and if the panic is due to bad laws, you are responsible for them. If the panic is due to lack of law, you are likewise responsible. You must answer to the farmers who in a twinkling of an eye found themselves unable to sell their grain, their cotton, their products. You must tell the hundreds of thousands of workingmen who are willing and anxious to work why they are thrown out of employment. You blamed the Democratic party for the soup houses of 1893 and 1894. Shoulder the responsibility for the soup houses of 1907 and 1908—take your own chalice to your own lips.

But how did you handle the panic? That is a critical question. When Grover Cleveland was President of the United States and the revenues were running low, he issued $262,000,000 of bonds to protect the Treasury, and, oh, how often have you declaimed upon the iniquity of increasing the interest-bearing debt in time of peace! Yet what did you do? In the time of panic, with an abundance of money in the Treasury, with millions of dollars of the people's money lying in the banks of the country without interest, you increased the interest-bearing debt. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And you increased the interest-bearing debt, I undertake to say, in violation of the law. I want to call your attention to it. Just here let me remark, few papers that have come under my observation have criticised the action of the Secretary of the Treasury. No man on that side of the aisle in my hearing has criticised it. Is it because the people have not examined the law, or is it because there is abroad in the land a disregard of the law? Is law something to be observed and obeyed when it is convenient, and something to be swept aside when certain people think it best not to obey it? Now, your Secretary of the Treasury advertised for $100,000,000 of 3 per cent certificates. He did not issue that many, but he called for bids for the sale of $100,000,444 of 3 per cent certificates. Under what authority of law? I want to call your attention to the law under which these certificates were sold:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to borrow from time to time, at a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, such sum or sums as, in his judgment, may be necessary to meet public expenditures, and to issue therefor certificates of indebtedness in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $50 or some multiple of that sum; and each certificate so issued shall be payable with the interest accrued thereon, at such time, not exceeding one year, from the date of its issue, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That the amount of such certificates outstanding shall at no time exceed $100,000,000; and the provisions of existing law respecting counterfeiting and other fraudulent practices are hereby extended to the bonds and certificates of indebtednes authorized by this act.

What was in the mind of Congress in the passage of that law? What does it mean in letter and in spirit? It means, gentlemen, and it can have no other meaning, that if the money in the Treasury is not sufficient to meet the appropriation Congress has provided for, the Secretary can temporarily borrow enough money to meet public expenditures. It means that work authorized by Congress shall be promptly paid for. It is intended to protect the credit of the Government. That is what the law means. That is the only honest interpretation of it, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury, with more than $200,000,000 deposited in banks without interest, goes into the market and borrows money, as if the Treasury was in straits. It was not the Treasury that was in trouble. There was no difficulty in the Treasury of the United States. The trouble was elsewhere, and the Secretary of the Treasury violated the letter and the spirit of the law when he issued those certificates. And what did he do it for? What did he do with the money? He proceeded forthwith to deposit it in banks, without interest.

When banks purchased these certificates he collected only 10 per cent and left 90 per cent on deposit. Thus the Government is paying 3 per cent on $100, when it got only $10, which is 30 per cent the Government is paying the banks, although it is lending the banks more than two hundred millions without any interest at all. Suppose a town had large sums deposited in banks without interest and plenty of money in its treasury to meet all its obligations; then suppose the town authorities should go into the market and borrow thousands of dollars, paying interest therefor, and should promptly proceed to deposit the money borrowed on interest in banks without interest; then imagine, if you can, what the voters of the town would do to that administration. What man here would justify such a proceeding in his own town? But the Secretary of the Treasury did not stop with these certificates of indebtedness. He called for bids for $50,000,000 of Panama bonds. Now let me call your attention to the law:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by the act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of $130,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of their issue, and payable thirty days from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold coin at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.
Approved, June 28, 1902.

Notice the provision that when these bonds are sold the proceeds can be used for but one purpose; yet, with no pretense that the money available from the sale of the bonds has been exhausted, with no pretense that the money arising from the sale of this issue of bonds is immediately needed——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you not aware of the fact that the Treasury of the United States received only $35,000,000 from the issue and sale of the bonds for that purpose, and the canal expenditures prior to the time of the issue of the last $50,000,000 up to this time now aggregate over $83,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but it was taken out of the Treasury and it was authorized by law, but the point I am making now, and the point that no gentleman understands better than the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY], is that at the time the Secretary of the Treasury issued these bonds he did not issue them for the purpose of getting money to pay for the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that it was his duty to do so for the reason that the expenditures that had already been made exceeded by almost $50,000,000 the amount of the proceeds from the sale of the previous bonds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law the Secretary is authorized to pay the canal expenditures out of the general fund of the Treasury, or out of the proceeds of bonds if the funds of the Treasury are insufficient over the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman. The discretion vested by that act in the Secretary is as to the time when the bonds shall be issued, but it is mandatory upon him ultimately to issue the bonds and dispose of them, and from the proceeds of the sale pay the expenditures directly or reimburse the Treasury for the expenditures previously made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say that is my understanding of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What did he do with the money? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Did he cover it into the Treasury? Did he pay for the construction——

Mr. TAWNEY. He reimbursed the Treasury for expenditures previously made.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He has not reported it as covered into the Treasury. As a matter of fact, it has not been paid. The banks that bought the bonds gave their checks and immediately those checks were handed back to the banks and the Government was given the credit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is what was done with it. I want to call your attention to another thing. This law says that all the citizens of the United States shall have an equal opportunity to bid for these bonds. I will read the exact language:

Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States equal opportunity to bid therefor.

Did he do it? No. "Upon what meat doth this Cæsar feed that he has become so great?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] There is nothing in the law that would authorize him to reject a higher bid and accept a lower one. Yet he did it. What lawyer in this Congress, sitting as chancellor, would pass the accounts of a guardian who had sold the securities of his ward at 102¼ when bids of 104 or 104½ had been made? In the relation of guardian and ward, the guardian who rejected higher bids and accepted lower bids for his ward's securities would be held personally responsible for the difference.

Public office is a public trust. Public officers should administer public trusts with the scrupulous exactness required by the courts of equity of private trustees, not ordinary good faith, but the highest faith—uberrima fides. I saw by the newspapers that some citizen brought suit in the District of Columbia, and the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury amongst other things was that the plaintiff in that action was financially irresponsible. I want to say that that was an afterthought. It was not the reason that he rejected the bid. He did not inquire whether he was responsible or not. Here is a letter written by the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF LOANS AND CURRENCY,
Washington, December 20, 1907.

Mr. GEORGE J. KLOBERG,
620 West Fourth Street, Wilmington, Del.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 17th instant you are informed that individual bidders whose bids were greater than $10,000 were not allotted any Panama bonds.

Respectfully, yours,
J. H. EDWARDS,
Assistant Secretary.

Here is another letter. It also shows that no bid in excess of $10,000, except bids of national banks, were even considered, but it goes further and explains the reasons actuating the Secretary. Congress, remembering a former sale of bonds, in its wisdom provided that the Secretary in disposing of Panama bonds should give "all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to bid therefor." The Secretary thought he knew more than Congress:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 4, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of December 23, regarding an allotment of the recent issue of Panama bonds, is received. In reply, you are advised that under the reservations made by the Department the allotments were made first to individuals and institutions who were the highest bidders for amounts not exceeding $10,000. The remainder of the $25,000,000 issued was allotted to the highest national bank bidders. This course was followed for the reason that it was not deemed wise during the existing currency stringency to withdraw any considerable amounts from savings banks and other institutions, which would have inevitably been done had the bonds been allotted to individual bidders in large sums. By making allotments to national banks two objects were accomplished, aside from the one above mentioned, and both of these, it is thought, will commend themselves to the public generally. We were in a position to leave on deposit with such banks 90 per cent of the purchase price and yet have it available for the expenses of the Government, as needed, without withdrawing it in a lump sum from the channels of trade. The banks receiving these bonds were also enabled thereby to substitute other bonds as security for these deposits and immediately take out additional circulation on the Panama bonds—a result very desirable at this time.

Very truly, yours,
J. H. EDWARDS.

You are in power. If you are willing for the men that you have in the Departments to override the spirit and the letter of the law the responsibility must rest with you, with the final verdict to be rendered by the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as at present constituted, I think the Committee on Appropriations in the House are to be congratulated on the fact that when it comes to criticising other committees for appropriations the Appropriation Committee can do that on this side of the House, and when it comes to criticising the President of the United States and the Executive Departments the same committee can do so on the other side of the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seems to be wonderfully distressed about the revenues of this country, with the promise of revision of the tariff to come at the assembling of the next Congress, after the Presidential election. He says that the President's pet candidate has declared himself in favor of a revision. I think the gentleman might have said that, if the present tendency of the country shall go on, the pet candidate of the President will be the pet candidate of the Republicans at Chicago, and I want to promise him if that candidate or any other candidate before that convention is elected, and the tariff is revised by the Republican party, it will be revised to meet the conditions of the country, whether it be up or down, and will not interfere with the revenues of the country or with the great industries of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We are not promising to revise the tariff up or down, but we are promising positively that when the tariff is revised, if done by Republicans, it will be on the lines of protection and not on the lines of free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from South Carolina called attention to what is called an historical fact. That was that the panic came in 1893 and that the Wilson-Gorman bill was enacted in 1894. That is true. But he forgets another historical fact—that the election of 1892 put the Democratic party in power in the executive and legislative departments of the Government absolutely, and the people knew if that party was honest it would revise the tariff upon lines of free trade. Every prudent business man in the United States withdrew his expansion of business and got ready for the time that was about to come on the country, and the gentleman knows very well that the panic he refers to of to-day is simply a summer shower as compared with the terrific cyclone which swept over this country and destroyed the property of the United States in 1893 and 1894. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to devote some time to this bill, although it is probable the committee will hardly forgive a man for talking about the measure before the House. The Committee on Appropriations, as represented by its chairman, in the opening speech of the distinguished chairman, refers to the fact that they had no control over the appropriations, or they might keep appropriations within the revenues of the country. In other words, that committee wants to again control all appropriations. He referred to some committees vaguely, and the gentleman from Georgia, with that marvelous honesty that always wants to fight in the open, said: "Will my colleague simply mention those two or three committees, and let us have it all out." So the chairman then mentioned the Military and Naval committees. I want to say that the Military Committee is vindicated in its action of last year in trying to save appropriations in the Army bill by the very bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations for deficiencies. Take, for instance, one item for the "regular supplies." We cut them down in their estimates of last year over a million and a half, hoping it would induce such economy that it would enable the Government to get through with that amount. They came before the Committee on Appropriations with $1,365,000 as a deficiency—a legitimate deficiency, if the Government needs it. I am not criticising the committee for giving it. I am only criticising their statement as to other committees of the House which are doing all in their power to reduce the expenses of the Government; and the very report they make here shows that we went too far in our efforts to save money. I will say, further, that the Committee on Military Affairs has had this theory at all times—that the closer you prune these appropriations the more you will induce the Department to try to live within their means, and that it is better to have a little deficiency on many items than to have a surplus on items, because if you gave a Department of the Government all that it asks it will have no inducement to practice rigid economy.

"Incidental expenses." That is only a very small amount—$200,000.

"Barracks and quarters." Last year the Committee on Military Affairs of the House cut $3,000,000 from that appropriation. The Senate added $1,700,000. That was finally agreed to in conference. That is not legitimate deficiency.

There is no excuse for the Government spending one dollar beyond what Congress appropriates for that. If they recognize a deficiency on barracks and quarters, Congress might in its wisdom say that after spending the sum of $60,000,000 since the Spanish war providing ample accommodation for our troops in the United States, to care for every soldier that is here, we would only allow in the Army appropriation bill enough money for repairs and incidental expenses. On the theory of the Committee on Appropriations, if they would go ahead and contract for a building, pursuing a policy of concentration that Congress might not be in favor of at all, start a new line of appropriations and concentration that in my judgment is not justifiable, all they would have to do would be to go before the Committee on Appropriations and say that they wanted so much money to complete contracts that they had entered into, such contracts as under the law they had not authority to enter into. I say that is not a legitimate deficiency.

Mr. TAWNEY. What deficiency does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Barracks and quarters.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that it is a deficiency for the fiscal year 1906?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And 1907. You have two of them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And what I want to emphasize now, Mr. Chairman, is that in all these appropriations that are not otherwise provided for by law, there should not be any deficiencies permitted. Where it is a question of the support of the Army, if we do not appropriate enough, it is a legitimate deficiency.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you aware that the appropriation was sufficient to meet the obligations incurred at Fort Whipple and at Fort Buford, but that because of the accounts not coming in in time, they could not be paid out of the appropriation, and the appropriation lapsed?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This money is available for two years after the expiration of the fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Auditor holds differently.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that they have no right to make a contract that goes one dollar beyond the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. They did not, as they inform us.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the principal part of the deficiency for barracks and quarters was in consequence of the Cuban intervention.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This does not say so at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.

Mr. KEIFER. General Aleshire says, under the items "Barracks and quarters:"

This is on account of the Cuban intervention and for the erection of a storehouse at Newport News.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was a mistake.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Newport News is not in Cuba.

Mr. KEIFER. But the two together made a deficiency.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On the transportation of the Army and supplies we cut off something like $1,000,000, and they have only put in $1,318,077. That is a legitimate deficiency, if we did not give enough money to carry on that work. But, Mr. Chairman, it is also an answer to the criticism of extravagance on the part of the committee. It shows that in place of extravagant it was decidedly too economical.

Mr. KEIFER. That was on account of the Cuban intervention.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it has hardly cost the Government that much extra.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You start out with what is for Cuba, under the Chief Signal Officer, and say it is on account of Cuban intervention. There can be no estimates furnished for extra expense of the Army on account of intervention in Cuba. There are no estimates submitted for the extra cost of the Army in Cuba. There is only a general provision, that the extra expense of the Army in Cuba shall be paid by the Cuban Government, and when so repaid shall be covered into the Treasury. So that what comes up for Cuba comes out of the regular appropriation, and would very likely be a legitimate appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to read one sentence?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. This is an inquiry by the chairman, addressed to General Aleshire, the Quartermaster-General:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is for the transportation of the Army and its supplies, fiscal year 1908. You estimate a deficiency there of $1,318,077.18.

General ALESHIRE. That is all on account of the occupation of Cuba.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I can not yield any further. I have only fifteen minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I have read all that I wanted to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When I have concluded my remarks I shall be glad to answer any questions.

There are two items for the transportation of the Army and supplies, both of them deficiencies. Now, I am not criticising the Committee on Appropriations for bringing in these items. If it were necessary for the Government to have them to carry on the work provided by law, they did just right in bringing them in; but I am protesting against the bringing in of these items, and in the same breath criticising other committees for being extravagant, when these items are made necessary because of the very economy of the other committees.

Clothing, camp and garrison equipage is another legitimate item. But let me take the Military Academy for a minute:

For one professor of military hygiene (lieutenant-colonel), in addition to pay as major, $500.

Some one or two years ago the authorities at West Point made application to the Committee on Military Affairs for the detail of an officer to act as professor of military hygiene. They had a letter from the Surgeon-General, saying that the Medical Corps could detail a lieutenant-colonel to the Military Academy, who would discharge the duties of professor without any additional cost, and asked us to simply authorize that, and we did authorize the detail of a lieutenant-colonel.

I do not know whether they detailed a lieutenant-colonel or not, but the next year they came and said they had detailed a major and wanted us to pay $500 extra. We called attention to the fact that this was not a professorship created by law; it was for the Medical Department to carry on instruction in this branch of the public service. There are three doctors there all the time, and they are paid the full pay, with quarters and allowances, and they have ample time for the little instruction that is necessary to be given in these lines, and we refused to give them the extra compensation.

We had in mind the marvelous care, the strict scrutiny, the wonderful ability to detect a new item that always has confronted us from the Committee on Appropriations, and we said we will not subject ourselves to the criticism of the Committee on Appropriations; that that committee would undoubtedly raise the point or order, and we will simply make it a detail, with no extra expense to the Government, to give this instruction. But when we refused them the Committee on Appropriations was confronted with the same argument brought before us, and we find it in the deficiency bill that they give this amount to this man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that I have had fifteen minutes. I do not want to borrow any other man's time, but I will take occasion under the five-minute rule to continue these remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may have misunderstood, but he understood that the gentleman had fifteen minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman from Iowa answer a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not, for my time has expired. I will answer the gentleman if I get time under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling attention of the country to a few matters now pending before Congress, I take the floor this morning. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] said the Republican party in due time would revise the tariff, but would do it along protective lines. If we mistake not the rumblings from Iowa and other States, the people of this Republic will revise it sooner than that, and it will be along the lines of old-fashioned Democracy, following the flag of the Democratic nominee, William J. Bryan. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This plea for postponement of the tariff issue is in the nature of an application for continuance in a criminal case—hoping that if the continuance be granted the evil day of punishment may not come. They think that a postponement now may indefinitely prevent tariff reform.

However, these are not the questions I have arisen to present this morning. It is now manifest that the Republican party has no intention of enacting any legislation at this session, except the usual appropriation bills. There will be an effort to pass some sort of currency legislation, but from the deadlock exhibited on this floor between members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, it is apparent that no two of these gentlemen agree upon common ground.

Mr. Chairman, there are certain people whom we choose to call the laboring classes in this country, who have been clamoring at the doors of Congress for years for legislation along certain lines. They have appealed to the Speaker of the House, to the Committee on Rules, the only powers that can open the doors of relief to them; they have besought the Committee on the Judiciary and other committees. So far no relief has been given them, no encouragement has met their just demands. The first question I propose to discuss this morning is that of limiting the power of Federal judges in the issuance of temporary restraining orders and injunctions. For years the laboring people have appealed to Congress, and particularly to the Judiciary Committee, and no committee secrets are disclosed in making the statement. Their demands have been just and reasonable. I discuss them, not because this is class legislation, but because it is just legislation that should be enacted in the interest of the whole people. Session after session bills have been introduced and referred to that committee and other committees, but they have been silently pigeonholed and never reported back to the House.

Is this legislation just? Is it something that is reasonable? Mr. Chairman, it is legislation that should be passed, and I only take the floor this morning because these bills have been introduced from time to time and no attention has been paid to them by this body. The honor was mine to introduce some of the measures, and let me call attention to the provisions contained in one of these bills. One of them reads as follows:

That no writ of injunction or temporary restraining order shall be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to authorize the issuance of any injunction or restraining order not now authorized by law.

Mr. Chairman, substantially that language was the law of the country for seventy-nine years. In the act of 1791 it was provided that notice should be given by Federal judges before the issuance of temporary restraining orders and injunctions. In 1872 Congress passed an act which eliminated the provision requiring notice in injunction proceedings, and since that time Federal judges have held their star-chamber sessions and have issued their temporary restraining orders and injunctions without any sort of notice to the adverse party or his attorney. This manifest defect should be remedied by an act of Congress. Are you ready and are you willing to pass legislation, not only for the benefit of the laboring people who have demanded it, who have been tyrannized over by injunction suits, who felt the sting of unjust government by injunction, but are you ready to give it to the American people? This bill has been introduced by me at several sessions of Congress. There have been other bills introduced. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has introduced one along the same line and still the Speaker and the authorities of this House turn a deaf ear to such legislation. Secretary Taft, seeing the impending storm, has sought cover and now tries to face about and win back those he unjustly oppressed while he was Federal judge. He says in a letter to the Ohio labor organizations:

Second. You ask me what I think of a provision that no restraining order or injunction shall issue except after notice to the defendant and a hearing is had. This was the rule under the Federal statutes for many years, but it was subsequently repealed. In the classes of cases to which you refer I do not see any objection to the reenactment of that Federal statute. Indeed, I have taken occasion to say in public speeches that the power to issue injunctions ex parte has given rise to certain abuses and injustices to the laborers engaged in a peaceful strike. Men leave employment on a strike, counsel for the employer applies to a judge, and presents an affidavit averring fear of threatened violence and making such a case of the ex-parte statement that the judge feels called upon to issue a temporary restraining order. The temporary restraining order is served upon all the strikers; they are not lawyers; their fears are aroused by the process with which they are not acquainted, and, although their purpose may have been entirely lawful, their common determination to carry through the strike is weakened by an order which they have never had an opportunity to question, and which is calculated to discourage their proceeding in their original purpose. To avoid this injustice, I believe, as I have already said, that the Federal statute might well be made what it was originally, requiring notice and a hearing before an injunction issues.

Third. In answer to your third question, it would seem that it is unnecessary to impose any limitation as to the time for a final hearing if before an injunction can issue at all notice and hearing must be given. The third question is relevant and proper only should the power of issuing ex-parte injunctions be retained in the court. In such cases I should think it eminently proper that the statute should require the court issuing an ex-parte injunction to give the person against whom the injunction was issued an opportunity to have a hearing thereof within a very short space of time, not to exceed, I should say, three or four days.

Gentlemen, will you heed the voice of the people? If not, the time will come when they will be accorded this relief. I don't know whether it will be at the hands of a Republican Administration or at the hands of a Democratic Administration, but as certain as we live such legislation will be enacted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why was the law changed?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman from Tennessee asks me why the old law was changed. I have investigated that and find that when the statutes were recodified it was left out, as it has been since stated, inadvertently, and that it was not done intentionally. Yet during all this time the omission has remained upon the statutes, although session after session bills have been introduced and Representatives have come before the Judiciary Committee and have asked for relief.

Mr. Chairman, this is manifestly a just proposition. Let me give you the precise language of the act of March 2, 1793, and show that I have only provided for reenacting the law as it once existed. The Clerk will read the section I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That writs of ne exeat and of injunction may be granted by any judge of the Supreme Court in cases where they might be granted by the Supreme or a circuit court; (a) but no writ of ne exeat shall be granted unless a suit in equity be commenced, and satisfactory proof shall be made to the court or judge granting the same, that the defendant designs quickly to depart from the United States; nor shall a writ of injunction be granted to stay proceedings in any court of a State; nor shall such writ be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In order to parallel the old law with the present law, let the Clerk read section 719 of the Revised Statutes, which shows the provisions requiring notice to have been eliminated.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 719. (Injunctions.) Writs of injunction may be granted by any justice of the Supreme Court in cases where they might be granted by the Supreme Court; and by any judge of a circuit court in cases where they might be granted by such court. But no justice of the Supreme Court shall hear or allow any application for an injunction or restraining order in any cause pending in the circuit to which he is allotted, elsewhere than within such circuit, or at such place outside of the same as the parties may stipulate in writing, except when it can not be heard by the circuit judge of the circuit or the district judge of the district. And an injunction shall not be issued by a district judge, as one of the judges of a circuit court, in any case where a party has had a reasonable time to apply to the circuit court for the writ; nor shall any injunction so issued by a district judge continue longer than to the circuit court next ensuing, unless so ordered by the circuit court.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is no demand for radical legislation, nor are the people who have come before the Judiciary Committee asking for that kind. They would be satisfied with a reenactment of the statute that was law for seventy-nine years, which requires notice by a Federal judge before an injunction issues.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I heard the bill read. I want to ask the gentleman if he would in all cases insist that a notice be first served before an injunction or a restraining order be granted?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I certainly would, because it was the law for seventy-nine years and worked well.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I will submit this proposition which came to me and of which I know, as I was the attorney in it. Suppose a man got title to a piece of land with a mortgage and the building is being removed off the land, which is practically all the value there is in it. Say that the building is being moved on rollers, etc., would you say the man who held the mortgage, practically owning the land, should be required to go to a judge and have him issue notice and serve notice on the party before he could restrain him from moving off that building? Would that be right or fair?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Every State in this Union has laws against stealing horses, cattle, or any other property, and so they have against such an offense as that and covering all kinds of trespasses against property and persons.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There are many other ways in which said damage can be done as well as in that, and I am simply referring to that——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think that for all these difficulties, Mr. Chairman, there is a statute in every State in the Union to cover such offenses, to cover breaches of the peace and riots and all such cases as the gentleman may imagine.

Mr. DRISCOLL. For instance, in the case like that there can be no redress against the people moving that building. The man who really owns it has to protect himself; he must get an injunction to stop the removal before the damage is done.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the sheriff could not overtake a house with a writ of sequestration, he ought to be impeached.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The question is one of ownership.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. He steals without anybody knowing it, and when the house is found it can be recaptured.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. As I understand this bill, it provides notice. In a case of that man I imagine a half-an-hour notice to the man would be sufficient.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It may take some time to get notice and serve it and have a hearing and get an injunction.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am glad these gentleman put these questions, because it brings before the House just the point I desire them to investigate this morning. The bill only provides for previous reasonable notice. Letters from a number of Federal judges have come to me approving this bill, stating that it is reasonable and manifestly just and ought to be passed; that star-chamber proceedings ought to be stopped, and blanket injunctions without notice ought to cease; that traps for trying, convicting, and imprisoning men should no longer be set. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have no attack to make upon the judiciary of this country, either the Federal or State judiciary. But legislation of this kind ought to be given the American people. Before anyone is enjoined in his property rights or his personal rights he ought at least to have notice from Federal tyrants. He ought to have the poor privilege of appearing, filing answer, and being heard. Equity rule 55 provides for and requires notice in all such cases, but for years Federal tyrants have ignored it, flagrantly violated it, and spat upon it. They utterly disregard this plain provision of our equity rule. Let us pass a simple mandatory statute requiring previous reasonable notice before these blanket injunctions, or any other kind, can be issued by a Federal judge. Let us as representatives of the people rob them of the power of imprisoning good and innocent men with their midnight orders and injunctions without hearing the other side, which often has a complete defense. But your Speaker and his Committee on Rules will stand with their eyes shut and as firmly as the walls of this Capitol spurn this just demand for relief. I freely make that prediction. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are not cases reported where parties have been punished for contempt of court who had no real notice of the injunction and who disobeyed it unwittingly?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; there have been such cases, where they have been hauled up before a Federal judge without any notice that they were even charged with an offense, and Federal judges have denied them the poor privilege of trial by jury and placed them in prison and outraged them in many ways. Such judicial outrages ought to cease in this country, regardless of whether the man is a laboring man or any other citizen of the Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENAHAN. Is it not a fact the case cited by the gentleman from New York is an exceptional one—so exceptional that it should be given no consideration in the consideration of this question which you are arguing now?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I quite agree with the gentleman and think the trouble in that case is so small that it should not weigh one instant against the immense amount of benefit that would arise from the enactment of a just statute like this. Of course the injury could be prevented by other civil remedies. There is a remedy for all trespasses against property and personal rights.

I have introduced another bill, one that passed the United States Senate a few years ago by unanimous vote, with the exception of Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. He did not vote against the measure, but refrained from voting for it because he had not investigated it. I refer to the bill which passed that body providing for a trial by jury in cases of indirect contempt, that is, in cases of contempt committed out of the presence of the court. It passed the Senate and came to this body, and session after session, year after year, it has been reintroduced, and those entitled to the relief have been demanding its enactment; and yet it has never found its way out of the Judiciary Committee, and, in my humble judgment, will never do so until the American people command the Speaker of this House and that committee to take favorable action. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Substantially the same bill has been introduced by me at several sessions of Congress. It is now pending before the Judiciary Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member. It divides contempts into two classes, direct contempts and indirect contempts. Where the contempt is committed in the presence of the judge there should be no trial by jury, but the judge himself should have the power to punish summarily such offenses. But where it is committed out of the presence of a court, where the offender does not know whether or not he has committed a contempt, he ought to have the privilege of calling for a jury. Aye, more. We ought to transfer the case from the jurisdiction of the Federal judge that issued the injunction, and let some other judge, without prejudice, try the offense.

Are you ready to enact such legislation as that? Is the Republican Speaker ready to give ear to the demands of the people who have called for this legislation year after year? You will give hearings this session, but no relief. Year after year they have come in a body and have demanded it of the Speaker, and he has frowned upon them. They will come again and make the same demands. I serve notice now that as long as I am in Congress this matter will be pressed until you act. These people would be satisfied with reasonable legislation if we would enact it. True, some of them want to go further. This House should not enact any law that is unreasonable, that is too radical, but we could certainly afford to reenact this old statute, and we agree that an offender in cases where an injunction has been issued without notice shall be entitled to the constitutional right of trial by jury. Jefferson said, and truly, that the Federal judges are "the sappers and miners, gradually undermining the foundation of this Government;" and he never stated a truer proposition.

Mr. Chairman, we have seen year after year one right after another taken from the American people, from the respective States of this Union by the Federal judiciary. When a power is conferred upon them they clamor for more. I know that in some quarters it is not fashionable to talk about States rights. I know that it is not fashionable to denounce tyrannical Federal judges. And I do not criticise the just ones. The Constitution does not commend itself to some gentlemen. But we observe that only a few days ago the Supreme Court again decided a measure which passed through this House was unconstitutional. This reminded us that we still have a Constitution to govern us in our actions, and may go only so far in our legislative actions.

There is another bill introduced by me touching this subject—that no Federal judge shall issue an injunction or restraining order against a State officer or enjoin a State statute. That is to say, that whenever a State like Virginia, or North Carolina, or Alabama, or Missouri, or Pennsylvania, or any other State has enacted a solemn statute, there shall be some presumption in favor of the justice and validity of the statute, and Federal judges shall cease to enjoin them, at least "before final judgment on the merits of the case."

Now, gentlemen, we can afford to go that far. I would even go further, if I had my way. I would provide that where a corporation or an individual attacks the validity of a State statute they should raise that defense in the courts of the State, and if they have a Federal question involved in their litigation the case should go by writ of error from the court of last resort of the State to the Supreme Court of the United States. Let us not deprive any citizen or any corporation in this broad land of the privilege of going into the Federal courts and adjudicating their rights. Let us not take from them any right that is guaranteed by the Constitution and the statutes. Throw wide the doors of the Federal courts and the State courts as well to every citizen and corporation who has a right to assert. But, Mr. Chairman, when a Federal judge can enjoin a solemn act of a State acting within its inherent sovereignty the time has come when we should have legislation preventing such exercise of Federal power. Not many months ago when a railroad corporation in Missouri applied to Judge Smith McPherson to enjoin the 2-cent passenger-fare law of the State of Missouri, he said:

> Gentlemen, the solemn enactments of the State of Missouri are entitled to some consideration, and I will not enjoin the enforcement of this State law, restraining the officers of the sovereign State of Missouri. I will allow it to be in operation for some time and see if it confiscates your property, as you say.

[Loud applause.]

Such is the true doctrine that should actuate a Federal judge. But it finds lodgment in the breasts of very few.

Mr. HACKNEY. I wish to make the suggestion that such order was made against the railroad companies a year ago, and they have made no application to have the injunction issue.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am glad the gentleman has made that statement, and desire to say that I understand the railroads have found remunerative business in carrying passengers at the rate of 2 cents per mile, although they swore in their ex-parte affidavit that their property was being confiscated. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, give the other side a hearing, give them an opportunity, and whenever a State in this Union passes a law, the presumption should be that it is acting within the scope of its constitutional authority and in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.] For the just Federal judge who respects his oath and the Constitution, who recognizes the rights of the States that have not been surrendered to any other power, who believes that the people of the States have retained some powers, I have a wholesome respect. But I fail to see the goodness and patriotism of those who would spit upon State statutes, as has been done in Virginia, North Carolina, and Alabama and other States. [Applause.]

Let me call your attention to another fact. In many instances where corporations have taken their cases to the Supreme Court of the United States, that court has held the State statutes constitutional and they should not have been enjoined.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman will allow me, is not the judge to whom the gentleman refers as denying the issue of some of these oppressive and improvident injunctions the very judge that issued an injunction suspending the laws of the State of Missouri in reference to freight rates?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, he issued some, but since that he has reformed to some extent, because his last order is subsequent to the one alluded to by the gentleman.

Gentlemen, I wish there were time to go into these subjects further, but I am limited this morning. I only took the floor for the purpose of calling the attention of the American people to these things, and to say that those interested in such statutes are appealing for legislation at this session of Congress. They may appeal and appeal again to the majority of the committee of which I am a member, where I and other Democrats as well are ready to report such legislation at any time, but they will find no sympathy there. Such legislation will come. We will all live to see the time when it will be law. There will be jury trial in contempt cases. The American people will have it, and, though justice may be tardy, it is certain. The power of Federal judges will be curbed. The period is rapidly approaching when those whom you choose to call the laboring people will come into their rights. They are asking for nothing more than that which should be accorded to every honest and patriotic American citizen. Let me warn the Republican side of this House that while these people have patiently waited while demanding relief from you, they have done so for the last time. They will do so no longer. The party which I represent is ready to heed their just demands. We are ready to join hands with you and be just. Help us to command the Speaker in his high place, surrounded by his arbitrary Committee on Rules, and these just measures will be speedily presented to the American people as solemn statutory enactments. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McGAVIN].

Mr. McGAVIN. Mr. Chairman, in order to relieve the minds of gentlemen present of any intention on my part to transgress the rules of this House and to speak upon the subject under discussion, I want to say that my remarks have nothing whatever to do with the general deficiency bill in so far as it pertains to the Government; but inasmuch as the House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it may not be amiss to inquire as to what the state of the Union is, and what it is coming to in view of these international unions which are of such frequent occurrence of late between American heiresses and alleged nobility.

In thinking of these numerous weddings I have wondered what the early pioneers who battled with the Indians, challenged the forest, and braved the winter's winds and snows to establish a government where manhood might be recognized for its true value instead of for the accident of birth, would say if from their graves they could look back and see so many of the women of this country sacrificing their souls and honor upon the altar of snobbery and vice. [Applause.]

I am not going to make reference to the manner in which the fortunes of these heiresses have been founded, except that in most cases they were made by men who started out with meager means; suffice it to say, in the language of Shakespeare, that—

> 'Tis a common proof
> That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
> Whereto the climber-upward turns his face;
> But when he once attains the upmost round,
> He then unto the ladder turns his back,
> Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
> By which he did ascend.

[Applause.]

I have no reference to any particular girl [laughter], nor have I prejudice against all of these titled men, for some of them are worthy to grace any home; some of them have added to the honor of their names and to the glory of their country. I have reference only to those who have a monocle on their eyes and an idiotic look upon their faces—those who have neither the disposition to do good nor the ability to do harm. [Laughter.]

A bill has been introduced in the House by one of my colleagues [Mr. SABATH] from Chicago, to levy a tax upon all dowries and settlements made by heiresses and their parents upon their titled husbands. I am not here to advocate the passage of that bill, or to oppose it; but my curiosity was aroused to know to what committee it might have been referred, there being several committees with very appropriate names. The Committee on Foreign Affairs might do, or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce might also be appropriate, but on further thought and examination I found it had been very properly referred to the Ways and Means Committee, inasmuch as it sought to levy a tax, and then I was more curious to know whether the present tariff schedule included dukes, earls, lords, and counts, and finding that these things were nowhere mentioned, I thought that it might be proper for the customs officer to classify them like frogs' legs, as poultry, for it is the general opinion among Americans that they are a species of geese. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, we upon this side of the House, have in recent years referred triumphantly to the fact, that, as between this and other nations, the balance of trade was in our favor, but nowhere in the summary can be found a reference to such trade as these where soiled and frayed nobility is exchanged for a few million American dollars wrung from the lambs of Wall street, with a woman thrown in to boot. [Laughter.]

Every day seems to be bargain day in the great city of New York, whether it be for a yard of ribbon or a pound of flesh; whether it be upon the retail counter of Broadway or the auction block of Fifth avenue. [Applause.]

There was a time when wealthy Americans traveling in Europe were contented with buying costly fabrics, and paintings by "old masters," of whom they knew nothing, but now they want something even more costly but less valuable; so, when the wealthy girls traveling with their parents abroad see some remnant of royalty they enthusiastically exclaim: "Oh, mamma, buy me that!" [Laughter.] An interpreter is secured, the bargain is made and the money produced, and the girl is gone, to soon return a sadder but a wiser one. [Applause.]

I recently saw a play in Chicago, in which the leading man, who acted the rôle of an Indiana lawyer who happened to be abroad looking after some wards and who was subjected to the sneers of the leisure class there, was asked by a gentleman nobleman from another country as to whether they had any leisure class in America, and he very appropriately replied, "No; if anybody gets anything for nothing over in our country they have got to show at least energy enough to steal it." [Laughter.]

While I have engaged in some criticisms of those particular ones who have made a mockery of the most sacred relations of life—I want to say one word in tribute to those true American women who spurned the wiles of earls, lords, and counts for the love of his majesty, an American gentleman. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirteen minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WALLACE].

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, the Washington Post January 16th, relative to its House poll of strength for a Democratic nominee for President, says:

> In the Alabama delegation 5 voted for Bryan, 2 for Johnson, and 1 for Culberson. This proportion between Bryan and Johnson is the same for Arkansas.

I am a member of the Arkansas delegation. But, unlike the ostrich, not content to rest my head under this covert of words. I am for Mr. Bryan, and so stated to the representative of the Post. I understand, sir, as no man is without fault, so no candidate may be without weakness. It is charged that Mr. Bryan talks too much. That, I confess, is a too common fault in men who can talk, and a most grievous one in the eyes of those who can not. [Laughter.] The remedy for this perhaps is to print. "I printed," said Byron, "older children do the same." And into the columns of the Commoner Mr. Bryan crowds pungent paragraph, earnest thought, and heartful love of country and humankind, until its readers feel that upon the ear of the editor-statesman has fallen perhaps the same voice that said to Isaiah: "Take thee a great roll and write in it with a man's pen." [Applause.]

Mr. Bryan is twitted with some political vagaries, and I join no issue there. The whole atmosphere of politics is surcharged with vagaries and some vagrants—a seething maelstrom and contagion of froth and bubbles!

Some say that he has made mistakes. What human has not! What better speaks forth his humanity? Some say he is radical. What reformer is not? Some say he is dogmatic, independent. Who would have him expedient, subservient? If there be one, his hope shall end in disappointment! There is no earthly prince who at noonday can proclaim "It is night," and have Williams Jennings Bryan forthwith declare that he sees the moon and stars! [Applause.]

They say he can not carry this or that State. He may not carry a particular State here and there. But he will do better. He will carry conviction to the people of the States, that he bears within himself the elements that make the world proclaim him a man—worthy the honor and suffrage of all the States. [Applause.]

In 1904 Judge Parker, the eminent judge and Democratic nominee, polled 5,077,000 votes. It is interesting to note, in view of the effort of Republicans and some Democrats to show a wane in the popularity of Mr. Bryan, that in 1900 he polled a greater vote than in 1896 in the very States where his critics say he has no popularity. He polled more votes in 1900 than in 1896 in the following States: Connecticut, by more than 17,000; Delaware, by more than 5,000; Idaho, by about 6,000; Illinois, by about 39,000; Indiana, by about 4,000; Kentucky, by about 18,000; Maine, by about 2,000; Maryland, by about 18,000; Massachusetts, by about 51,000; New Jersey, by about 30,000; New Hampshire, by about 14,000; New York, by about 127,000.

Bryan held his own in his own State, receiving about 1,800 less in 1900 than in 1896; he held his own in North Dakota, Ohio, and his greatest falling off was in the Southern States.

They say he is a twice-defeated candidate and no longer draws. But have we not heard of the "jewel in the toad's head of defeat?" As for me, give me defeat with a man rather than victory with a counterfeit on humanity's baser metal! "He has not lost all who has another throw," and he is not a defeated archer who has another arrow in his quiver! [Applause.]

To our brother Democrats who may cast an eye to the limelight for new and dazzling stars to supplant Mr. Bryan, I commend a prudent observance of the proverb: "Hasty climbers have sudden falls." The flower of the morning-glory is born with the rising and dies with the setting sun!

But—

> "The gathering orange stain
> Upon the edge of yonder western peak
> Reflects the sunsets of a thousand years!"

[Applause.]

And the gentlemen opposite, who have gratuitously intruded their bumpers of discord into the Democratic love feast on this side, I admonish to bear the ills they have and trip it lightly over the span of thin ice whereon they tread! [Laughter and applause.]

To employ a scriptural term, Mr. Bryan is a man who "is become as one of us." A man who has borne himself beyond the promise of his years—doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion! A man who in the American Congress made two speeches that built for him a monument that cast its shadow across the continent. A man who spoke his party platform into being, and himself foremost in his party's choice—first in his party's gift!

A man who twice bore the commission of his party for the Presidency and polled more votes than any other Democrat, living or dead. Indeed, in the minds of thousands there is an abiding conviction that, like Tilden in 1876, he was elected in 1896; but, forsooth, Tilden was deposed under the mockery of law (8 to 7), and Bryan unhorsed by pernicious alternatives to the electorate and purchase of electors, in defiance of law! [Applause.]

A man who entered the arena of the national Democratic convention of 1904, himself not a candidate, but the champion of a platform of principles, and lost; but emerged from the ordeal, in the judgment of that convention, a Titan more powerful than before—stronger and bigger, perhaps, than any other man in it—the matchless triumph of ardent conviction and compelling force! [Applause.]

Stern as Jackson, astute as Clay, and like Clay he would rather be right than President!

With the opportunity afforded in such a station he might verify the assertion of the ancient Plato:

That every state will be relieved of its calamities when by the favor of fortune great power unites with wisdom and justice in one man.

That he would be great in the greatest office of the Government more than half the country has registered its conviction at the polls. But that he is great without it the whole country knows! Hence it is not conclusive that political preferment of any character could exalt him to heights where, as orator and thinker, he has exalted himself! A man, however, in whose hands the people would look on public office as a public trust; in whom labor finds a friend, liberty a champion, civic order an apostle, the country a patriot, and God a servant in His vineyard—one of the noblest types of clean, honest, self-controlling man under the stars! [Applause.]

God gave us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and willing hands;
  Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
  Men who possess opinions and a will—
Men who have honor—men who will not lie;
  Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
  Tall men, sun crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking!

Ending as I began, I declare my firm belief in the wisdom of the Democratic convention to nominate the great commoner by acclamation. If elected the country will have a President and no more than a President. If not elected—in the light of the current half century of our political history—it will, with two honorable exceptions from the East, have been demonstrated that no Democrat from other section than the South has or can be elected, and for the future—if both the man and the place must be considered—we shall turn again to the mother of States and of men not only for candidates, but for Presidents. History repeats itself! [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there seems to be a great diversity of opinion on, and considerable misinformation current about the legislation and political complexion of the country when the various panics occurred, it has struck me that a recital of the facts might not be amiss.

They are as follows:

[The Commoner.]

THE REPUBLICAN PANIC FALLACY EXPLODED.

The great panic which gave "Black Friday" to history occurred during the month of September, 1869, when the Republican party was in power.

The great panic marked by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. occurred in September, 1873. Then the Republican party was in power and eleven months prior to the beginning of that panic that party had been reelected to power.

The panic of 1893 began long prior to that year and, indeed, long prior to the Presidential election of 1892; and it is a fact, although Republican orators and Republican organs try to forget it, that the so-called "panic of 1893" began and played its greatest havoc under that famous tariff law known as the "McKinley bill."

It may be well for Commoner readers to keep readily at hand some of the facts and figures relating to this question.

The Republican party was restored to power March 4, 1889.

The McKinley tariff bill became a law October 6, 1890, and remained in effect until August 27, 1894.

The Wilson tariff law, enacted by a Democratic Congress, went into effect August 27, 1894.

If anyone will take the trouble to examine the Republican campaign text-book for 1904, pages 125, 126, and 127, he will find considerable space devoted to a statement of business disasters from July 18, 1893, until November 13, 1894. The Republican managers expected their readers to remember that the Cleveland Administration was inaugurated March 4, 1893, and that all these disasters occurred under Democratic administration; but they expected their readers to forget that the Republican tariff law was in force up to August 27, 1894, or covering more than twelve months of the sixteen months' period of business disasters, as described by the Republican text-book.

In their references to the panic of 1893 Republican orators and organs habitually overlook the date when the McKinley law ceased and the Wilson law went into effect. But when in their tariff discussions they are required to face the fact that that panic played its greatest havoc during the life of the Republican tariff law, they answer that it was the anticipation of tariff legislation growing out of Democratic victory in 1892 which brought on these business disasters. For this reason in their list of business disasters they place July 18, 1893, as marking the beginning of that great panic.

Let it be remembered that the McKinley tariff bill became a law October 6, 1890, and that the first indications of the so-called "panic of 1893–94" were given November 11, 1890, a little more than thirty days after the McKinley tariff bill became a law. From that date the panic raged.

The Harrison Administration was inaugurated March 4, 1889, and when the first indications of this panic were given President Harrison had not exhausted the half of the term for which he was elected. It is admitted by everyone familiar with the facts that President Harrison's Administration had plates prepared for the bonds and Mr. Harrison's Secretary of the Treasury made a visit to New York for the purpose of negotiating the bond deal. He was wired by Mr. Harrison to return to Washington. Mr. Harrison said that he had concluded not to have any bond issues under his Administration, and in order to avoid the stigma the Harrison Administration warded off the bond issue and unloaded it on the incoming Cleveland Administration.

It may not be out of place to point out that when the Democratic Administration surrendered the reins of government March 4, 1889, there was in the Federal Treasury the largest surplus in history. When the Republican party went out of power March 4, 1893, there was a large deficit, and the incoming Administration was finally persuaded to make the bond issues which its Republican predecessor had at one time thought to be necessary, but had skillfully avoided.

The claim that the business disasters of the period referred to were due to the popular fear of tariff legislation to be enacted by Democrats is, as has been said, met by the fact that this panic began two years prior to the Presidential election day of 1892. The following will serve as reminders on this point:

November 11, 1890, the reports showed financial distress in New York. The New York Clearing-House Association voted its certificates to banks in need of assistance.

The Boston Clearing-House Association did the same thing November 17. Barker Bros. & Co., big bankers in Philadelphia, suspended at that time, with liabilities placed at $5,000,000.

November 19, 1890, there was a run on the Citizens' Savings Bank of New York, and a receiver was appointed for the North River Bank.

November 22, 1890, the United Rolling Stock Company, of Chicago, assigned, with liabilities at $6,851,000.

November 28, 1890, B. K. Jamieson & Co., the Philadelphia bankers, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

December 6, 1890, the Oliver Iron and Steel Mills, of Pittsburg, shut down, discharging 2,000 employees. On the same date the cotton firm of Myer & Co., of New Orleans, failed, with liabilities at $2,000,000.

January 3, 1891, the Scottdale Rolling Mills and Pike Works and the Charlotte Furnace and Coke Works, in Pennsylvania, closed, throwing 10,000 employees out of work.

January 18, 1891, the American National Bank, at Kansas City, suspended, with liabilities at $2,250,000.

May 8, 1891, the Spring Garden National Bank, at Philadelphia, closed its doors, and the Pennsylvania Safe Deposit and Trust Company made an assignment.

The Homestead strike and other strikes during 1892, and prior to election day, are well remembered by the people.

The record discloses that the first indications of the so-called panic of 1893 were given November 11, 1890, a little more than thirty days after the McKinley tariff bill became a law. From that date the panic raged, and, while its effects were felt for several years, it reached its worst stage in 1893 and during the early days of 1894, during all of which time the Republican tariff law was in effect.

The late Thomas B. Reed, after his retirement from the Speakership, delivered a speech in New York in which he said: "Another thing which led this whole country into the error of 1892 was the history of the last thirty years. During all that time we have been prosperous." The New York World called this "cold, colossal, and impudent falsification of history," and said that it must have astonished those among his hearers whose memories were more than one year long. Then this New York paper gave Mr. Reed these interesting reminders:

"The panic of 1873, under Republican rule and twelve years of high tariff taxation, was the most disastrous and the period of business depression for five years thereafter was the most severe of any in history. It was officially estimated that 3,000,000 workingmen were out of employment. Bankruptcy was widespread. A tidal wave of ruin and distress swept over the country.

"From 1881 to 1886, under two Republican tariffs, there were labor strikes involving 22,304 establishments and 1,323,203 workmen. Of these strikes 9,439 were for an increase of wages and 4,344 against reductions of wages.

"Mr. Reed's party tinkered the tariff in 1883. In that year there were 9,184 business failures, involving $172,874,000. In 1884 there were 10,968 failures, involving $226,343,000. In the next year, still under the Republican tariff and currency laws, there was a general business depression. More than 1,000,000 men were out of employment.

"In 1890 the McKinley bill was passed, and there were 10,673 failures in that year and 12,394 the next, with liabilities in each year amounting to nearly $200,000,000. The tariff was raised to nearly 50 per cent, but wages either stood still or declined, while the prices of necessaries advanced. The protected manufacturers kept all their 'bonus' as usual.

"Tramps and trusts, the twin products of a monopolists' tariff, were practically unknown in this country until we had endured uninterrupted Republican rule for a dozen years.

"The worst labor troubles, the bloodiest riots, the most destructive strikes, the most brutal lockouts ever known in any country have occurred here under the high tariffs, bought, made, and paid for by the contributors of the Republican campaign funds."

It might be well for Commoner readers to clip this statement from the Commoner and have it in convenient form to show to their Republican neighbors who may have been deceived by the Grosvenor claims.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in debate the other day the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] interrupted me and asked me if I could submit a statement showing the difference between the revenues collected for the several months of this fiscal year, as compared with the corresponding months of last fiscal year. I have that statement here, and it as follows:

Comparative statement of receipts from customs by months for fiscal years 1907 and 1908.

	1907.	1908.
July	$26,176,744.74	$28,836,448.57
August	29,012,059.26	29,716,410.66
September	27,280,010.83	25,604,198.07
October	27,775,890.95	28,158,649.75
November	25,921,327.39	21,909,007.39
December	28,640,631.02	21,744,672.69
To January 25	23,517,725.27	18,284,367.17
Customs receipts	188,324,389.46	174,253,754.30
Loss		14,070,635.16

Comparative statement of receipts from internal revenue by months for fiscal years 1907 and 1908.

	1907.	1908.
July	$22,102,238.65	$22,840,304.52
August	21,853,180.22	22,231,443.05
September	21,491,481.14	22,294,318.36
October	24,730,121.25	25,005,856.09
November	24,830,342.30	19,213,611.37
December	23,583,889.11	20,815,224.44
To January 25	16,119,107.59	15,933,031.02
Internal revenue receipts	154,740,340.26	148,333,820.85
Loss		6,406,519.41

I desire to call attention to this: The foregoing statement shows that the difference in the amount collected—the customs receipts—for the month of this fiscal year, as compared with the month of the last fiscal year, is $14,070,635.16, while the difference between the amount of internal revenue collected for the corresponding months of this year and last year is $6,406,519.41. That is the amount less than was collected last year. Notwithstanding this decrease, I observe from the statement that the two first months of this fiscal year the customs receipts were larger than for the corresponding months of the last fiscal year, and the amount less collected during the next two succeeding months was very little less—that is, it was very little less than was collected during the corresponding months of the previous year—while the internal-revenue receipts show that for the first four months of this fiscal year the revenues in each of these months exceeded the amount collected during the corresponding months of the last fiscal year. Let us take the amount of internal revenue collected up until the 25th day of January, 1908, and compare it with the internal revenue collected for the same number of days in the month of January, 1907, and the gratifying fact appears that our internal revenue is rapidly equaling what it was last year, and let us hope this favorable condition will continue from now on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman say that we are now getting back to the amount collected last year?

Mr. TAWNEY. I say this statement shows that the customs receipts and internal revenues are increasing very rapidly over the receipts for the months of December, November, and October of the current fiscal year, and the first two months of this current fiscal year the revenues by customs are in excess of the revenues for the corresponding two months of last year—that is, July and August—while the first four months of the current year the revenues are in excess each month of the revenues collected during the corresponding months of last year, and that the internal revenue collected thus far in the month of January, or up to January 25, is $1,186,000 less than the amount collected for the corresponding days in the month of January of the last fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate having expired, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of bookkeeping and warrants: For one bookkeeper, at the rate of $2,000; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; two clerks of class 2; in all, $3,416.69, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order, or to reserve it, and I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that this provides for one bookkeeper, one clerk of class 4, one clerk of class 3, and two clerks of class 2 in the division of warrants. By Executive order the Secretary of the Treasury has put in force a new system of accounting, first recommended by the Keep Commission—a new system of accounting which, in the judgment of the Secretary and the Chief Executive, is deemed an improved system—and in consequence of this change the clerks in the division of warrants and bookkeeping have been increased in the neighborhood of 33 per cent. If that work is to be done, and it is absolutely necessary that it should be, it can only be done by the additional force which is here asked for and which the committee recommends.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, it appears that a Commission which at one time was appointed by the President in his discretion and authorized by Congress, known as the "Keep Commission"——

Mr. TAWNEY. Permit me to correct the gentleman. It was never authorized by Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I thought it was subsequently authorized, but at any rate the Keep Commission recommend amongst other things that in the Treasury Department they should adopt the double-entry system of bookkeeping. On the 1st of July of the present fiscal year the Secretary of the Treasury put in operation the recommendation of the Keep Commission and started a system of double-entry bookkeeping in his Department. I believe that in adopting the double-entry system of bookkeeping he was within the law and acting wisely, but what passes my comprehension is that the Secretary of the Treasury should adopt a double-entry system of bookkeeping and at the same time retain the old system of single entry. Why it is necessary to have two methods of bookkeeping I do not understand.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. VREELAND. The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury was that they are obliged to carry forward both systems of bookeeping until the clerical force becomes accustomed to the new system and through that time the increased expense would run from 6 to 33 per cent, but at the expiration of that time, when the old system will be discarded and the new system taken entirely, there will be no increase of expense and very much increase in the benefit to the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand the gentleman from New York. I read what the Secretary of the Treasury said about it and I am going to withdraw the point of order, but I still insist I do not believe that it was necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain two sets of books and two sets of bookkeepers. No business concern in this country does it. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I renew the point of order. I would like an explanation of what benefit it is to have the difference in the bookkeeping and what is the additional cost. The Government has proceeded fairly well along those lines for a good many years. Now, why, in attempting a policy of economy, does it always cost a great deal more than the previous extravagant policy did?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question. We all recollect with what a flourish of trumpets the Keep Commission came into existence, the extent to which red tape in the Departments was to be entirely eliminated in the administration of the affairs of the Government, and what great economies would result in consequence of the investigation and the adoption of the system of accounting which the Keep Commission proceeded to recommend. Now, I am not prepared, Mr. Chairman, to say that there will be a permanent increase in the cost of the administration of the Departments as the result of this new system of accounting, nor am I prepared to say that when the system is fully adopted and obtains in its entirety that there will be any less expense, but the system has been adopted within the power of the executive head of the Treasury Department, and he claims to the committee that when fully adopted there will be some economies and that he can not get along in this particular division, and one or two others, with any less clerks than we have allowed here. A great many more additional clerks were asked for than have been allowed; increases in salary also asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury, but when he came before the committee to be heard upon the proposition, he voluntarily withdrew his recommendation of increases of salaries and also of increases in the matter of clerks; but in this particular division and in the next division, covered by the next item of this bill, he insisted so very strongly, in view of the congested condition in these divisions, that the committee felt warranted in continuing or giving the number of clerks required for the remainder of this fiscal year, at which time they will then have adopted substantially and completely this new system of bookkeeping and the system of auxiliary accounts which accompanies that system of bookkeeping and assembling signed checks, so that the Auditor can look on the face of it and see at all times the exact condition of the account.

It is claimed that greater safety, greater security to the Government, will result in consequence of this, as well as economy in administration.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, does not he believe that if it were desired to introduce a new form of bookkeeping in any of the Departments of the Government at greater expense, that the Department, probably having the authority to do so in one way, should wait until it laid the matter before the committee and received the additional help and additional appropriation in the first place? In other words, is it to be left with some officer in the Executive Department to constantly coerce Congress in doing that which Congress has no chance to consider on its merits at all, and always at an increased expense to the Government? This matter could have been laid before the gentleman's committee for the next legislative appropriation bill and received consideration in the proper manner, and then the committee could have disposed of the matter upon its merits. Now, the gentleman is not even informed of the merits of the proposition by the Department, but is told, as the House is told, that we have adopted a new method requiring more money, and they demand the money.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. VREELAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings: To pay the account of the Manhattan Electrical Supply Company for electrical supplies furnished to the United States temporary post-office, Chicago, Ill., fiscal year 1905, $238.67.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will concede that the point of order is well taken on this paragraph, as would be the point of order on the succeeding one, and after the next paragraph is read I propose to offer an amendment to cover both.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the account of the Brush Electric Illuminating Company for electric current furnished to three electric lamps in the United States Barge Office, New York, N. Y., from October 8 to November 9, 1904, $46.56.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, at this point I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 16, insert:

"Fuel, light, and water for public buildings: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fuel, light, and water in public buildings on account of the fiscal year 1905, $285.23."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collecting the revenue from customs: To defray the expense of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, $800,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if any steps have been taken, or if any steps are contemplated to be taken, with reference to a reform in the method of collecting the customs revenues in accordance with the suggestions submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury—I am not sure by the present Secretary of the Treasury, but by his predecessor, and by other Secretaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] refers to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury preceding the present occupant of that office.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. TAWNEY. He recommended a very radical change in the law in respect to customs districts and the abolition of a great many of the revenue customs districts, and also the repeal of the permanent appropriation of $5,500,000 for the collection of the revenue. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] must have a very clear and distinct recollection of the result of the effort that was made in the last Congress by the Committee on Ways and Means to carry out the first recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the failure on the part of the friends of the measure to secure its passage. The Committee on Appropriations has repeatedly carried a provision in the urgent deficiency apropriation bill for the repeal of that permanent appropriation, to the end that the Secretary of the Treasury will have to submit to Congress a detailed estimate for all employees and for all the service in connection with the collection of the customs revenues, and it has uniformly gone out on a point of order on the ground that it is a change of existing law. I hope, speaking for myself, and as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that at this session of Congress we will be able to report a bill from the committee repealing, or proposing to repeal, the permanent appropriation of $5,500,000, together with several other appropriations, the repeal of which has repeatedly been recommended by the administrative officers of the Government. That is the only promise I can make to the gentleman. I hope we will succeed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think he ought not to weary of welldoing or in his efforts toward welldoing. The Government, manifesting itself through the action of Congress, I regret to say, has steadily refused to enact a reform of a businesslike character, which has been recommended repeatedly, I am told, and which commends itself to the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and, I believe, must commend itself to the judgment of every Member of this House who will study the question and consider it without any reference to the particular alignment of the present districts.

We are engaged in the collection of revenues upon a preposterous and antiquated plan, where it costs in some instances $2,000 and more to collect one. It is not good business; it is not common sense; and I sincerely hope that the reform that the gentleman proposes to inaugurate will be successful.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would state to the gentleman from Texas I have introduced a bill for the repeal of the permanent appropriation for the collection of customs, together with the repeal of a number of permanent appropriations. The bill is now before the Committee on Appropriations, and in order that the committee may consider the proposition intelligently, I offered and secured the passage of a resolution a few days ago calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to what permanent appropriations there are, and whether or not he would recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You can count on one vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to the matter the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Minnesota were discussing. I have been trying to find out honestly where this money goes. I think if the gentleman can devise some system by which lump-sum appropriations shall be abolished, he will go a long way toward correcting a great many abuses in the administration of the Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation to enable the President of the United States in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague, or black death, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, including pay and allowances of all officers and employees of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service assigned to duty in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same; and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $200,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move to strike out the last word. I notice that that lump sum placed at the disposition of the President for the purpose of preventing epidemics—and I know of no other way, perhaps, in which the appropriation can be made except in a lump sum—has been largely used by the Government in San Francisco. It seems that the National Government has practically taken over the matter in the city of San Francisco and allowed the State and the municipality, practically, to escape any burden. I would like to know—I suppose the Committee on Appropriations approve of that by giving the deficiency asked for.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from South

Carolina, that in allowing the deficiency the gentleman is not entirely justified in saying that the committee approved of the plan in which this epidemic fund has been expended in San Francisco. If the gentleman will read the hearings——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have done so.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). He will see that members of the committee took occasion not to censure but at least to criticise the administrative officer for entering into a contract of this kind whereby the fund has been depleted without even asking the State of California to provide any part of the necessary expense.

Now, the city of San Franciso is not able, although it is absolutely necessary that this work should be done——

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that the State of California authorized San Francisco to issue a lot of bonds in connection with this matter, and that the contribution of California was made in that way?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the State of California contributed to the extent of permitting the city of San Francisco to raise the money to pay for this expense.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the situation in the city of San Francisco respecting this matter is this: Some years ago there was an alleged outbreak of bubonic plague, and then there came a conflict of authority between the State quarantine officers and the Federal quarantine officers. A committee of prominent citizens came to the city of Washington and consulted with the Federal authorities at that time, and finally it was agreed that the spreading of this plague might work such great hardship throughout our country that the Federal Government should take it in hand, and, with the support of the State and city officers, stamp it out. Within the past year another outbreak of this plague was announced. The city of San Francisco expended every dollar of the money that it had in its fund for sanitary purposes in assisting in cleaning up the city and checking the spread of the dreaded disease. The State of California has a session of the State legislature only once every two years; and while it is true that a special session of the legislature was called in December last, to consider matters of urgent necessity, there was nothing in the governor's call for an extra session respecting the fund for this specific purpose, because probably the attention of the governor of the State had not been called to the matter. Every dollar that the city of San Francisco can raise by bonds or by taxation will be required for many years to come to build schoolhouses, thirty-four of which were burned down in the conflagration of April, 1906. Practically our entire sewer system will have to be rebuilt; we will have to build a new city hall; we will have to build a new hospital and a new jail; we will have to build fire-engine houses; we will have to build a new hall of justice; we will have to repair practically all of our streets in the burnt district.

Every dollar of money that we can raise by taxation will be used for these purposes.

Now, so far as the plague is concerned, that has ceased to be a matter in which the city of San Francisco alone is interested. It is a matter in which all the people of the United States are interested. We face the Orient. The vessels coming from China and Japan bring the vermin, the rats that carry this plague. It is of vital interest that the Government of the United States should take this matter in hand, in order that the infection should not be spread beyond the confines of California. For my part I think that the Federal Government is amply justified in taking the burden of this work upon its shoulders. The city of San Francisco will do its share so far as it can do it, but I do not think that this Congress should question the acts of the Federal authorities, who have undertaken, in the interest not alone of San Francisco but of all the great cities of the American Union, to stamp out this dread disease.

Mr. VREELAND. The committee felt obliged to put in this appropriation for the defense of the people of the United States, if for no other reason. What we would like light upon, if the gentleman can furnish it, is why the State of California has not furnished assistance in this most necessary enterprise. We admit that the city of San Fransisco has done well.

Mr. KAHN. As I stated a moment ago, the legislature of California meets but once in two years. The last regular session was at the beginning of 1907. This plague came long subsequent to the adjournment of the legislature. The members of that legislature could not foresee the outbreak of this disease, and hence made no appropriation for meeting such a condition.

Mr. VREELAND. They have just had a special session of the legislature.

Mr. KAHN. True; but the attention of the governor of the State probably was not called to the fact. I am satisfied that if his attention had been called to it he would have included it in his message calling the legislature together, and the State would have done its share. But even on that question I want to say this: The city of San Francisco pays one-third of the taxes of the State, and in the final analysis practically the entire burden of the State's work would fall back again on the city of San Fransicso.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I should like to ask the gentleman if the governor did not know of this plague at the time when he called the special session of the legislature last December?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know what the governor knew. I can not speak for him, but I am satisfied that if his attention had been called to this matter he would undoubtedly have added it to his call. There were a number of matters that were exceedingly urgent and pressing. The extra session was called together on very short notice. The demand came from almost every quarter of the State, and immediate action upon two or three questions of great importance was necessary.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The governor knew that the bubonic plague existed there at that time, did he not?

Mr. KAHN. I dare say he did.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I only want to emphasize this fact, that he should have taken notice of it and that the State of California ought to do it now.

Mr. KAHN. The State of California can make no appropriation until the next session of the legisalture, which will be in 1909.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Can not the governor call them together to-morrow?

Mr. KAHN. I submit that it is an expensive proposition to call the legislature together, especially in a State of such large extent as California, where some of the members have to travel six or seven hundred miles to get to the capital. But there is no question that the State of California will do its share, and will make an appropriation when the legislature meets in regular session.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, this appropriation was for the purpose of suppressing the outbreak of the bubonic plague, which plague is spread solely through the aid of rats and fleas?

Mr. KAHN. True.

Mr. MANN. The rats may come from any ship that touches at the seaport of San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And while San Francisco may be the place where the bubonic plague has broken out, it would be as sensible to say that a little town through which a railroad ran should pay the entire cost of preventing an epidemic as it is to make San Francisco pay the whole cost, simply because the rats and fleas come through San Francisco into the country.

Mr. KAHN. Very true. That is the stand that the Federal officers have taken. It is not San Francisco that is involved, but it is a question that affects the welfare of every community in the entire United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to protest against an appropriation to exterminate the enemy in common. The Philippine Islands that are under our flag always have been and always will be full of this plague, with which we are being daily inoculated, more or less, and especially on the western shores of the United States. The two gentlemen who have just addressed the committee in effect admit that we are more liable to this plague now than heretofore, and that practically it has become so awful, such an evil, such a horrible menace, that the Government of the United States must now take charge of it and protect all of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman's argument, but I want to say that the plague does not come from the Philippine Islands; it comes from China.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It was in the Philippine Islands when I was there. I did not bring it back, thank God; I was afraid of the Dingley tariff. [Laughter.] I want to say that I paid duty on every dutiable thing I brought in, too. But I want to remind this distinguished body that when I returned from the Philippine Islands, I said that that country would soon inoculate with contagion the western shores of this country, and would later be a menace to the peace and welfare and happiness of the entire United States by reason of the awful diseases this plague brings on, that have depopulated portions of that country from time to time. I then warned the American Congress and the American people against permanently holding to the Philippine Islands for that reason, and because, sooner or later, I knew that the expense upon the American Treasury would be increased exactly as we have it here to-day.

It is strange, Mr. Chairman, that the distinguished governor of the State of California, who was a leading Member of this House a few years ago, should have been so engrossed in something else as to have forgotten that the plague had previously visited the city of San Francisco and had previously scourged that beautiful city and glorious people and was liable to return.

We are paying to-day, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has just told me, $30,000 a month in San Francisco to exterminate this disease and prevent it from coming from the yellow countries. The gentleman from Minnesota, who has just undertaken to enlighten me as to this disease, is not as familiar, perhaps, with the history of the yellow countries as I am. I went there and investigated and came back here and gave my fellow-countrymen the full benefit of my investigation and information, and this is one of the many things against which I undertook to warn the people.

I regret exceedingly that the beautiful city of San Francisco should be scourged with anything. I regret that not only her shores are exposed to the yellow countries and to the diseases brought here by mice, rats, and rags, but also to those diseases brought back by our own people from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman think that the national quarantine law would justify the United States Government in fighting this plague?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not think the American people would put up with Congress being dilatory in the least. I am for my country first, whether it is against an armed enemy or a diseased rat, or any kind of a plague. I would be ashamed of myself, Mr. Chairman, if for a moment I should say anything against allowing all the money that California or the city of San Francisco or the United States wants to fight such a plague when it is at the gateway of my country or infests the people of the United States. I am for the appropriation if it is a million dollars or five hundred thousand dollars a day and necessary, but California should do her duty and not impose on the General Government.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am calling the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that one of my prophecies is admitted here in this great body, that sooner or later the American people and the American health would be scourged by disease brought here because of our communication from time to time with the Philippine Islands and other brown countries where the plague and other horrible contagions come from. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DENBY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14779. An act to transfer the county of Alachua, in the State of Florida, from the southern to the northern judicial district of that State, and to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Florida at the city of Gainesville, in said district;

H. R. 9210. An act to authorize the court of county commissioners of Geneva County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River at or near the Jones Old Ferry, in Geneva County, Ala.; and

H. R. 12439. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across White River, Arkansas.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reimbursement of Philippine Islands tariff fund: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit to the credit of the Philippine Islands tariff fund the sum collected by the collector of customs at San Francisco, Cal., July 12, 1906, as tonnage tax from the British steamship Sutherland, entered at the port of San Francisco from Manila, via Iloilo, Philippine Islands, and erroneously covered into the General Treasury of the United States $136.62.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the paragraph, on the face of it, is self-explanatory. There was a tonnage tax collected, and by the collector erroneously turned into the Treasury of the United States instead of turning it into the Philippine Island tariff fund, which is a special fund in the Treasury of the United States, a fund in which all of the tariff dues collected and tonnage taxes collected are deposited by the collectors to the credit of this special fund. Now, the collector erroneously turned in one hundred and sixty-odd dollars to the general fund of the Treasury instead of turning it into the special fund and crediting it to the Philippine tariff fund. This is simply to correct a little bookkeeping.

Mr. MANN. Do they require an act of Congress to correct a mistake in bookkeeping?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. When money is once put into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the general fund, whether erroneously or otherwise, it can not be put out of that fund except by direct authority of Congress.
